T O

His Grace JAMES

Duke of CHANDOS.

My LORD,

BEG Leave to recommend to Your Grace's Protection the History of HERNAN CORTEZ, the Fortunate Conqueror of the Mexican Empire.

THE Discovery and Conquest of that new World have enrich'd England with no small Share of the Wealth of it; which makes it a Point of Gratitude in Behalf of my Country to publish the Actions of this Hero, and renders him still more worthy of Your Grace's Patronage.

My

DEDICATION.

My Lord,

I SHALL decline entring on the Subject of those Virtues and distinguishing Qualities, which have shewn themselves so eminently in Your Grace, and engag'd the Love and Esteem of all good Men. May You long live the Ornament of Your Country: And permit me the Honour of acknowledging publickly the many Obligations I have to Your Grace, and assuring You that I am, with an inviolable Respect,

My LORD,

Your Grace's Most Obedient, and

Most Faithful Humble Servant,

THOMAS TOWNSEND.

P R E F A C E.

THE Conquest of MEXICO is one of the greatest Subjects in all History: It leads us through Variety of important Transactions to the Overthrow of a vast Empire, atchiev'd by a Handful of Men under the Conduct of HERNAN CORTEZ, who added this inestimable Jewel to the Crown of Spain in the Time of CHARLES V.

WHOEVER will consider the Difficulties he overcame, and the Battles he fought and won against an incredible Superiority of Numbers, must own him little inferior to the most celebrated Heroes of Antiquity.

HIS History has been written by several Authors, and particularly by Francisco Lopez de Gomara, Antonio de Herrera, and Bernal Diaz del Castillo; who either took Things too much upon Trust, or were prejudic'd against him: But at length the Learned SOLIS, by erecting this Trophy to his Honour, discharged the Debt due from the Spanish Nation to the Memory of so illustrious a Conqueror.

P R E F A C E.

THE great Actions of CORTEZ, and the elegant Pen of SOLIS, were the chief Motives that induc'd me to make him English: To which may be added, that Sir Paul Rycaut having translated the Conquest of Peru from Garcillasso de la Vega, Inca, my present Work compleats the Discovery and Conquest of the American Continent.

AND notwithstanding what has been written by some concerning the Simplicity and Nakedness of the Indians, it is plain from the History of SOLIS, and contributes not a little to the Glory of CORTEZ, that he engag'd numerous Armies, which wanted neither Courage, Conduct, nor offensive Weapons: And though some Things in the ensuing History may appear fabulous, it is nevertheless certain, that CORTEZ really perform'd more than Flattery has invented of others.

THE Translation was the Employment of my leisure Hours in Country Quarters, in the Kingdom of Ireland: How well I have succeeded, is humbly submitted to the Judgment of the Reader.

- Chap. II. Motezuma returns his Answer, with a Present of great Value, but refuses to grant the Leave they desired to go to Mexico. ————— 75
- Chap. III. Gives an Account how ill the Positiveness of Cortez was received at Mexico; who Motezuma was; the Greatness of his Empire, and the Condition his Monarchy was in at the Arrival of the Spaniards. ————— 79
- Chap. IV. An Account of the several Prodigies and Signs that were seen in Mexico before the Arrival of Cortez, from which the Indians apprehended that the Ruin of their Empire drew near. ————— 83
- Chap. V. Francisco de Montejo returns, having discovered the Town of Quiabiflan. Motezuma's Ambassadors arrive, and depart dissatisfied. Some Muttering happens among the Soldiers, who incline to mutiny, and Hernan Cortez makes use of Artifice to appease them. ————— 87
- Chap. VI. The Return to Cuba is given out. The Soldiers, prepared by Cortez, exclaim against it; the Cazique of Zempoala sues for his Friendship; and, in fine, they make a Settlement. ————— 91

Chap.

The CONTENTS.

- Chap. VII. Hernan Cortez (in the first Council which was held at Vera Cruz) renounces the Title of Captain-General, which he held from Diego Velasquez, and the Town and People elect him a-new. — 95
- Chap. VIII. The Spaniards march, and the Fleet sails for Quiabisslan; they enter Zempoala in their way, where the Cazique makes them welcome, and they receive fresh Accounts of the Tyrannies of Motezuma. — 99
- Chap. IX. The Spaniards pursue their March from Zempoala to Quiabisslan; an Account of what passed at their Entrance into that Town, where they find fresh Relations of the Uneasiness of those Provinces, and they take six of Motezuma's Officers. — 103
- Chap. X. The Caziques of the Mountains come to submit, and offer their Service to Cortez. The Spaniards build the Town of Vera Cruz, and put it in a Posture of Defence. New Ambassadors arrive there from Motezuma. — 108
- Chap. XI. The Zempoalans, by Deceit, engage Hernan Cortez to take up Arms against the People of Zimpazingo, their Enemies; he makes them Friends, and reduces that Country. — 112
- Chap. XII. The Spaniards return to Zempoala, where they overthrow the Idols, with some Resistance of the Indians; and the principal of their Temples is converted into a Church of our Lady. — 116
- Chap. XIII. The Army returns to Vera Cruz; Commissaries are dispatched to the King, with an Account of what had been done. Another Sedition is quelled, with the Punishment of some Mutineers; and Hernan Cortez executes his Resolution of sinking his Ships. — 120
- Chap. XIV. Cortez having made a Disposition for the March, was informed that Ships were seen upon the Coast. He departs for Vera Cruz, and takes seven Soldiers belonging to the Fleet, commanded by Francisco de Garray; they begin their March, and having with much Difficulty passed the Mountains, the Army enters the Province of Zocothlan. — 125
- Chap. XV. The Cazique of Zocothlan visits Cortez a second time, and highly extols the Greatness of Motezuma. Cortez resolves to march by the way of Tlascala, of which Province, and the Nature of its Government, some Information is got at Xacazingo. — 129
- Chap. XVI. Cortez's four Envoys set out for Tlascala. An Account of the Habit and the Manner how Embassies were delivered in that Country, and of the Debates of that Republick about the Point of receiving the Spaniards in a peaceable manner. — 133
- Chap. XVII. The Spaniards resolve to draw near to Tlascala, looking on the Detention of their Messengers as a bad Sign. They engage with a Body of five thousand Indians that lay in Ambush for them, and afterwards with the whole Power of the Republick. — 138
- Chap. XVIII. The Tlascalans recruit their Army; they engage a second time with greater Force, and are overthrown and broke by the Valour of the Spaniards, and by another new Accident, which puts them in disorder. — 144
- Chap. XIX. Hernan Cortez stills the new Disturbance among his Men; the People of Tlascala take the Spaniards for Enchanters; they consult their Magicians, and by their Advice attack them by Night in their Quarters. — 149
- Chap. XX. The Senate commands the General to suspend the War; he refuses to obey, but, on the contrary, designs to give a fresh Assault upon the Spanish Quarters. His Spies are discovered and punished. A Treaty of Peace begins to be set on foot. — 154
- Chap. XXI. New Ambassadors come from Motezuma to the Spanish Quarters, to obstruct the Peace with Tlascala; the Senate perseveres in desiring it, and Xicotencal takes upon himself the Negotiation. — 159

- Chap. XVIII. Motezuma continues his Entertainments and Presents to the Spaniards. Letters brought from Vera Cruz with an Account of the Battle wherein Juan de Esculante lost his Life: upon which Cortez resolves to secure the Person of Motezuma. — 98
- Chap. XIX. The Imprisonment of Motezuma: An Account after what manner it was effected, and how received amongst his Vassals. — 105
- Chap. XX. Motezuma's Behaviour under his Confinement, both to his own People and the Spaniards. Qualpopoca is brought Prisoner, and condemned to Death by Cortez, who causes Motezuma to be put in Fetters, during the Execution of the Sentence. — 112

B O O K I V.

- Chap. I. Motezuma is permitted to be seen in publick, going out to the Temples and Recreations. Cortez takes some necessary Precautions. The Spaniards are in doubt, at this time, whether they should overthrow the Idols of Mexico, or wait for a properer Occasion. — 119
- Chap. II. A Conspiracy which was forming against the Spaniards, by the King of Tezeuco, is discovered; and Motezuma, partly by his own Vigilance, and partly by the Advice of Cortez, quells it, and chastises the Author. — 126
- Chap. III. Motezuma resolves to dispatch Cortez by answering his Embassy. He assembles his Nobles, and gives Orders, That the King of Spain should be acknowledged for Successor of that Empire, determining to obey him, and to pay him Tribute, as Descendant from their first Conqueror. — 133
- Chap. IV. The Gold and Jewels designed for the Present is delivered into the Possession of Cortez. Motezuma resolutely tells him, that he must think of his Departure, which he endeavours to delay. Advice brought of the Arrival of a Squadron of Spanish Ships upon the Coast. — 139
- Chap. V. An Account of the Preparations made by Diego Velasquez for the Destruction of Hernan Cortez: The Army and Fleet which he sent against him, under the Command of Pamphilo de Narvaez: His Arrival upon the Coast of New Spain, and his fruitless Attempt to reduce the Spaniards of Vera Cruz. — 145
- Chap. VI. The Precautions of Hernan Cortez to avoid a Rupture. He makes Overtures of Peace, which are rejected by Narvaez, who, on the contrary, proclaimed War, and seizes the Person of the Licentiate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon. — 151
- Chap. VII. Motezuma continues his good Offices toward Cortez and his Spaniards. The Alteration which some attribute to the Practices of Narvaez looked upon as fictitious and improbable. Cortez resolves to depart, and executes that Resolution, leaving a Part of his Force in Mexico. — 159

The CONTENTS.

March as far as Moralequita; from whence he again makes Overtures of Peace, and, with new Provocation, declares War.	166
Chap. IX. Hernan Cortez continues his March till within a League of Zempoala. Pamphilo de Narvaez takes the Field with his Troops. Is obliged to retire by the Badness of the Weather. Cortez resolves to attack him in his Quarters.	173
Chap. X. Hernan Cortez arrives at Zempoala, where he finds Opposition. He obtains the Victory, and takes Narvaez Prisoner, whose Troops he obliges to serve under his Banner.	179
Chap. XI. Cortez reduces the Cavalry of Narvaez, which kept the Field. He receives Information that the Mexicans had taken up Arms against the Spaniards which he had left with Motezuma. He marches with his Army to Mexico, and enters that City without Opposition.	186
Chap. XII. The Motives which induced the Mexicans to take up Arms. Diego de Ordaz, with some Companies of Men, is sent to make Discoveries in the City. Falls into an Ambush the Revolters had laid for him, upon which Cortez determines to prosecute the War.	193
Chap. XIII. The Mexicans assault the Spanish Quarters, and are repulsed. Cortez makes two Sallies, in which, tho' the Enemy were both times defeated, and put to flight with great Slaughter, yet he distrusts his being able to reduce them.	200
Chap. XIV. Motezuma exhorts Cortez to retire from Mexico, which he offers to do as soon as the Seditious have laid down their Arms. They return to attempt another Assault. Motezuma speaks to them from the Wall, and is wounded, losing all Hopes of reducing them.	206
Chap. XV. Motezuma dies of his Wounds, obstinately refusing to receive Baptism. Cortez sends his Body to the Mexicans, who celebrate his Obsequies. His personal Qualities and Character.	212
Chap. XVI. The Mexicans return to besiege the Spanish Quarters. Cortez makes a Sally. Gains a Temple where the Enemy was lodged. Defeats and puts them to flight. Does considerable Damage to the City, with a Design to terrify them, in order to make his Retreat.	219
Chap. XVII. The Mexicans propose Peace, but with the View of distressing the Spaniards by want of Provisions. Their Disingenuity is discovered. Cortez holds a Consultation with his Officers, and it is resolved to leave Mexico that Night.	226
Chap. XVIII. The Spaniards march out privately. At the Entrance of the Causey are discovered by the Indians, who attack them with their whole Power both by Land and Water; they get clear at last with great Difficulty, and considerable Loss, and reach the Town of Tacuba.	232
Chap. XIX. Cortez marches the Road towards Tlascala. Some Troops from the circumjacent Towns follow the Army at a distance, till being joined by the Mexicans, who likewise pursue him, they attack his Rear, and oblige him to take Refuge in a Temple.	238
Chap. XX. The Spaniards continue their Retreat. They undergo great Fatigue and Difficulties. The Army reaches the Valley of Orumba, where, in a pitched Battle, the whole Power of Mexico is utterly defeated.	245

BOOK V.

- Chap. I. The Army marches into the Province of Tlascala, and quarters in Gualipar; the Caciques and Senators come to visit Cortez: they celebrate his Entry into their City with publick Rejoicings; and Cortez, by fresh Experience, finds he had secured the Affections of those People. pag. 1
- Chap. II. An Account comes that the Province of Tepeaca had taken up Arms. Ambassadors arrive at Tlascala from Mexico. A Conspiracy, carried on by Xicotencal the Younger, against the Spaniards, is discover'd. 7
- Chap. III. Cortez marches into the Province of Tepeaca, where he defeats the Rebels; who, supported by the Mexicans, offered Battel to the Spaniards: He, afterwards, takes their City, which he fortifies, and calls by the Name of Segura de la Frontera. 12
- Chap. IV. Hernan Cortez sends several Captains to reduce some rebellious Towns, and goes himself to Guacachula against an Army of Mexicans drawn together to defend their Frontiers. 18
- Chap. V. Hernan Cortez makes some Preparations for the Enterprize of Mexico; he accidentally receives a Reinforcement of Spaniards, returns to Tlascala, and finds Magiscatzin dead. 25
- Chap. VI. A fresh Succour of Spanish Soldiers arrive in the Army. The Men who came with Narbaez are importunate for their Discharge and Return to Cuba. Hernan Cortez draws up a second Relation of his Expedition, and dispatches new Envoy's to the Emperor Charles V. 31
- Chap. VII. The Envoy's of Hernan Cortez arrive in Spain, and pass on to Medellin, where they continue till the Troubles of the Kingdom are over; after which, they go to the Court, and prevail to have the Bishop of Burgos set aside from being a Judge in the Cause of Cortez. 38
- Chap. VIII. Concludes the Affairs of the precedent Chapter. 44
- Chap. IX. Cortez receives a new Succour of Men and Ammunition: he musters his Spanish Troops; and the Confederates do the like, after his Example. He publishes certain military Orders, and begins his March, with a Design to possess himself of Tezeuco. 50
- Chap. X. The Army marches, and overcomes some Difficulties. The King of Tezeuco sends an artful Embassy to Cortez; he returns an Answer of the same kind, and thereby gains Admittance into the City without resistance. 56
- Chap. XI. The Army being quartered in Tezeuco, the Nobles come and offer to serve in it. Cortez restores the Kingdom to the lawful Successor, leaving the Tyrant without any hopes to re-establish himself. 62
- Chap. XII. The new King of Tezeuco is baptized with publick Solemnity; Cortez marches with part of the Army to possess himself of the City of Iztapalapa, where he stands in need of all his Circumspection, to prevent falling into an Ambush prepared by the Mexicans. 66
- Chap. XIII. The Provinces of Chalco and Otumba apply to Cortez for Relief against the Mexicans. He orders Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Francisco de Lugo upon that Expedition; they overthrow the Enemy, and take some Prisoners of Rank, by whose means Cortez makes Propositions of Peace to the Mexican Emperor. 71

The CONTENTS.

- Chap. XIV. Gonzalo de Sandoval conducts the Brigantines to Tezeuco: Whilst they are finishing, Hernan Cortez marches out with part of his Army to view the Borders of the Lake. ——— 76
- Chap. XV. Hernan Cortez marches to Yalcotan, where he meets with Resistance; he overcomes that Difficulty, and goes forward with his Army to Tacuba, and having vanquished the Mexicans in several Engagements makes his Retreat. ——— 81
- Chap. XVI. A fresh Succour of Spaniards arrives at Tezeuco. Sandoval marches to the Relief of Chalco; defeats the Mexicans twice in the open Field, and takes the Town of Guastepeque and Capistlan. — 87
- Chap. XVII. Cortez marches out of Tezeuco, to view the Lake on the side of Suchimilco: He has two dangerous Engagements with the Enemy, who had fortified themselves upon the Mountains of Guastepeque. — 93
- Chap. XVIII. The Army passes on to Quatlavaca, where the Mexicans receive a new Defeat; from thence to Suchimilco, where Cortez surmounts a great Difficulty, and is in danger of being lost. — 99
- Chap. XIX. A Conspiracy of some Spaniards against the Life of Cortez, is punished by the Death of a Spanish Soldier; and a Sedition of some Tlascalans, by the Death of Xicotencal. ——— 106
- Chap. XX. The Brigantines are launched, and the Army divided into three Parts for attacking the City at the same time, by the Causeways of Tacuba, Iztapalapa, and Cuyoacan. Hernan Cortez advances upon the Lake, and defeats a great Fleet of Mexican Canoes. ——— 112
- Chap. XXI. Cortez goes to view the three Bodies of his Troops; as they were posted on the different Causeways of Cuyoacan, Iztapalapa, and Tacuba, and finds that in each Place they had occasion for the Assistance of the Brigantines; whereupon he leaves four with Gonzalo de Sandoval, four with Pedro de Alvarado, and retires himself to Cuyoacan with the other five. ——— 117
- Chap. XXII. The Mexicans make use of various Stratagems for their Defence: they lay an Ambuscade of Canoes for the Brigantines. Hernan Cortez receives a considerable Defeat, and is forced to retire to Cuyoacan. ——— 123
- Chap. XXIII. The Mexicans celebrate their Victory with the Sacrifice of the Spanish Prisoners. Guatimozin terrifies the Confederates, and occasions many of them to forsake Cortez; but they return in greater Numbers, and it is resolved to make Lodgments within the City. ——— 130
- Chap. XXIV. Cortez carries on his three Attacks at once. The whole Army joins in the great Square of Mexico, called Tlateluco. Guatimozin retires to the farthest Part of the City. The Mexicans make several Efforts, and use divers Stratagems, to divert the Spaniards. ——— 136
- Chap. XXV. The Mexicans attempt to make their Retreat by the Lake. They engage the Brigantines with their Canoes, in order to facilitate Guatimozin's Escape. He is made Prisoner, and the City surrenders. ——— 145

Of the CONQUEST of MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN.

B O O K I.

C H A P. I.

Shewing the NECESSITY of Dividing the History of the Indies into different Parts, in order to a thorough understanding of it.

IT was my Intention, for some Time, to continue the General History of the WEST INDIES, left by Antonio de Herrera in the Year 1554, until I discover'd the Difficulties of the Undertaking. And while I persisted in this bold Resolution, I read, and carefully observ'd what both before and since his Decades has been written by our own Countrymen, or by Strangers, relating to those Discoveries and Conquests. But as the Regions of that new World are at so great a Distance from our Hemisphere, I have found that the foreign Writers have been very daring, and no less malicious, to invent whatsoever they have pleas'd to the Disadvantage of the Spaniards; spending whole Volumes in blaming the Mistakes of some particular Men, in order to darken the Glory of the worthy Actions perform'd by All in common. I have likewise observ'd, that there is but little Uniformity and Agreement in the Accounts given by our own Writers: A remarkable Instance of that ordinary Danger to which Truth is expos'd, which seldom fails to be disfigur'd when transmitted from afar; as indeed every Thing, in proportion as it is carried from its Source, loses of its native Purity.
B common.

THE Obligation I was under to disprove the former, and the Desire I had of reconciling the latter, detain'd me in the Search of Papers, and in Expectation of some Memoirs which might serve as a Foundation to my Work: An inglorious Kind of Labour! our Time and our Application being spent in Obscurity, and unseen by the World: A Labour, however, from which no Historian can be exempted; because he is to draw the Truth, which is the very Soul of History, pure and unmix'd, out of that confus'd Medley of various Accounts; the Care of an Author in this Respect resembling that of an Architect, who, before he begins to build, first heaps together his Materials, and then from that formless Mass takes every Thing necessary to the Execution of his Design, drawing out by little and little from the Dust and Confusion of the Storehouse the Beauties and Proportions of the Building.

BUT to come to my Subject: I have found that a General History takes in so great a Number of Facts independent upon each other, that I have thought it little less than impossible to bring them together without a Confusion; a Difficulty which, perhaps, arises from my want of Capacity. The History of the Indies has for its Ground-work three great Actions, such as may vie with the greatest that former Ages have seen: The Exploits of Christopher Columbus, in his admirable Navigation and first Enterprizes upon the new World; the Courage and Conduct of Hernan Cortez in the Conquest of New Spain, the Bounds of whose vast Regions are still unknown; and the Labours of Francisco Pizarro, and of his Successors, who subdued that most extensive Empire of South America, a Theatre of various Tragedies and surprizing Novelties. These are three Subjects for great Histories, which, abounding with illustrious Achievements and wonderful Accidents of both Kinds of Fortune, furnish Matter worthy of our Annals, an agreeable Entertainment for the Memory, and useful Examples to improve our Minds, and excite our Courage. But as in the General History of the Indies these three Subjects are blended together, and each of them in particular with an infinite Number of less considerable Enterprizes, it is no easy Matter to reduce them to the Connexion of one single Narration, nor to observe the due Order of Time, without interrupting, and even frequently rending to Pieces the principal Story, by a Detail of Circumstances.

THE Masters of the Art, who have given the Name of Transition to that Step which an Historian makes from one Event to another, require so just a Proportion to be observ'd between the Parts and the Whole, that the Body of the History may neither appear monstrous by a Superfluity of Members, nor yet fail to have all those which are necessary to preserve a beautiful Variety; but according to their Precepts, the joining of these Parts must be so nicely wrought, that no Eye may discern the Texture; nor must the Things be so different as to be unlike, or to make a Confusion. And this delicate Skill of interweaving Events in such a Manner, that they may not appear Digressions one from another, is the greatest Difficulty to an Historian: For if when we are to resume a Matter we had dropp'd, we recapitulate many of its Circumstances, we inevitably fall into the Inconvenience of Repetition and Prolixity; and if, on the other hand, we neglect to do it, our Style becomes unconnected and obscure: Vices which must equally be avoided, because they ruin the best Performances of an Author.

THIS Danger, common to all General Histories, is greater and almost unavoidable in ours: For the West Indies consist of two Empires of very great Extent; each of which contains an Infinity of Provinces, and innumerable Islands. Within these Limits reign'd divers petty Kings, or Caciques; some of them Dependent, and Tributaries to the two Emperors of Mexico and Peru; the rest were secur'd in their Freedom by the Distance of their Situation. All these Provinces, or little Kingdoms, were so many several Conquests by different Conquerors: Many Enterprizes were form'd at one and the same Time, all under Brave Captains, tho' little known. They conducted some Troops of Soldiers, and these Troops were stiled Armies; not without some Shew of Reason, if we consider the Greatness of their Designs, and their Success in the Execution. Many Battles were fought in these Expeditions with some Princes, and in some Provinces and Places, the Names of which were difficult not only to be remember'd, but even to be pronounc'd: So that hence arose frequent and obscure Transitions in the History of those Exploits, and the Abundance of the Matter perplex'd the Narration; the Historian being oblig'd frequently to leave and to resume the less important Adventures, and the Reader to turn back to those he had left in Suspence, or to keep his Memory upon a continual Stretch.

I DO not deny, but that Antonio de Herrera, a very careful Writer, (whom I not only shall endeavour to follow, but would gladly imitate,) has labour'd with great Success in the difficult Task he had chosen of a General History: Nevertheless, I do not find all that Perspicuity in his Decades which was necessary to make them be understood: Nor was it possible for him to be more clear, having such a Multitude of Adventures to relate, and being oblig'd so often to quit and to resume them as the Order and Succession of Times requir'd.

C H A P. II.

The Reasons which engag'd the Author to write a separate History of North America, or NEW SPAIN.

MY Design is to recover the History of New Spain out of this Labyrinth and Obscurity, in order to write it separately, placing it, as well as I am able, in a such Light, that the Mind of the Reader may be struck by the Wonderful without being shock'd, and instructed by the Useful without being disgusted. I have chosen this Subject out of the Three which I have mention'd, because the Exploits of Christopher Columbus, and the first Conquests of the Islands, and of Darien, not being intermix'd with any other Adventures, are happily and distinctly related in the first and second Decades of Antonio de Herrera. And as for the History of Peru, it is to be met with a-part in two Tomes, written by the Inga, Garcilaso, an Author so exact in his Accounts, and so smooth and agreeable in his Style, (according to the Elegance of his Time,) that I should blame any Man as too ambitious, who should attempt to excell him, and give great Encômiums to whosoever could imitate him in prosecuting that History. But New Spain either is without a History which deserves that Name, or stands in need of a Defence against the Reproaches of Posterity.

Francisco Lopez de Gomara is the first who has treated this Subject, but without any Care or Exactness. He relates what he has been told, and affirms it with an excessive Credulity, depending as much upon what he has heard, as if he had been an Eye-

Eye-witness of the Facts; and finding no Difficulty in Things improbable, nor Repugnance in Things impossible.

THIS Author is followed by Antonio de Herrera, both in Time, and in some Part of his Accounts; and after him comes Bartholomé Leonardo de Argensola, who has fallen into the same Faults with Herrera, and is less excusable, having interwoven the first Adventures in this Conquest into his Annals of Arragon, treating them in such a Manner, as to appear there far fetch'd, and to fill only the Place of an Episode. He has related what he found in Antonio de Herrera: And though his Style be better, yet is it so often interrupted and perplex'd by the Mixture of other Adventures, that what is great and heroical in that Enterprize, is either diminish'd or entirely lost by the Digressions, as may be seen in many Parts of his History.

THERE has since come abroad a particular History of New Spain, a Posthumous Work of Bernal Diaz del Castillo. It was brought to light by a Monk of the Order of our Lady of La Merced, he having found the Manuscript in the Library of a great and learned Minister, where it had lain conceal'd for many Years, perhaps on account of some Inconveniences which, at the Time of the printing it, were either over-look'd, or unknown. It passes at present for an authentick History, its rough and unpolish'd Style helping it to look like Truth, and to persuade some of the Sincerity of its Author. But though he has the Advantage of having been an Eye-witness of those Things he has recorded, one may nevertheless discover, from his very Work, that he was not so free from Passion in his Views, as to have the right Government of his Pen: He appears as well satisfy'd with his Ingenuity, as ill content with his Fortune; Envy and Ambition openly shew themselves in many Parts of his Book, these two intemperate Passions frequently breaking forth in Complaints against Hernan Cortez, the principal Hero of this History. He endeavours to penetrate his Designs, that he may throw a Slur upon, and correct his Counsels; oftentimes giving out as infallible Rules for Conduct not the Orders of his General, and the Dispositions made by him, but the Murmurs and Mutterings of the Soldiers; although in this Profession there are as many stupid ignorant Creatures as elsewhere; and in all Professions, it is equally dangerous to suffer those to dispute, who are born only to obey.

THESE are the Motives which have engaged me to enter upon this Subject, endeavouring to clear it from the Obscurity in which it is involv'd, and to do Justice to injur'd Truth. I shall take Help from those Authors I have cited, upon all Occasions where I shall have no reasonable Ground to differ from them; and I shall have Recourse to other Accounts, and private Memoirs, which I have collected, impartially chusing those which are most worthy of Credit, for the forming of my Relation. I shall endeavour to avoid Repetitions, and the mentioning of of such Things as ought to be supposed, wasting no Time in recounting minuter Circumstances, which either fully the Paper with what is indecent, or fill it with Things unworthy to be remark'd, and serve more to swell the Volume, than to add any thing to the Dignity of the History.

BUT before I enter upon the Execution of what I have undertaken, it will be proper to give an Account of the Posture of Affairs in Spain, at the Time when the Conquest of the new World was begun, to the End that we may discover its Origin, before we consider its Progress, and that this Knowledge may serve as a Foundation to the Building we are going to raise.

C H A P. III.

The Calamities which SPAIN labour'd under, when the Conquest of MEXICO was undertaken.

THE Year 1517 is no less memorable in this Monarchy, for the Troubles and Disorders with which it was harass'd, than for the many Felicities which then attended it. Spain was at that Time assaulted on all Sides by Tumults, Discords, and Factions, its Tranquility being disturb'd by such intestine Evils as threaten'd its utter Ruin, and the People remaining in their Fidelity rather from a Sense of their Duty, than as being obedient to the Curb and Reins of Government. At the same Time a Way was opening to its greatest Prosperity in the West Indies, by the Discovery of another Spain, by which it not only extended its Limits, but renew'd and doubled its Name. Thus Time and Fortune sport themselves with the Things of this World; and thus Good and Evil are either always mingled, or succeed each other with a perpetual Revolution.

IN the Beginning of the foregoing Year died Don Fernando the Catholick, and the Schemes he had form'd for the Preservation and Augmentation of his Dominions, being disconcerted by the

the Death of their Author, the great Loss these Kingdoms had sustain'd, was gradually known by the Disturbances and Disorders in the publick Affairs which follow'd it; as the Value of Causes is usually discover'd by the Importance of the Effects.

THE whole Authority of the Government remain'd in the Hands of the Cardinal-Archbishop of Toledo, Don Francisco Ximenes de Cisneros, a Man of a resolute Soul, superior Capacity, and invincible Courage, and endow'd in an equal Degree with Piety, Prudence, and Fortitude: These moral Virtues, and heroick Qualities, were all united in him, without the least Discord arising from their Diversity. But he was so fond of doing every Thing the best Way, and so active in the Support of his own Opinion, that he frequently let slip an Opportunity of doing well, by endeavouring to do better; and his Zeal was not so proper for correcting turbulent Spirits, as his Integrity was likely to provoke them.

THE Queen Donna Juana, Daughter of Don Fernando and Isabella, to whom the Succession of the Kingdom rightfully belong'd, resided at Tordesillas, where no body was admitted to see her, by reason of the unhappy Accident which had disorder'd her Understanding, and which, by the too strong Impressions it had made upon her Imagination, had either depriv'd her totally of the Use of Reason, or brought her to Reason incoherently of those Things with which her Fancy was possess'd.

PRINCE Charles, (the First of that Name among the Kings of Spain, and Fifth among the Emperors,) whom the Accident of his Mother had brought to the Crown before the Time, was holding his Court in Flanders. And as he was yet but very young, being only in his Seventeenth Year, as he had not been educated in Spain, and as his first Inclinations were preingag'd in favour of the Flemish Ministers: All these were melancholy Circumstances, which made his Coming be apprehended, even by those who judg'd it necessary for the Good of the State.

THE Infanto Don Fernando his Brother, though of fewer Years, yet wanting not a Maturity of Understanding, was highly displeas'd, that his Grandfather Don Fernando had not in his last Will named him to be Chief Governor of these Kingdoms, as he had done in a former one, made at Burgos; and although he strove to keep himself within the Bounds of his Duty, yet he often made this Reflection, (and heard the same from others, who were near him,) That had he never been nam'd to that Employment, the Neglect might have been imputed to his want of Years; but to exclude him after he had been once nam'd, was a Distrust of another kind, which put a direct Affront upon his his Person and Dignity. So that he could not forbear declaring how little he was satisfied with the new Government. A Discontent extremely dangerous at that Time, because the Minds of the People being in a general Disquiet, and strongly inclin'd to that Prince, as well upon Account of his affable Behaviour, as because he had been born and bred in Castille; they would undoubtedly have follow'd him, (in case of a Disturbance, as was apprehended,) taking Advantage of so natural a Motion to act their accustom'd Violences.

THESE Perplexities were augmented by another, which gave the Cardinal Ximenes no less Uneasiness. The Dean of Louvain, Adriano Florencio, who was afterwards Pope, and the Sixth of that Name, had been sent from Flanders, to hold, in Appearance, the Rank and Quality of Ambassador at the Court of King Ferdinand; but as soon as that King was dead, he produc'd the Powers, which, till then, he had conceal'd, to take Possession of his Kingdoms, in the Name of Prince Charles, and to govern in his Absence. This occasion'd a Contest, which was manag'd on both Sides with great Warmth. The Question was, Whether these Powers, or those with which the Cardinal was invested, were of the greater Virtue and Authority. The Politicians of that Time manag'd their Arguments upon it with too much Freedom, and little Respect; their Reasonings having always some Tincture of the Passions, by which they were animated. Those who were fond of Novelty, pretended that the Cardinal was only a Governor, named by another Governor; because King Ferdinand bore no other Title since the Death of Queen Isabel. The Arguments offer'd by the other Side were not less insolent, seeing they tended to an Exclusion of both the Ministers. They maintain'd, that there was the same Defect in the Nomination of the Dean, because, tho' Prince Charles had the Advantage of being lawful Heir to the Crown of Spain, he could not, during the Life of his Mother, assume any other Quality than that of Governor, in the same Manner as his Grandfather had done. Thus they declar'd those two Princes incapable of delegating to their Magistrates that Sovereign Authority, which being inseparable from the Person of the King, cannot be lodg'd in that of a Governor.

THE two Governors perceiving that both the Royal Authority, and their own Jurisdiction were struck at by the fomenting of these Disputes, concerted together to unite their Powers. A wise Resolution, had they been able in like manner, to form a Harmony of Genius; but the positive Humour of the Cardinal was continually clashing with the mild Temper of Adriano.

The

The first was inclin'd to suffer no Companion in his Resolutions; and the other supported his with little Activity, and without any Knowledge of the Laws and Customs of the Nation. This divided Authority occasioned a like Division in the Obedience of the Subject, producing the same Inconvenience in the State, which would be caus'd by two Rudders in a Ship, whose different Steerings would alone create a Tempest in the very Midst of a Calm.

THE Effects of this bad Constitution were presently known; the ill-corrected Humours, with which the Commonwealth abounded, being entirely exasperated. The Cardinal order'd (and he needed but little Perswasion to bring over his Collegue to his Opinion) that all the Cities and Towns of the Kingdom should arm themselves; and that every one should list its Militia, training the People to the Use of their Arms, and to the Practice of the Obedience due to their Commanders; to which End he appointed pay for the Officers, and granted Privileges to the Soldiers. Some say, that he took these Measures in View to his own Security; and others, that it was in Order to have a Strength sufficient to curb the Pride of the Grandees. But Experience soon made appear, that it was an inconvenient Step at that Season: For the Grandees, and those who possess'd hereditary Lordships, took Offence at the arming of the People, believing a Report which had been spread, not to be without some Foundation, That the Governors intended, by the Help of this Force, to examine into the Origin of their Seignories, and their Pretensions to those Duties they exacted from their Vassals. And even among the People these Measures had different Effects: For some Cities list'd Men, made their Musters, and trained their Soldiers to military Exercises; but in others they look'd on these Imitations of War, as affecting their Liberty, and as dangerous to the publick Tranquillity: This Novelty being of equal bad Consequence in all; because those Cities which continued in their Duty, were, however, not insensible of the Strength they had to support their Disobedience upon Occasion; and those that were rebellious, found themselves in a Condition to force the rest to follow them, and to put all Things into Confusion.

C H A P. IV.

The Condition of the distant Kingdoms and the Islands of America, which are now called the West Indies.

AT this Time the rest of the Dominions of the Crown of Spain, suffer'd no less than Castile; there was scarce a Stone that did not move, nor a Part from whence they had not Reason to fear the Ruin of the whole Fa-brick. Andaluzia groaned under the Oppression of a Civil War, occasioned by Don Pedro Giron, Son to the Conde de Urenna, that he might get Possession of the Estates belonging to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Succession of which he pretended to, by Donna Mencia de Guzman, his Wife; putting the Proof of his Right upon the Decision of Arms, and authorizing Violence with the Name of Justice.

IN Navarre, the two Parties of Beamont and Agramont, began to break out again with Violence, Names which made themselves famous at the Expence of their Country. The Beamontese, who were Partisans of the King of Castile, called the attacking of their Enemies the Defence of Right: And the Agramontese, who, after the Death of Juan de la Brit and Queen Catalina, declared for the Prince of Bearne, their Son, presum'd upon the Protection of France; with whose Power they threaten'd their Adversaries; both the one and the other Party were difficult to reduce; both cover'd their Hatred with the Appearances of Loyalty, abusing the Name of the King, which only served as a Pretence for Revenge and Sedition.

IN Arragon there arose dangerous Disputes about the Government of the Kingdom; which, by the Will of King Fernando, was left to the Care of his Son Don Alphonso, Archbishop of Zaragoza who was strenuously oppos'd by the chief Magistrate in that Kingdom, Don Juan de Lanuza, out of an opinion, (either real or affected,) that it was inconsistent with the Quiet of that Kingdom, to have the absolute Power vested in a Person of such ambitious Thoughts.

FROM this Beginning sprung other Disputes among the Nobles, which might be consider'd as too refin'd Reasonings upon the Point of Loyalty; but as these Discussions infected by Degrees the unreasoning Minds of the People, they endanger'd their Obedience and Subjection.

CATALONIA and Valencia were laid waste by the customary Cruelty of their Banditti, who, not contented with commanding the Country, possess'd themselves of the smaller Towns, and grew terrible to the Cities, with so much Insolence and Security, that the Order of the Commonwealth being disturbed, the Magistrates absconded, and Cruelty prevailed in all Places. Crimes were accounted noble Actions, and the Posterity of Delinquents became illustrious.

IN Naples the proclaiming of Queen Juana, and Don Carlos, was receiv'd with Applause; but even in the Midst of the publick Joy, a seditious Report was spread, the Rise whereof was unknown, but the Wickedness obvious.

IT was said that King Fernando had named the Duke of Calabria, then a Prisoner in the Castle of Xativa, for Heir of the Kingdom. And this Report, which was deservedly slighted in the Beginning, descended to the Commonalty, among whom it pass'd in a Whisper for some Days; untill at length swelling with Mystery; it broke out in popular Clamour, and open Tumult; which gave great Uneasiness to the Nobility, and all such as had any Regard to Reason and Truth.

IN Sicily the People took up Arms against their Viceroy, Don Hugo de Moncada, with so much Fury, that he was forc'd to leave the Government in the Hands of the Populace; and these Disturbances began to take deeper Root than those at Naples, for they were fomented by some of the Nobility; who made the publick Good (always the first Signal of Sedition) a Pretence, and the common People an Instrument to execute their Revenge, and to pass on to the more dangerous Designs of their Ambition.

NOR were the Indies, notwithstanding their Distance, free from this Infection, which extended to the most remote Parts of the Monarchy. At that Time all the Conquests in that new World consisted of the four Islands, of Santo Domingo, Cuba, San Juan de Puerto Rico, and Jamaica, and a small Part of the Terra Firma, which had been peopled in the Province of Darien, at the Entrance of the Gulph of Uraba, within which Bounds was contained all that was called the West Indies. The first Conquerors gave it this Name, because in Wealth and Distance it resembled the East Indies, so call'd from the River Indus. The rest of this Empire consisted not so much in any Thing real, as in the Hopes they had conceived from several Discoveries and Inroads made by some of our Captains with various Success, but more Danger than Profit; but in that little they possess'd, they had so far forgotten the Valour of the first Conquerors, and Covetousness was so rooted in their Minds, that they regarded nothing but enriching themselves, in utter Defiance to Conscience and Reputation, without which two Curbs, a Man is left to his own Nature, and is as savage and cruel as the very Brutes, which make War upon him. There came nothing from those Parts now but Lamentations and Complaints of what they suffer'd. Zeal for Religion and the publick Good gave Way entirely to the Interest and Lust of private Men, and they were continually destroying the poor Indians, who groaned under the heavy Load, labouring for Gold to satisfy the Avarice of other Men, and were forced to seek with the Sweat of their Brow, what they themselves despised, cursing the ungrateful Fertility of their Country, as the Cause of their Slavery. These Disorders gave great Disturbance to Don Fernando, who was particularly desirous to protect and convert the Indians, (which was always the first Care of our Kings;) to which End he gave Orders, published Laws, and made use of different Means, which lost their Force by the Disadvantage of their Distance, as an Arrow falls short of the Mark, when placed at too great a Distance from the Arm that directs it. But the Death of the King happ'ning before he could enjoy the Fruit of his Labours, the Cardinal enter'd in good Earnest, into the Prosecution of this Design, desiring to put that Government once upon a good Footing; to which End he employ'd four grave Regulars of the Order of St. Jerom, sending them with the Character of Inspectors, and another Minister of his own Election, to accompany them, with Commission of Residentiary Judge; to the End, that those two Jurisdictions being united, might extend over the Whole. But they no sooner arrived at the Islands, than they found it impossible to execute the Severity of their Instructions; and that the Difference is great between Practice and Speculation; and they did little more than discover the ill State of that Government, making the Disease worse by the Weakness of the Remedy.

C H A P. V.

The Calamities of the Monarchy cease on the Arrival of CHARLES. At this Time began the Conquest of NEW SPAIN.

IN this Condition were the Affairs of the Monarchy, when Charles took Possession, and arrived in Spain, in the Month of September this Year. The Storm began to abate upon his Coming, and the Influence of his Presence, by little and little, introduc'd a Calm. The first Effects of this happy Change were perceived in Castile, whose Tranquillity communicated it self to the rest of the Kingdoms of Spain, and afterwards reach'd to the Dominions abroad; as in a human Body, the natural Heat distributes it self, passing from the Heart to the Benefit of the most distant Members. In short, the Influence of the new King extended to America, his Name doing as much there, as his Presence did in Spain. The Minds of Men became dispos'd to great Undertakings; the Courage of the Soldiers increas'd; and they began the first Operations which preceeded the Conquest of New Spain, the Empire of which Heaven had destined to signalize the Beginning of the Reign of this august Monarch.

THE Island of Cuba was at that Time governed by Captain Diego Velasquez, who went thither as Lieutenant to the second Admiral of the Indies, Don Diego Colon, with such good Fortune, that the Conquest of it was owing to him, and the greatest Part of the Settlement.

AS that Island was the most Western of those that had been discover'd, and nearest to the Continent of North America, they had there large Accounts of other Lands, not far distant, tho' it was still a Doubt whether they were Islands, or not. They talk'd, however, of the Riches of those Countries with as much Certainty, as if they had seen them; whether it be that this Confidence was grounded upon what Experience had discover'd in the Conquests already made, or that the Prosperities, with which we flatter our selves, have but a short Step to make from the Fancy to absolute Belief.

THE great Idea conceived of those Parts encreased at this Time by what those Soldiers related, who accompanied Francisco Fernandez de Cordova in the Discovery of Yucatan, a Peninsula situate on the Confines of New Spain. And altho' this Undertaking was not prosperous, and they could not at that Time make a Conquest, because the Captain and the greatest Part of his Men died gallantly in the Attempt, yet at least they were satisfied of the Reality of those Countries; and the Soldiers, who arrived at this Time, altho' wounded and overcome, were so little daunted, that even in magnifying what they had suffer'd, they shewed an Inclination to return to the Enterprize, and infused the same Desire into the rest of the Spaniards of the Island; not so much by what they said, as by shewing some little Toys of Gold, which they brought from the new discover'd Country, under the Standard, and in small Quantity, but so much heighten'd in Value by the Strength of Imagination, that they all began to promise themselves great Riches from this Conquest, and to raise mighty Structures in Fancy upon the Foundation of what they had seen.

SOME Writers do not allow that this first Gold, or Metal mix'd with it, came at that Time from Yucatan, grounding their Opinion on that Province's not producing any, and the Easiness of contradicting what no body maintains. We follow those who relate what they saw, without finding any great Difficulty in believing that Gold might come from some other Part to Yucatan, well knowing that to produce it, and to have it, are different Things. It appears by their not finding it any where but in the Temples, that those Indians esteem'd it as something excellent, since they applied it solely to the Worship of their Gods.

DIEGO Velasquez seeing the Name of Yucatan in so much Credit with every one, began to entertain Thoughts of raising himself to farther Greatness, as one who found himself uneasy in acknowledging Admiral Diego de Colon his Superior in that Government; a Dependance now more nominal than real, but yet such, as when he consider'd his Rank and great Successes, gave him inward Trouble, and destroy'd the Relish of his good Fortune. With this View he treated with several Persons to return upon this Discovery, and conceiving new Hopes from the Ardour, with which the Soldiers offered themselves, he publish'd his Design. Men were list'd, and three Vessels and a Brigantine fitted out, and well stor'd with Ammunition and Provisions. He appointed Juan de Grijalva, a Relation of his own, to be Commander in Chief; and Pedro de Alvarado, Francisco

de Montexo, and Alonso Davila, to command under him; Men of eminent Rank, and highly esteemed in those Islands for their Valour and Humanity; the most valuable Kind of Nobility. But notwithstanding they easily assembled about two hundred and fifty Soldiers, including in this Number Pilots and Mariners; and made all the Dispatch which Men, so eager on their Enterprize; could possibly do, they did not put to Sea until the Eighth of Aprill, the Year following, 1518.

THEY set out with a Design to follow the same Course they did the Year before; but falling off some Degrees, by the Strength of the Currents, they came upon the Isle of Cozumel; (the first Discovery in this Voyage,) where they refreshed themselves, without any Opposition from the Natives; and returning on board, they stood their Course, and in few Days found themselves in Sight of Yucatan; and having doubled the Point of Cotoche, the most Eastern Part of that Province, they stood Westerly, with the Larboard to the Shore, which they coasted; until they arrived at Potonchan, or Champoton, where Francisco Fernandez de Cordova was routed and killed: To revenge whose Death, more than out of any Necessity, they landed; and having vanquish'd and terrified those Indians, determined to pursue their Discovery.

THEY stood Westerly by common Consent, without keeping at a greater Distance from the Land than was necessary for their Safety, and discover'd on a Part of the Coast (which extended a great Way, and appeared very delightful) several Towns, with Buildings of Stone, which very much surpris'd them; and in the Confusion, with which they were all making their Observations, their Fancies represented them as great Cities, with Towers and Pinnacles; Objects at this Time, contrary to the ordinary Rule, appearing greater, as they were more distant. And because one of the Soldiers at that Time said, that this Country was like Spain, the Comparison so much pleas'd the Hearers, and made such an Impression upon them all, that we have no Account of any other Beginning of the Name of New Spain, given to that Country: Words accidentally spoken, but so successfully repeated, that without any Propriety or Beauty to recommend them, they have fixed themselves for ever on the Memories of Men.

C H A P. VI.

Juan de Grijalva enters the River of Tobasco.

OUR Vessels followed the Coast, until such Time as they came to the Place where the River Tobasco, one of the navigable Rivers which runs into the Gulph of Mexico, discharges it self at two Mouths. From the Time of this Discovery, it was called the River of Grijalva; but the Province, water'd by it, scituate on the Frontiers of New Spain, between Yucatan and Guazacoalco, retains the old Name. In these Parts they discover'd spacious Groves, and so many Towns between the two Rivers, that with the Hopes of making a considerable Progress here, Juan de Grijalva resolv'd (with the Approbation of his Men) to go up the River, and take a View of the Country; and finding by the Soundings, that he could only make use of the two lesser Vessels, he embarked all his Soldiers on board them, and left the other two at an Anchor, with Part of the Sailors.

THEY began, not without some Difficulty, to overcome the Strength of the Current; when they perceived at a little Distance, a considerable Number of Canoes, filled with armed Indians, and on the Shore several small Bodies of Men, who seem'd prepared for an Engagement; and who both by their Voices and Motions, which were now distinguishable, endeavour'd to persuade the Spaniards, that their Landing would be difficult; their Gestures being such as Men in Fear are wont to use, who would keep off Danger by Menaces. But our People, accusom'd to greater Enterprizes, approach'd in good Order until the two Parties were within Reach of one another's Weapons. The General commanded that no one should fire, or make any Signal, but of Peace; and the Admiration the Indians were in at the Make of the Ships, and Difference of the Men and Habits, seem'd to have impos'd upon them the same Orders; for they stood without Motion, as deprived of the Use of their Hands, by the Astonishment under which their Eyes had brought them. Grijalva made use of this seasonable and accidental Amusement, wherein he found the Enemy, to leap on Shore, followed by a Part of his Men, with great Expedition, and without any Danger.

Danger. He drew them up, and erected the Royal Standard: And after those customary Solemnities were performed, which being little more than Ceremonies, were yet called Acts of Possession, he endeavour'd to make the Indians understand; that he came in Peace, without any Design to offend them. This Message was carried by two Indian Boys, who were made Prisoners in the first Expedition to Yucatan, and at their Baptism had the Names of Julian and Melchor. They understood the Language of Tobasco, as being like that of their own Country; and they had learn'd ours, so that they made themselves understood with some Difficulty; but in a Country where they were often forc'd to speak by Signs, that indifferent Interpretation pass'd for Eloquence.

THE Result of this Embassy was such, that about thirty Indians had the Boldness to draw nearer in four Canoes, with some Precaution.

CANOE'S were Boates, made of the Trunks of Trees, work'd hollow after such a Manner, that some were capable of holding fifteen or twenty Men; such is the Largeness of those Trees, and the Fertility of the Country that produces them. They saluted each other courteously; and Juan de Grijalva, after having removed their Apprehensions by some Presents, made them a short Discourse, giving them to understand, by the Help of his Interpreters, that he and his Soldiers were Vassals to a powerful Monarch, who possess'd an Empire where the Sun rises; in whose Name he came to offer them Peace, and great Advantages, if they would become his Subjects. They heard his Proposition with the Marks of a disagreeable Attention; and we must not omit the natural Discretion of one of those Barbarians, who silencing the rest, answer'd Grijalva, with Firmness and Resolution, That he did not esteem that to be a good Kind of Peace, which he was desirous to introduce by Subjection and Vassalage; and that he could not but wonder at it as a Thing very proposterous, that he should talk to them of a new Master, before he knew whether they were discontented with him they already had: But that as to the Point of Peace or War, (for they had nothing else there to discourse of,) they would speak of it to their Superiors, and return with their Answer. They took leave with this Resolution, and our People remained equally surprized and concerned. The Satisfaction of having found Indians of more Reason, and better Discourse than usual, being allay'd by the Difficulties they expected to meet with in conquering them; for they rightly concluded, That those who knew how to discourse so well, would also know how to fight, or that at least they had Reason to apprehend a different Kind of Valour with their different Understandings; it being certain that in War the Head does more than the Hands. But these Considerations of the Danger (on which both Captains and Soldiers variously reasoned) pass'd as prudent Reflections, but made little or no Impression on their Hearts. They were undeceived in a little Time, for the same Indians returned with Signals of Peace, saying, That their Caziques did accept it, not that they feared War, or were so easily to be overcome as the People of Yucatan, (whose Defeat they had learn'd,) but because our Men having left Peace or War to their Election, they thought themselves obliged to chuse the best; and in Token of the new Friendship they were going to establish, they brought a plentiful Regale of Provisions and Fruits. A little after came the principal Cazique, with a slender Attendance of unarmed People, thereby giving to understand the Confidence he had in his Guests, and that he came secure in his own Sincerity. Grijalva received him with Demonstrations of Satisfaction and Courtesy, and the Indian made a Return in Submissions after his Manner, accompanied with an Air of Gravity, either real or affected. After the first Compliments, he order'd his Servants to come up with another Present (which he had brought) of divers Curiosities, of more Workmanship than Value: Plumes of various Colours; Robes of fine Cotton, with some Figures of Animals to adorn them, made of Gold, thin and light, or curiously wrought in Wood, set in Gold, or overlaid with it; and without staying for the Acknowledgements of Grijalva, the Cazique gave him to understand, by the Help of his Interpreters, that his Design was Peace, and that the Intention of that Present was, to take a friendly Leave of his Guests, in order to maintain it. Grijalva answered him, That he very much esteem'd his Liberality; and that his Purpose was to pass forwards, without making any Stop, or giving him any Umbrage: A Resolution to which he inclined, partly out of the generous Return to the good Behaviour of those People, and the Confidence they had plac'd in him; and partly for the Conveniency of a Retreat, and of having Friends at his Back, in case of any Accident that might occur. And so he took his leave, and re-embark'd, having first presented the Cazique and his Servants with some Castilian Trifles, which altho' of very little Value, bore a Price for their Novelty; which should be less surprizing to the Spaniards now a Days, when they themselves buy foreign Glasses at such excessive Rates.

ANTONIO de Herrera, and those who follow him, or have writ since, affirm, that the Cazique presented Grijalva with a Suit

Suit of Armour of fine Gold, with all the Pieces belonging to it; that he armed himself compleatly with them; and that they fitted him as well as if they had been made for him, a Circumstance too remarkable to have been omitted by more antient Authors. He took it, perhaps, from Francisco Lopez de Gomara; whom he uses to reject on other Occasions; but Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who was there present, and Gonzalo Fernandez de Oviedo, who wrote at that Time in the Island of Santo Domingo, make no mention of these Arms, altho' both give a minute Account of all the Curiosities brought from Tobasco. I leave it to the Judgment of the Reader what Credit is to be given to those Authors; desiring only the Liberty to relate the Story, without blaming any one for doubting the Truth of it.

C H A P. VII.

Juan de Grijalva prosecutes his Voyage, and enters the River of Flags, where he has the first Account of the Mexican King MOTEZUMA.

GRIJALVA and his Companions pursued their Voyage, standing the same Course, still discovering new Lands and Towns, without any memorable Accident, until they came to a River, which they call'd the River of Flags; because on the Shore and neighbouring Coasts, they saw a great Number of Indians, with white Flags hanging at the Tops of their Spears, and who, by their Manner of waving them, together with their Signals, Cries, and different Motions, made a Shew of Peace, and seem'd rather to invite Passengers than forbid them. Grijalva order'd Francisco de Montejo to advance with some of his Men in two Boats, to try the Entrance of the River, and discover the Intentions of those Indians. This Captain finding a good Anchoring Place, and little to apprehend from the Behaviour of the People, gave Notice to the rest to come up. They all landed, and were received with great Admiration and Marks of Joy by the Indians: From amongst whom, assembled in great Numbers, three advanced, who, by the Ornaments of their Habits, seem'd the principal Men of the Country; and stopping so long as was necessary to observe who was the chief Commander, by the Respect the others paid him, him, they went directly up to Grijalva, whom they accosted with great Reverence, and who received them with equal Courtesy. Our Intérpreters did not understand the Language of this Country, so that the Compliments were made by civil Signs, with some Words of more Sound than Signification.

AFTER this they saw a Banquet, which the Indians had provided of different Sorts of Food, plac'd, or rather flung upon Mats of Palm, under the Shade of the Trees; a rustick and disorderly Plenty, but not the less grateful to the Taste of the hungry Soldiers. After which Refreshment, the three Indians commanded their People to shew some Pieces of Gold, which they had concealed till then; and by their Manner of shewing and holding them, it was understood that they did not design to make a Present of them, but to purchase with them the Merchandize of the Ships, the Fame of which had already reach'd their Ears. Presently a Fair was open'd for Strings of Beads, Combs, Knives, and other Instruments of Iron and Alchimy, which in that Country might be called Jewels of great Price, the Fondness of the Indians for those Trifles giving them a real Value. They were exchanged for Implements, and Trinkets of Gold, not of the greatest Fineness, but in such Abundance, that in the six Days the Spaniards stopp'd there, the Ransomes amounted to fifteen thousand Pefo's.

WE don't know with what Propriety they gave the Name of Ransomes to this Kind of Trucking, nor why they called it Ransomed Gold, which in Truth was deliver'd over to a greater Slavery, and had more Liberty where it was less esteemed: But I shall make use of this Expression, because I find it introduced into our Histories, and before them into the History of the East Indies; it being granted that in the Manner of speaking, whereby Things are explained, the Reason is not so much to be sought after, as the Custom, which according to the Opinion of Horace, is the true Judge of Language, and either gives or takes away, as it pleases, that Harmony which the Ear finds between Sounds and their Signification.

Juan de Grijalva finding that the Ransomes were at an End, and the Ships in some Danger, by being expos'd to the North Wind, took his leave of those People, who remained pleased and thankful. He consulted about pursuing his intended Discovery, having understood by Signs that these three Indian Chiefs were Subjects to a Monarch called Motexuma, whose Empire extended over numerous Countries abounding with Gold, and other Riches; and that they came by his Order to examine, after a peaceable Manner, into the Intentions of our People, whose Neighbourhood, in all Appearance, gave him Disturbance. Some Writers run into larger Accounts, but it doth not seem easy to conceive whence they could have gained their Knowledge, nor was it a small Matter to learn so much as we have related, where People were oblig'd to speak with their Hands, and understand by their Eyes.

THEY sailed on, without losing Sight of Land, and passing by two or three Islands of small Note, landed in one they called the Island of Sacrifices, because going in to view a House of Lime and Stone, which overlooked the rest, they found several Idols of a horrible Figure, and a more horrible Worship paid to them; for near the Steps where they were plac'd, were the Carcasses of six or seven Men, newly sacrificed, cut to Pieces, and their Entrails laid open. This miserable Sight struck our People with Horror, and affected them with different Sentiments, their Hearts being filled with Compassion, at the same Time that they were enraged at the Abomination.

THEY staid but a little while in this Island, because the Inhabitants seemed to be in a Consternation; so that the Ransomes were not considerable. Upon which they pass'd on to another, which was not far from the Main Land, and so situated, that between that and the Coast there was sufficient Room and convenient Shelter for the Ships. They called it the Island of St. Juan, because they arrived there on the Day of the Baptist, and likewise in Respect to the Name of their General, mixing Devotion with Flattery; and because an Indian, who was pointing with his Hand towards the Main Land, giving them to understand how it was called, repeated several Times, with a bad Pronunciation, the Word Culua! Culua! This gave Occasion to the Surname, by which they distinguished it from St. Juan de Puerto Rico, calling it St. Juan de Ulua: A little Island of more Sand than Soil; and which lay so low, that sometimes it was cover'd by the Sea. But from these humble Beginnings, it became the most frequented and most celebrated Port of New Spain, on that Side which is bounded by the North Sea.

HERE they staid some Days; for the Indians of the neighbouring Parts came with their Pieces of Gold, believing they had the Advantage of the Spaniards in changing them for Glasse. And Juan de Grijalva finding that his Instructions limited him to discover and ransom without making a Settlement, (which was expressly forbidden him,) he consulted about giving an Account to Diego Velasquez of the large Countries he had discover'd; that in case he resolv'd to have him settle there, he might send him Orders with a Supply of Forces, and such other Provisions as he stood in need of. With this Account he dispatch'd Captain Pedro de Alvarado in one of the four Ships, giving him all the Gold, and whatever else they had acquired until that Time; to the End, that the Shew of that Wealth might give his Embassy the more Weight, and facilitate his Proposal of Settling, to which he was always inclined; notwithstanding Francisco Lopez de Gomara denies it, and blames him on this Account as a pusillanimous Person.

C H A P. VIII.

Juan de Grijalva goes on with his Discovery, until he has coasted the Province of Panuco. What happen'd in the River of Canoes, and his Resolution to return to the Isle of Cuba.

S C A R C E had Pedro de Alvarado steered his Course for Cuba, when the rest of the Ships parted from St. Juan de Ulua in Pursuit of their Way, and following the Guidance of the Coast, turn'd with it towards the North, having in View the two Mountains of Tuspa and Tusta, which stretch a great Way between the Sea and the Province of Tlascalá. After which they entered the River of Panuco, the farthest Province of New Spain, on the Gulph of Mexico, and came to an Anchor in the River of Canoes, which took this Name at that Time, because in the little Space they stopp'd to take a View of it, they were assaulted by sixteen Canoes, filled with armed Indians; who, by the Help of the Current attack'd the Ship, commanded by Alonso Davila, and after discharging a furious Shower of Arrows, cut one of the Cables, and endeavour'd to board the Ship; a Resolution becoming Barbarians, but such, as had it been favour'd with Success, might have deserved the Name of a gallant Action. But the other two Ships coming immediately up to her Relief, the Men in an Instant mann'd their Boats, charging the Canoes with so much Vigour, that one could not distinguish betwixt the Attack and the Victory: Some of them were overfet, many Indians killed, and in short, no Enemies left, but those who had Prudence enough to know the Danger, or used the most Diligence to avoid it by Flight.

IT did not seem proper to follow this Victory, by reason of the small Advantage by Traffick that could be hoped for from frighten'd Fugitives; wherefore they weigh'd Anchor, and prosecuted their Voyage till they arrived at a Point of Land which ran far into the Sea, which seemingly, enrag'd with it, as usurping upon its Territories; maintain'd an obstinate War against the Rocks. The Pilots made use of all their Industry and Skill to double this Cape; but were forc'd to give way to the Strength of the Current, and not without Danger of oversetting, or running a shore. This Accident occasion'd the Pilots to protest against proceeding any farther; in which they were seconded by the general Clamours of the Men, grown weary now of so tedious a Navigation, and more apprehensive of the Dangers that might attend it. Upon which Juan de Grijalva, a Man of equal Prudence and Courage, assembled the Captains and Pilots, to consult what was to be done in their present Circumstances. In this Council they weigh'd the Difficulty of passing forward, and the Uncertainty of returning; that one of their Ships had suffer'd, and wanted to be refitted; that their Provision began to spoil, and the People to be dissatisfied, and fatigued. They consider'd withal, that to make a Settlement, was contrary to the Instructions of Diego Velasquez; and that they were in an ill Condition to undertake it, without a further Reinforcement; so that in the end, they resolv'd with one Accord to steer their Course for Cuba, in order to furnish themselves with what was necessary for undertaking a third Time this great Affair, now left unfinished. This was presently put in Execution, and sailing back the Way by which they came, taking View of other Parts of the same Coasts, without stopping long at any Place, yet making a considerable Profit in Ransomes, they arriv'd at length at the Port of Sant Jago, in Cuba, the 15th of November 1518.

SOME few Days before, Pedro de Alvarado arriv'd at the same Port, and was very well received by the Governor Diego Velasquez, who publish'd, with incredible Joy, the Account of the large Countries they had discover'd, and, above all, of the fifteen thousand Peso's of Gold, which supported the Relation, without any Occasion for Exaggerations.

THE Governor beheld this Wealth with Pleasure, and hardly believing his Eyes, made Pedro de Alvarado repeat a second and third Time what he had before related, finding something new in the very Thing he had just heard; as a Musician is delighted with the Repetition of his Tune. But this Satisfaction was soon allay'd by his Impatience at the Conduct of Don Juan de Grijalva, because he had not made a Settlement in the Country

Country where he had been so well received: And altho' Pedro de Alvarado endeavour'd to excuse him, yet being one of those, who had advis'd the making a Settlement in the River of Flags, he spoke but faintly, as a Man usually does when he endeavours to enforce any Thing against his own Opinion. Diego Velasquez accused him of Want of Resolution, and angry at his own Choice, confess'd he was to blame for having sent him, proposing to intrust this Undertaking to some more active Person, without considering how he disobliged a Relation, to whom he owed the very Happiness which rais'd his Hopes to such a Pitch. But the first Effect that good Fortune has on the Minds of the Ambitious, is to captivate their Reason, and take from them the Sense of Gratitude. He had nothing now to do but to obtain the Prize, and at any Rate enjoy the Prosperity which he promised himself from that great Discovery; raising his Imaginations to mighty Things, and hoping now to compass that which before exceeded his very Desires.

HE immediately made Preparations for the Conquest of this Country, to which the Name of New Spain gave a great Reputation: He communicated his Resolution to the Regulars of St. Ferom, who resided in the Island of Santo Domingo, but in such Terms, that he seem'd rather to desire their Approbation than ask their Consent. And he sent a Person to Court, with a large Account of the Discovery, together with a Memorial, in which his own Services were not forgotten; in Reward of which, he request'd some Favours, and the Title of the King's Lieutenant of those Countries he should conquer.

HE had already bought some Vessels, and began to fit out a new Fleet, when Juan de Grijalva arriv'd, and found him as much incens'd, as he had Reason to expect him thankful. Velasquez reprimanded him sharply and publicly, the other modestly declining to say all he could have done in his own Defence. However, he laid before Velasquez his own Instructions, which expressly forbid him to settle: But the Governor's ambitious Prospects had now so transported him beyond the Bounds of Reason, that tho' he own'd the Order, yet he treated Obedience to it as a Crime.

C H A P. IX.

The Difficulties which occur'd in the Choice of a Commander of the new Fleet, and who HERNAN CORTES was, who, in the end, obtained that Post.

BUT Diego Velasquez knowing how much it imported to be quick in his Resolutions, and that by losing of Time, he might lose a favourable Opportunity, gave immediate Orders for refitting the four Vessels which served in the Voyage of Grijalva; with which, and those he had bought, he made up ten Vessels, from eighty to an hundred Tuns, using the same Dispatch in arming, and furnish them with Stores and Provisions; but he was at a Loss upon whom to fix the Command. His Design was to chuse a Man of Resolution, who would know how to disengage himself from Difficulties, and make use of Opportunities, but withal, so manageable, as not to give him any Jealousy, or have any other Ambition than to advance the Glory of his Principal; which, in other Words, was to seek for a Man of great Courage, and a mean Spirit. But it not being easy to find these two Extreams in the same Subject, it delayed his Determination for some Days. The Voice of the People was in favour of Juan de Grijalva, and they usually do Justice in their Elections. What served greatly to recommend him, were his good Qualities, the Trouble he had taken in this Discovery, together with his Knowledge of the Navigation, and of the Country.

THE other Pretenders were Antonio and Bernardino Velasquez, near Relations of the Governor; Baltasar Bermudez, Vasco Porcallo, and other Cavaliers of that Island, of sufficient Merit to pretend to greater Employments; and upon this Occasion every one discours'd, as if he was the only proper Choice; and indeed, generally speaking, when the Disposal of Employments is delay'd, it serves only to encrease the Number of Pretenders, and multiply the Complaints of the Unfortunate.

BUT Diego Velasquez continued in his Irresolution, fearing the Ambition of those whose Capacity he approved, until advising with Amador de Lariz, the King's Treasurer, and Andres de Duero, his Secretary, which two he entirely confided in, and who knew his Temper perfectly well, they propos'd their intimate Friend Hernan Cortes, being not over-lavish in his Praise, lest their advise should be suspected; insinuating withal, that they spoke more out of Regard to the Success of the Undertaking, than the Interest of their Friend. Their Proposition was well heard, and they contented themselves with seeing him favourably inclined, giving him Time to consider, with Hopes, of entirely persuading him in a second Conversation.

BUT before we go farther, it will be proper to say who Hernan Cortes was, and through what Variety of Events his happy Destiny led him to achieve, by his Valour and Conduct, the Conquest of New Spain. I call that, Destiny, which, speaking as a Christian, is the sovereign and unsearchable Disposition, made by the first Cause, who leaving second Causes to act in Subordination to his Providence, as natural Means, produces all that happens by his Permission or Appointment, in a manner consistent with that Liberty of Choice, which he has bestowed upon Mankind.

HE was born in Medillin, a Town of Estremadura, Son of Martin Cortes, of Monroy, and Donna Catalina-Pizarro Altamarino, Names that sufficiently declare the Nobility of his Extraction. In his Youth, he for some Time applied himself to Letters, and was two Years at Salamanca, which were sufficient to make him sensible, that the sedentary Application of a studious Life, was contrary to his Temper, and did not suit the Vivacity of his Spirit. He returned home resolv'd to follow the Wars, and his Parents pointed out to him that of Italy, which was then the most considerable, and made the greatest Noise with the Name of the Great Captain Gonsalvo de Cordoua: But when he was to embark, he fell dangerously ill of a Distemper, which continued many Days; by which Accident, he found himself oblig'd to change his Intention, tho' not his Profession; and therefore he resolv'd to go to the Indies, where the War at that Time was carried on with a View to Glory, rather than to Wealth. He embark'd, with the Approbation of his Parents, in the Year 1504, and carried Letters of Recommendation to Don Nicholas de Obando, Commendatory-Major of the Order of Alcantara, his Kinsman, and then Governor of the Island of Sant Domingo. He was no sooner arriv'd there, and known, than he gain'd the general Good-will and Esteem; and was so kindly received by the Governor, as to be immediately admitted by him into the Number of his Friends, and offer'd his Assistance in a particular Manner: But all those Favours were not sufficient to divert his Inclination to Arms; for he was so uneasy with the State of Inaction, wherein he found that Island, which the Spaniards now possess'd without any Opposition from the Natives, that he desir'd Leave to go and serve in the Isle of Cuba, where the War was still carried on: And having gained the Consent of his Kinsman, he endeavour'd to signalize himself in that War both by Valour and Obedience, which are the first Rudiments of the Military Profession. He very soon acquired not only the Reputation of a valiant Soldier, but also that of an able Commander, distinguishing both his Courage in Action, and his Capacity in Council.

CORTES was well made, and of an agreeable Countenance; and besides those common natural Endowments, he was of a Temper which rendered him very amiable; for he always spoke well of the Absent, and was pleasant and discreet in his Conversation. His Generosity was such, that his Friends partook of all he had, without being suffer'd by him to publish their Obligations.

HE married in that Island Donna Cathalina-Suarez Pacheco, a noble and virtuous young Lady. This Courtship brought him under many Difficulties, by the interfering of Diego Velasquez, who made him Prisoner till such Time as all Differences were adjusted; and then Velasquez stood Father to the Bride, and gave her to him in Marriage. After which they were intimate Friends; and he in a little Time gave him a Distribution of Indians, and the Post of Alcalde, or Chief Magistrate in the very Town of St. Jago; an Employment usually conferr'd on those who had distinguish'd themselves in the Conquest of those Countries.

IN these Circumstances was Hernan Cortes, when Amador de Lariz and Andres de Duero propos'd him for the Conquest of New Spain; and they did it with so much Address, that the next Time they waited upon Diego Velasquez, furnished with fresh Reasons to enforce their Recommendation, they found him resolv'd on Hernan Cortes, and so possess'd with the Advantages of entrusting the Undertaking to his Care, that they chang'd their premeditated Arguments into Flattery, and only endeavour'd to oblige him by applauding a Resolution so agreeable to their own Wishes. They agreed with the Governor that it was convenient immediately to publish the Choice, in order to put a Stop at once to all further Pretensions; and Andres de Duero was not dilatory in the Dispatch of the Commission. The Substance of which was, That Diego Velasquez, as Governor of the Isle of Cuba, and Promoter of the Discoveries of Yucatan and New Spain, did name Hernan Cortes for Captain-General of the Fleet, and of the Countries already discover'd, or which should be discover'd, with the most

most extensive Powers, and most honourable Clauses, which the Friendship of the Secretary could add, under the Pretence of observing the necessary Forms.

C H A P. X.

The Rivals of Cortes endeavour with all their Power to set Diego Velasquez against him, but without Effect. He sails with the Fleet out of the Port of Sant Jago.

CORTES received the new Charge from Velasquez with great Expressions of Respect and Satisfaction, as sensibly affected at that Time, with the Confidence the Governor had reposed in his Person, as he was afterwards with his Distrust. The Resolution was made publick, and well received among those who desir'd to see that Affair brought to a Conclusion; but occasion'd much Discontent among his Rivals for the Employment; and those who declared themselves with the greatest Boldness, were the Relations of Diego Velasquez, who made very strong Efforts to raise in the Governor a Distrust of Hernan Cortes. They told him, That he placed a great deal of Confidence in a Man whom he had so little obliged; that if he consider'd the Conduct of Cortes, he would find that he was not much to be depended on, for that his Words and Actions very seldom agreed; that his Courtesy and Liberality had an Artifice in them, which rendered him suspected to those who are not led away by the bare Appearances of Virtue; that he was over assiduous to gain the Affections of the People; and that such sort of Friends, when they are in great Numbers, are easily form'd into a Party; that he would do well to remember the Disgust his Imprisonment had given him; and that a Man rarely makes true Friends of those, to whom he has given such Occasion of Complaint; for the Wounds of the Mind, as well as of the Body, leave Scars behind, which are wont to put a Man in mind of the Offence, when he has the Power to revenge it. To these they added other Reasons more specious than solid, without much Regard to Truth, aiming to appear zealous in the Governor's Interest, the better to dissemble their real Views.

'TIS reported that Diego Velasquez, walking out one Day with Hernan Cortes, and his Friends and Relations, a pleasant crack-brain'd Fellow, with whose Whimsies he used to be diverted, said to him, Thou hast done well, Friend Diego; shortly there will be Occasion for another Fleet to go in Pursuit of Cortes. There are some that relate this as a Prophecy, considering how luckily Madmen sometimes hit upon Things, and the Impression that it made on the Mind of Diego Velasquez. Let us leave it to Philosophers to dispute whether the foretelling of what is to come be one of the Extravagances of a distempered Imagination, or if it be possible that a Judgment so disorder'd should be capable of Divination. Let them imploy their Wit in searching for Reasons to maintain such an Opinion; I, for my part, shall believe that this craz'd Person was put upon saying what he did by the Enemies of Cortes, and that their Malice was but poorly supported by Reason, when they were obliged to have Recourse to Madness.

BUT Diego Velasquez stood firm to his Resolution, and Hernan Cortes wholly applied himself to hasten the Preparations for his Departure. The first Step was, to erect his Standard, with the Sign of the Cross, having this Inscription in Latin: Let us follow the Cross, for with this Sign we shall overcome. He appeared in the Habit of a Soldier, which became him well, and suited his Inclinations better. He imployed his own Stock liberally, and what he could borrow from his Friends, in the buying of Provisions, Arms, and Ammunition, in order to hasten the Departure of the Fleet, endeavouring, at the same Time, to draw together a Number of Soldiers for the Expedition, in which he did not find much Difficulty; for the very Name of the Enterprize, and the Fame of the Captain were so great, that in few Days they lifted three hundred Soldiers, among which were Diego de Ordaz, a principal Confident of the Governor, Francisco de Morla, Bernal Diaz del Castillo, (who has written the History of this Conquest,) and other Gentlemen, who shall be named in their proper Place.

THE Time for their Departure being come, Orders were given for the Soldiers to embark, which they did in the Day-time, the People all running to the Sight; and at Night, Cortes, accompanied by his Friends, went to take leave of the Governor, who embrac'd him in a very friendly manner, and the next Morning accompanied him to the Sea-Side, and saw him embark. Small Circumstances, and of little Importance in the History, and which might have been omitted, if they were not necessary to wipe off the Imputation of that early Ingratitude, with which they have reproached Cortes, who say, that he forc'd his Way out of the Port with the Fleet; so Antonio de Herrera reports, and those who copy after him, affirming, without any manner of Reason, that he called the Soldiers together from their Houses at Midnight, embarking with them by Stealth; and that Diego Velasquez, going out after him in the Morning, Cortes came up to him in a Boat, well armed, and gave him to understand, in a disrespectful manner, that he no longer had Regard to his Orders. We follow Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who relates what he saw, and is most probable: For it is not to be imagined that a Man so discreet as Cortes, (had he formed such a Resolution within himself,) would so publicly break with Velasquez, before he had got out of the Reach of his Jurisdiction; for he was obliged to touch with his Fleet in other Places of the same Island, to take in Men and Provisions, which he wanted. And tho' we should allow him guilty of this Indiscretion, it does not seem likely, that in so small a Town as was St. Jago at that Time, three hundred Men could be call'd from their Houses, and embark in the Night-time, Diego de Ordaz, and other Creatures of the Governor being of the Number, and that there should not be one among so many to give him an Account of so extraordinary a Procedure; or that those who so narrowly observed his Actions, should not awake at the Noise occasion'd by so great a Hurry. This surely must have argued a strange sort of Silence on one Side, and a very extraordinary Negligence on the other. We will not deny but that Cortes withdrew from his Obedience to Velasquez; but it was sometime afterwards, and for the Reasons that shall be shewn.

C H A P. XI.

CORTES sails with the Fleet to La Trinidad, where he gets a considerable Reinforcement of Soldiers. His Enemies obtain their Point of making Velasquez jealous, who uses his utmost Endeavours to stop him.

TH E Fleet sailed from the Port of Sant Jago in Cuba the Eighteenth Day of November, in the Year of our Lord 1518; and coasting along the North-Side of the Island towards the East, arrived in a few Days at the Port of La Trinidad, where Cortes had some Friends, who gave him a very kind Reception. He presently publish'd his Design, and Juan de Escalante, Pedro Sanchez Farfan, Gonzalo Mexia, with other considerable Persons of that Settlement offer'd to follow his Fortunes; and a little after, he was joined by Pedro de Alvarado, and Alonso Davila, who had been Captains in the Expedition of Juan de Grijalva, with four Brothers of Pedro de Alvarado, viz. Gonzalo, Forge, Gomez, and Juan de Alvarado. The Account of this Affair reaching to the Town of Sancti Spiritus, which was but a little distant from La Trinidad; there came from thence with the same Design of following the Fortune of Cortes, Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero, Gonzalo de Sandoval, Roderigo Rangel, Juan Velasquez de Leon, (a Relation of the Governor's,) and other Persons of Distinction, whose Names will be more properly remembred when we shall relate their Exploits. With this Reinforcement of Gentlemen, and a hundred Soldiers, who came from the two Settlements, the Strength of the Fleet was considerably augmented; and at the same Time Care was taken to buy up Provisions, Ammunition, Arms, and some Horses; Cortes assisting all who wanted, with his own Money; for he knew how to gain their Affection by an obliging Behaviour, by inspiring them with Hopes, and by maintaining his Superiority, in such a Manner, as to let them see he look'd upon himself at the same Time, as their Companion.

BUT

BUT scarce had he turned his Back to the Port of Sant Jago, when his Enemies began to cry out against him, talking already of his Disobedience, after the Custom of Cowards, who always attack the absent. Diego Velasquez hearken'd to their Discourse and tho' he seemed to be displeas'd, they discover'd in his Mind a Disposition to Jealousy, easy to be work'd up to an entire Distrust; to which End they made use of an old Man, called Juan Millan, who, notwithstanding he was very ignorant, pretended to the Knowledge of Astrology: A mad Man of another kind, and touch'd with a Madness of another Species. This Man, set on by others, having engaged Velasquez to Secrecy, acquainted him in mysterious Terms, that this Expedition would have a fortunate and an unfortunate Event; giving him to understand, that he had learned so much from the Stars. And tho' Diego Velasquez was a Man of sufficient Sense to know the Vanity of such Prognostications, nevertheless, as his Foible was Jealousy, this had such an Effect, that notwithstanding he despis'd the Astrologer, he began to be affected by what he said.

FROM such slight Beginnings sprung the first Resolution, which Diego Velasquez took to break with Hernan Cortes, by depriving him of the Command of the Fleet. He dispatch'd immediately two Couriers to La Trinidad, with Letters for all his Confidants, and express Orders to Francisco Verdugo, his Cousin, who at that Time was chief Alcalde of the Town, to dispossess him of his Captain-General-Ship; in a judicial Way, on Supposition, that his Authority was now revoked, and another Person named in his Room.

CORTES was quickly informed of this unexpected Accident, and without being discourag'd at the Difficulty of the Remedy, shew'd himself to his Friends and Soldiers, that he might know in what Manner they resent'd the Injury done to their Captain, and consequently how far he might depend on their Opinion of the Justice of his Pretensions.

HE found them all not only in his Interest, but resolv'd to guard him from such an Injury, tho' it should carry them to the last Extremity, of taking Arms in his Defence. And tho' Diego de Ordaz, and Juan Velasquez de Leon were less warm, as depending more upon the Governor, they were easily brought over to approve of that which they had not Power to hinder. Being thus secure, he went to visit the chief Alcalde, who already knew the Grounds he had to complain. He laid before him how far he might expose himself in supporting such a Piece of Injustice, by disgust'ing so many Persons of Distinction as followed him; and how much he had Reason to fear from the Fury of the the Soldiers, whose Affections he had gained, that he might the better serve Diego Velasquez; and that he already found it difficult to keep them within the Bounds of Obedience to him; speaking in such Terms, and with such a kind of Resolution; as appeared both modest and great. Francisco Verdugo approved his Reasons, and from a Principle of Generosity, being unwilling to become the Instrument of such Injustice, offered not only to suspend the Execution of the Order, but to write to Diego Velasquez to engage him to desist from a Resolution, which was now impracticable; by Reason of the Disgust it gave the Soldiers, and could not be executed without very great Inconveniencies. Diego de Ordaz, and the rest, who had any Interest in the Governor, offered to do the same, and wrote immediately. Cortes likewise wrote to him, complaining in a friendly Manner of his Distrust, without shewing how far he was dissatisfied, or omitting his ordinary Respect, as one who found himself obliged to complain, but desir'd to have no Reason to appear discontented or injur'd.

C H A P. XII.

Cortes sails from La Trinidad to the Havana; where he gets the last Reinforcement for the Fleet, and suffers a second Persecution from Velasquez.

HAVING taken these Measures, which at that Time seemed sufficient to quiet the Mind of Velasquez, Cortes consider'd of prosecuting his Voyage; and sending Pedro de Alvarado by Land, with a Party of Soldiers to take care of their Horses, and raise some more Men in the Settlements upon the Road, he sail'd with the Fleet for the Havana; the most Westerly Part of the Island, where it begins to incline towards the North. The Ships parted from La Trinidad with a favourable Wind; but at the coming on of the Night they separated from the Capitana, where Cortes was on Board, without observing as they ought the Course he stood, or perceiving the Error of their Pilots, until the Light of the Day discovered it: But being now advanced so far, they continued their Voyage, and arrived at the Havana, where the Soldiers went on Shore. They were kindly and liberally entertained by Pedro de Barba, at that Time Governor of the Havana, under Velasquez. They were all concerned that they had not waited for their Captain, or turned back in search of him; but their Discourses on that Occasion, went no farther than to furnish themselves with Excuses against his Arrival; but perceiving that he staid longer than they thought it was possible he could, unless some Misfortune had befallen him, they began to be uneasy, and divided into various Opinions. Some were for sending two or three Vessels in search of him amongst the neighbouring Islands; others proposed to name a Commander in Chief in his Absence; but others thought such a Proposition unseasonable. However, as no body commanded, every one gave his Verdict, and nothing was done. He who most insisted upon their naming a Commander, was Diego de Ordaz, who as Confident of Velasquez, expected to be preferred to the rest, and thought that by the gaining of this Point; he should stand fair to obtain that Post from Velasquez. But at last, after a Dispute of seven Days, Cortes safely arrived with the Capitana.

HIS Delay was occasion'd by the Fleet's passing over some Flats which are between the Harbour of La Trinidad and the Cape of St. Anthony, at a small Distance from the Isle of Pines, where the Capitana, as being the largest Ship, struck, and was in Danger of being over-set: An Accident which gave Cortes no little Trouble, but withal, served to raise his Reputation; for animating his Men, on View of the Danger, he gave such Orders as were necessary with great Presence of Mind, and used the utmost Expedition, without Confusion. His first Care was to put out his Boat, and take out the Ship's Lading, which was carried to a little Sandy Island hard by: By which Means he so far lightened her, as to set her afloat. After which, getting clear of the Banks, they took her Lading on Board again, and pursued their Course, having thus spent the seven Days, he was detain'd in this Place, much to the Advantage of his Reputation.

PEDRO de Barba lodged him in his own House, and he was received with great Acclamations. And here again their Numbers encreased; several of the Inhabitants and Gentlemen entring into the Service: Among whom were Francisco de Montejo, who was afterwards the King's Lieutenant of Yucatan, Diego de Soto del Toro, Garci Caro, Juan Sedeno, and other Persons of Distinction and Fortune; which very much added to the Reputation of the Enterprize, and compleated the Equipment of the Fleet. These Preparations took up some Days: But as Cortes knew not how to be idle the Time he staid there, he commanded the Artillery to be brought on Shore to be cleaned and proved, ordering the Cannoniers to observe exactly how far each Gun would carry; and as there was great Plenty of Cotton thereabouts, he directed the making a sufficient Quantity of defensive Arms. These were a kind of Quilts, in the Form of great Coats, which were called Escaupilles: Necessity inventing what Experience afterwards approved; when they found that a little Cotton, stitched between two Cloths, was a better Defence than Iron against the Arrows and Darts of the Indians; for they lost their Force by the weak Resistance they met with, and were likewise hinder'd from glancing from one Man to another.

AT the same Time he exercised his Soldiers in the Use of their Fire Arms and Cross-Bows, and the Management of their Pikes: He also taught them how to form a Battalion, and file off in order; how to Charge, and how to seize a Post; instructing them both by Voice and Example in the Rudiments of War; after the Manner of the great Captains of Antiquity, who by feigned Battles and Assaults, taught new Beginners the military Art. Which Practice, in Time of Peace, was in so much Esteem among the Romans, that from this kind of Exercise they gave their Armies the Name of Exercitus.

AT the same Time, and with the same Diligence, he went on with the rest of his Preparations: But when every one was rejoicing at the Approach of the Day appointed for their Departure, Gasper de Garnica, a Servant of Velasquez, arrived at the Havana, with fresh Orders to Pedro de Barba, expressly enjoining him to dispossess Cortes of the Command of the Fleet, and to send him Prisoner with a good Convoy; telling him how highly he had been displeas'd with Francisco Verdugo for letting him go from La Trinidad; and withal, giving him to understand how much he would risque in not complying with his Orders. He likewise wrote to Diego de Ordaz, and to Juan Velasquez de Leon, to be assisting to Pedro de Barba in the Execution of his Commands. But Cortes was advertis'd of what was doing from several Hands, and even by Garnica. They warn'd him to take care of himself, since he who first entrusted this Enterprize to his Conduct, was now going to discard him in a manner highly injurious to his Honour; freeing him from the Scandal of Ingratitude, by forcing from him the Favour for which he stood oblig'd.

C H A P. XIII.

Cortes resolves not to put himself in the Power of Velasquez: The just Motives of this Resolution: With what further pass'd till the Time of their sailing from the Havana.

ALTHOUGH Cortes was a Man of great Spirit, he could not help being shock'd with this new Attempt, which touch'd him the more sensibly, by how much the less it was expected; for he thought Velasquez had been satisfied with what every one had wrote to him on the Receipt of his first Command at the Town of La Trinidad; but being convinced of his Obstinacy by these repeated Orders, he began, with less Temper, to think of taking care of himself. On the one Side, he saw himself applauded and esteem'd by all who followed him; and on the other, degraded, and condemned to Prison like a Criminal. He acknowledged that Velasquez had expended some Money in fitting out the Fleet; but then the greatest Part of the Charge was born by himself and his Friends, and almost all the Soldiers were rais'd upon their Credit. He revolv'd in his Mind all the Circumstances of the Injury done him; and considering the Sights he had hitherto suffered, he grew angry with himself, and, not without Reason, accus'd his own Patience; for this Virtue passing beyond the Bounds assign'd to it by Reason, degenerates into Meanness of Spirit and Insensibility. He was also concerned for the Enterprize, which he foresaw would entirely miscarry if he quitted the Conduct of it; but that which most sensibly affected him, was the Wound given to his Honour, which (to those who understand its Value) is dearer than Life it self. Upon these Reflections, and this Occasion of Resentment, Cortes took his first Resolution of breaking with Velasquez. Whence it appears how little Justice Antonio de Herrera has done him, by placing this Breach in the City of St. Jago, at a Time when he had just received such singular Obligations. But we shall adhere to what is related by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, an Author not the most favourable to Cortes; for Gonzalo Fernandez de Oviedo affirms, That he acknowledged his Dependency on the Governor Velasquez, till upon upon his Arrival in New Spain he set up for himself, giving an Account to the Emperor of the Advances made by him in that Conquest.

THE Pains I have bestowed in clearing the Character of Cortes from these early Reproaches, must not be thought a Digression from the Subject: I am as far from flattering those whom I undertake to defend, as from hating others whom I condemn: But when Truth points out the Way to justify the first Steps in a Man's Conduct, who knew how to make himself so considerable by his Actions, I ought to follow the Path, and to be pleased with discovering the Certainty of that which serves to establish his Reputation.

I AM very sensible that an Historian should by no Means conceal what deserves Reproof; for Examples are as useful to make Vice abhorred, as to allure us to the Imitation of Virtue: But it argues a wrong Turn in an Author to put the worst Construction upon a Man's Actions; and to relate, as Truth their own ill-natur'd Conjectures, is a Fault of which some Writers are guilty, who have read Tacitus with an Ambition to imitate that which in Reality is inimitable, and fancy they enter into the Spirit of that Author, when they put such Interpretations upon Things, as favour more of Spleen than Art.

BUT to return to our History: Cortez judging that it was now no longer a Time to smother his Resentment, or take moderate Measures, which are generally Enemies to great Resolutions, resolved to provide for himself, and make use of the Force he was Master of as Occasion should require. To this End, before Pedro de Barba had determined to publish the Order he had against him, he made haste to send away from the Havana Diego de Ordaz, whose Fidelity he suspected very much, on Account of the Efforts he had made to be chosen Commander in Chief in his Absence: He therefore ordered him to embark immediately on Board one of the Vessels, and to make the best of his Way to Guanicanico, a Settlement situate on the other Side of the Cape St. Antonio, to take in some Provisions which he had directed to be carried to that Place, and there to wait his Arrival, with the rest of the Fleet. Cortez assisted in putting this Order in Execution with his usual Diligence and Calmness; and this Way disengaged himself from a Man who might have embarass'd him to a very great Degree. After which he went to visit Juan Velasquez de Leon, whom he easily brought over to his Interest, being himself not a little displeas'd with the Proceedings of his Relation, and withal more tractable, and of less Artifice than Diego de Ordaz.

HAVING taken these Precautions, he shewed himself to the Soldiers, acquainting them with the new Persecution that threatened him. They all offered him their Services, agreeing in the Resolution of assisting him, tho' differing in the Manner of expressing themselves; the Zeal of the Gentry appear'd as the natural Effect of the Obligations they had to him; but the rest declar'd in his Behalf with so much Heat, as to give Uneasiness to the Person in whose Favour it was design'd: And it appear'd by their Clamours and Threats on this Occasion, how much a good Cause may suffer in the Hands of the Multitude.

BUT Pedro de Barba apprehending the ill Consequences of not appeasing this Tumult in Time, went to Cortez, and appearing publickly with him, quieted all in a Moment, by declaring aloud, That he did not design to execute the Order of Velasquez, or to have any Share in so great an Injustice. This turned all their Threats into Acclamations: And he presently shewed the Sincerity of his Intentions, by publickly dispatching Gasper de Garnica with a Letter to Velasquez; in which he told him, That this was not a Time to stop Cortez, who was too well attended to let himself be ill treated, or to be reduc'd to Obedience by Violence. He represented to him, in the strongest Terms, the Ferment his Order had occasioned among the Soldiers; and the Danger the Town had been in by this Commotion; and concluded his Letter with advising him to regain Cortez by Acts of Friendship, adding new Favours to those he had already bestow'd, and relying on his Gratitude for what could not be compass'd either by Perswasion or Force.

THIS Affair being over, Cortez employ'd all his Thoughts to hasten his Departure; which he found necessary, in order to quiet the Minds of the Soldiers, who were disturb'd afresh by the Report that Velasquez resolv'd to come in Person, and put his Orders in Execution. It is said that he had form'd this Design; in which he would have run a very great Risque, without succeeding: For Authority is but a weak Argument, when oppos'd both to Reason and Power.

C H A P. XIV.

Cortez names the Officers of his Fleet; parts from the Havana; and arrives at the Isle of Cozumel, where he musters his Troops, and animates his Soldiers to the Undertaking.

Brigantine of moderate Burden having joined the ten Vessels which composed his Fleet, Cortez distributed his Men into eleven Companies, putting one on Board each Vessel; and named for Captains Juan Velasquez de Leon, Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero, Francisco de Montejo, Christoval de Olid, Juan de Escalante, Francisco de Morla, Pedro de Alvarado, Francisco Saucedo, and Diego de Ordaz, whom he had not sent out of the Way with an Intention to forget or disoblige him by not giving him an Employment. He reserved for himself the Command of the Capitana, and intrusted the Care of the Brigantine to Gines de Nortes. The Command of the Artillery he bestow'd upon Francisco de Orozco, a Soldier who had signaliz'd himself in the Wars of Italy; and chose for his chief Pilot Antonio de Alaminos, a Man of Experience in those Seas, having served in the same Quality in the two Voyages of Francisco Fernandez de Cordova and Juan de Grijalva. He drew up Instructions for his Officers; wherein, with singular Foresight, he provided against Contingencies; and the Day of Embarkation being come, they celebrated a Mass of the Holy Ghost with great Solemnity, at which all the Soldiers very devoutly assisted, recommending to God the Beginning of an Enterprize, the Success of which they expected from his divine Assistance; and Hernan Cortez, as the first Act of his Command, gave the Word St. Peter, thereby acknowledging him the Patron of this Expedition, as he had been of all his Actions from his Childhood. After which he ordered Pedro de Alvarado to sail for the North Coast, in search of Diego de Ordaz, in Guanicanico; and after they were joined to wait for the Fleet at Cape St. Antonio. The rest of the Vessels had Instructions to follow the Capitana; and in case they should be separated by contrary Winds, or any other Accident, to stand for the Isle of Cozumel, discover'd by Juan

Juan de Grijalva, which was but little distant from the Land they were in search of, and where Cortez propos'd to consider and resolve on that which should be most necessary for the Prosecution of their Enterprize.

In fine, they parted from the Havana the 10th of February, 1519. The Wind at first was favourable, but did not long continue so; for at Sun-Set there arose a furious Storm, which put them in great Disorder; and when the Night came, the Ships were obliged to separate, that they might not run foul on each other, and to put right before the Wind. The Ship that Francisco de Morla commanded suffer'd most, a Break of the Sea carrying away the Rudder, whereby he was in great Hazard of being lost. He fired several Guns as a Signal of Distress, which gave extreme Concern to the rest of the Captains; who, notwithstanding their own Danger, were alarm'd at his, and did all that was possible to keep near him; sometimes bearing up against Wind and Sea, and then again giving way to their Violence. But the Storm ended with the Night; and as soon as they had Light enough to distinguish Objects, Cortez was the first who came up with the Ship in Danger, the rest following his Example; and the Damage she had suffer'd was soon repair'd.

AT this Time Pedro de Alvarado, who was gone in search of Diego de Ordaz, discover'd by Day-break that the same Storm had forced him into the Gulph a great Way farther than he imagin'd: For in order to keep clear of the Shore, he was oblig'd to put out into the open Sea, as least dangerous. The Pilot found by his Compass and Chart, that he was fallen very far from the Course prescrib'd to him, and was at such a Distance from the Cape St. Antonio, that his Return would have been very difficult; wherefore he propos'd it, as most adviseable, to sail directly for the Isle of Cozumel. Alvarado left it to his own Choice; representing to him the Order of Cortez after such a Manner, as look'd very like dispensing with it. Hereupon they continued their Voyage, and arrived at the Island two Days before the Fleet. They landed with a Design to lodge themselves in a small Town near the Coast, well known to the Captain, and some of the Soldiers, since the Voyage of Grijalva; but they found it deserted: For the Indians, upon the first Notice that the Spaniards were landed, abandon'd their Houses, retiring farther within the Country, with what poor Moveables they had, such light Baggage giving no Obstruction to their Flight. Pedro de Alvarado was a young Man of Spirit and Valour, well qualified for any Enterprize where he received

Orders,

Orders, but of too little Experience to give them. He had a Notion that till the Arrival of the Fleet it would be a Shame for an Officer to be without Action; and therefore ordered his Men to march, and take a View of the inner Part of the Island, and at little more than a League's Distance they found another Town forsaken in the same Manner, but not so entirely unfurnished as the former; for here were some Cloaths and Provisions, which the Soldiers seized as Spoils of an Enemy; and in a Temple of one of their Idols they found divers Jewels, which served to adorn it, and some Instruments of Sacrifices, fram'd of Gold, mixed with Copper, of which they made Prize. This Undertaking did by no means promote the Service they were upon, but on the contrary, frighted the Indians, and cross'd the Design they had of gaining their Friendship. Pedro de Alvarado grew sensible, tho' something too late, that he had made a false Step, and retired to his first Post, having taken three Prisoners, two Men and a Woman, who not being able to escape, surrender'd without any Opposition.

THE next Day Cortez arrived with the whole Fleet, having sent to Diego de Ordaz, at Cape St. Antonio, to join him, suspecting, as it afterwards prov'd, that the Storm would hinder Alvarado from executing his Orders; and tho' inwardly well pleased to find him there in Safety, he commanded the Pilot to be imprisoned, and reprimanded the Captain very sharply for not having observed his Directions, as well as for his Presumption in marching up into the Island, and permitting his Soldiers to plunder. This Rebuke he gave in publick, with Design that it might serve as Warning to the rest. He presently called for the three Prisoners, and by Melchior, the only Interpreter he had in this Voyage, his Companion being dead, informed them how much he was concerned at what the Soldiers had done; and ordering the Gold and Cloaths to be restored, he set them at Liberty, giving them some trifling Presents for their Caziques, that these Tokens of Amity might induce them to lay aside the Fear they had conceived.

THE Spaniards encamp'd on the Sea-side, where they rested three Days, without marching any farther, that they might not occasion any Disturbance among the Indians. After which Cortez mustered his Army, and found that it consisted of five hundred and eight Soldiers, sixteen Horse; and of Mechanics, Pilots, and Marriners, an hundred and nine more, besides two Chaplains, the Licentiate Juan Diaz, and Father Bartholomew de Olmedo, a Regular of the Order of our Lady de la Merced, who accompanied Cortez to the End of his Expedition.

THE Muster being over, he returned to his Quarters, attended by his Captains and principal Soldiers; and taking his Seat in the Midst of them, he spoke in the following Manner:

“ WHEN I consider, my Friends and Companions, the good Fortune that has brought us together in this Island, the Obstacles and Persecutions we have surmounted, and the Difficulties which have oppos’d our Enterprize, I acknowledge the Hand of God in the Work we have undertaken, and promise my self Success, from Beginnings so remarkably favoured by his Divine Providence, in our Zeal for the Service of God and of our King; in Effect the same that has animated us to undertake the Conquest of these unknown Regions, and the Almighty in fighting our Cause, will fight his own. I have no Design to lessen the Danger of the Undertaking: We are to expect bloody Engagements, incredible Fatigues, and such Multitudes of Enemies, that it will require all your Valour to sustain their Attacks: Besides that, Want of Necessaries, Inclemencies of Weather, and difficult Marches, will exercise your Constancy, which is accounted a second-rate Valour, and shews as much Greatness of Spirit as the first; for very often in War, Patience brings that, to bear, which Force could not. By this Hercules gained the Name of Invincible, and his Exploits were called Labours. You have been accustomed to suffer and to act in these Islands, which you have already conquered: Our present Undertaking is of greater Importance; we must pursue it with answerable Vigour, and proportion our Resolution to the Difficulty of our Enterprize. Antiquity has painted the Temple of Fame upon the highest Part of the Mountain, and her Image upon the highest Part of the Temple; thereby giving to understand, that to find her, even after we have gained the Top of the Mountain, we must look higher. We are but few in Number, but Union adds Strength to Armies, and serves to multiply them: In our Agreement consists our greatest Strength. We must, my Friends, be all of one Mind to resolve, and as one Hand to execute: Our Interests should be the same, and the Glory of Conquest ought to be equally shar’d among us: The Valour of every one in particular, must establish the Security of all in general. I am your Commander, and will be the first to hazard my Life for the meanest of the Soldiers. I shall lead you on by Example to the Execution of my Orders; assuring you that I find in my self a Spirit sufficient to undertake the Conquest of a whole World: And this Hope is inspir’d by I know not what extraordinary Impulse, the most promising of all Prefages. To conclude, let our Words be suc“ceeded by Actions; and let not this Confidence of mine be “thought Temerity; since it is so well supported by you, from “whom I expect every Thing that is wanting in my self.”

THUS did he perswade and animate his Men; when Notice came, that some Indians were seen at a little Distance. And altho’ they came in separate Parties, and without Arms, Cortez commanded his Men to be rang’d in Order, without Beat of Drum, and to stand cover’d behind their Lines; till they saw whether they drew near, and with what Design:

C H A P. XV.

Cortez pacifies the Inhabitants of Cozumel: He establishes a Friendship with the Cazique; overthrow their Idols; begins to introduce the Gospel; and endeavours in vain to recover some Spaniards, who were Prisoners at Yucatan.

TH E Indians were in small Troops, and seem’d to be consulting among themselves, as if they watch’d the Motions of the Spaniards, whose Posture carrying no Appearance of Hostility, encourag’d the boldest amongst them to draw near by little and little; and these receiving no ill Treatment, were followed by the rest, so that some of them soon enter’d the Camp; where they were so favourably received by Cortez, and all besides, that they called to the rest of their Companions, insomuch that they came in great Numbers that very Day, and mingled among the Soldiers with so much Familiarity and Confidence, as scarce discover’d the least Surprise, but strongly argued that they were a People accustomed to converse with Strangers. There was an Idol in this Island extremely reverenc’d by the Barbarians, who were continually flocking to worship it from different Provinces of the Continent; on which Account the Islanders of Cozumel had a perpetual Commerce with People of divers Nations, Habits, and Languages, which made the Arrival of the Spaniards appear the less strange, or at least enabled them to conceal their Surprise.

AT Night they all retired to their Houses; and the next Day the principal Cazique of the Island came to visit Cortez, with a numerous, but ill appointed Equipage, delivering his Ambassy and Present himself. The General received him with great Humanity and Satisfaction; and, by his Interpreter, returning Thanks for the Visit, assured him of his own Friendship, and that of his Followers. To which the Cazique replied, That he accepted his Offers, and would make a good Use of them. They heard one, among the Indians who accompanied him, repeating after a bad Manner the Name of Castilla; and Cortez, whose Attention nothing could ever divert from pursuing his main Point, observed the Word, and commanded the Interpreter to inquire into the Meaning of it. Which Remark of his, tho' accidentally made, was of the utmost Importance in facilitating the Conquest of New Spain, as we shall see hereafter.

THE Indians said that our Men very much resembled certain Prisoners who were in Yucatan, Natives of a Country called Castilla. Which Cortez no sooner heard than he resolv'd to set them at Liberty, and engage them in his Service. Upon informing himself more particularly, he found that they were in the Power of some Indians of the highest Rank, residing two Days Journey farther within the Province of Yucatan. Cortez communicated his Intention to the Cazique, and asked him whether those were warlike Indians, and what Force would be necessary to rescue the Christians from Slavery. The Cazique gave him a very ready and reasonable Answer, telling him the securest Way would be to ransom them, for that endeavouring to release them by Force of Arms would expose them to the Hazard of being massacred by their Masters. Cortez embrac'd his Advice, with Admiration to find so much good Sense and Policy in the Cazique, whose Rank among Princes, tho' inconsiderable, must have taught him some Principles of what they call Reason of State. He immediately gave Orders to Diego de Ordaz to sail with his Vessel and Company to the Coast of Yucatan, by the shortest Cut from the Isle of Cozumel, which might be about four Leagues over; where he was to land the Indians appointed by the Cazique for this Purpose, who carried a Letter from Cortez to the Prisoners, and some Trifles for their Ransom, where Ordaz was commanded to stay eight Days, in which Time the Indians undertook to return with an Answer.

IN the mean time Cortez marched with all his Troops in a Body to take a View of the Island; not that he saw any Necessity for being on his Guard, but to keep the Soldiers together, and consequently to secure the Inhabitants from being insulted. He told told his Men, That they were an indigent People, unable to defend themselves; that the Sincerity they shew'd, entitl'd them to good Treatment in Return, and that their Poverty was such as gave no Temptation to Avarice. That they were not to expect from that small Spot of Ground any other Wealth than a good Reputation: "And do not think, (added he,) that the good Character you shall acquire here will be confined within the narrow Limits of this miserable Island; for the Concourse of Pilgrims, who, as you have been informed, are accustomed to resort hither from all Parts, will carry your Name to distant Countries, where the Character of Humanity and Justice will be of signal Use to facilitate our Designs; and by this Means we shall meet with less Opposition in Countries where more is to be gained." By such Discourses as these, he kept the Soldiers within Bounds. He was always accompany'd by the Cazique, and great Numbers of Indians, who suppli'd him with Provisions, and exchange'd Gold for Glass Beads, believing that they over-reach'd the Spaniards, and could never purchase those Toys at too dear a Rate.

AT a little Distance from the Coast stood the Temple of the Idol, so much rever'd by the Indians. It was a square Building of Stone, and of no contemptible Architecture. The Idol bore the Figure of a Man, but of a very terrible Aspect. All the Idols, worshipp'd by these miserable People, were formed in the same Manner; for tho' they differed in the Make and Representation, they were all alike most abominably ugly; whether it was that these Barbarians had no Notion of any other Model, or that the Devil really appeared to them in some such Shape; so that he who struck out the most hideous Figure, was accounted the best Workman.

'TIS said this Idol was called Cozumel, and gave to the Island the Name which it retains to this Day; but very improperly, if it be the same which the Devil took to himself, it must, thro' Inadvertency, have been made use of in our Maps, being contrary to all Reason. The Spaniards found a very great Concourse of Indians at the Temple, and in the midst of them a Priest, distinguished from the rest by a certain Ornament, or Part of a Covering, which scarcely hid his Nakedness. He seem'd to preach, and to persuade them to something, by a Tone and Actions extremely ridiculous; for he gave himself the Airs of a Preacher, with all the Gravity and Authority of which a Man dress'd after such a Manner was capable. Cortex interrupted him; and turning towards the Cazique, said to him,

“ That in order to maintain the Friendship between them, it “ was absolutely necessary for him to renounce the Worship of “ his Idols, and to influence his Subjects to do the same by his “ Example.” After which he took him aside with his Interpreter, and made him sensible of the Error of his own, and the Truth of the Christian Religion, by such Arguments as were accommodated to his Capacity, but so convincing, that the Indian was confounded, and would not venture to return any Answer, as having sufficient Understanding to be conscious of his own Ignorance. He recovered himself, and desired Leave to communicate this Affair to the Priests, who had Authority from him to decide absolutely in Affairs of Religion. The Result of that Conference was the bringing before Cortez that venerable Preacher, with others of his Profession, who all made loud Outcries, which, as explain’d by the Interpreter, were Protestations on the Part of Heaven, against them who should be so audacious as to disturb the Worship of their Gods, denouncing immediate Punishment upon the Attempt. Cortez was incens’d at their Menaces; and the Soldiers guessing his Intention from his Looks, immediately attacked their Idol, overturning the Altar, and breaking it in Pieces, with several other Idols of a smaller Size, placed in different Niches. The Indians were astonished at the Sight of this Destruction; but as the Heavens were serene, and the expected Vengeance delayed to come down, their Adoration was chang’d into Contempt; and they began to despise such suffering Gods. And this Passion was the first Effort that Truth made in their Hearts. The rest of their Temples suffer’d the same Fate; but in the Chief of them they built an Altar, whereon they placed the Image of the Virgin Mary, erecting at the Entrance a large Cross, made by the Carpenters of the Fleet, with equal Zeal and Diligence. The next Day they said Mass at that Altar, where the Cazique, accompanied by his Indians, assisted with a Silence that looked like Devotion; and perhaps it naturally flow’d from that Respect which is imprinted on the Mind by our Holy Ceremonies, or was a supernatural Effect of the ineffable Mystery contain’d in that Sacrifice.

THUS did Cortez employ his Time and his Soldiers, during the Term of eight Days, which he had allowed Diego de Ordaz to stay for the Spaniards, who were Prisoners in Yucatan; but he returned to the Island without bringing any Account either of them, or the Indians who were sent in quest of them. Cortez was highly displeas’d; but believing the Barbarians had deceived him by false Intelligence, in order to gain the Presents

he

he had sent for their Ransom, of which they seemed so extremely fond, he did not care any longer to delay his Voyage, or to impart his Suspicions to the Cazique. On the contrary, he took his Leave of him with great Civility, and Tokens of an entire Satisfaction, earnestly recommending to him the Cross and the Holy Image, which he trusted to his Care, expecting from his Friendship, that he would pay it all due Veneration, till he should be better instructed, and thereby more capable of receiving the Truth.

C H A P. XVI.

Cortez pursues his Voyage; but by an Accident finds himself obliged to return to the same Island. Geronimo de Aguilar, who had been Prisoner in Yucatan, arrives, during his Stay there, and gives an Account of his Captivity.

CORTÉZ put to Sea with a Design to follow the same Course which Juan de Grijalva had done before, and to discover the Countries from which he had retired, by too scrupulous an Obedience to the Orders he had receiv'd. The Fleet had the Wind a Stern, and all were overjoyed at the prosperous Beginning of their Voyage, when an unexpected Accident gave them great Uneasiness. Juan de Escalante fired a Gun, and the rest of the Commanders, casting their Eyes towards him, observ'd that he follow'd with Difficulty; and soon after tacked about, and stood for the Island. Cortez very well understood the Meaning of what he saw, and without staying to deliberate, immediately ordered all the Fleet to follow him. Juan de Escalante stood in need of all his Diligence to bring off his Vessel; for she sprung a Leak, and took in so much Water, that she was upon the Point of sinking when she approach'd the Shore; though they soon arriv'd, who came to his Relief. The Soldiers were landed; and the Cazique presently came down with his Indians, and seemed to be surpris'd at their sudden Return: But when they understood the Reason, they very chearfully helped to unload the Vessel; and afterwards assisted in repairing and careening reening it, managing their Canoes with great Dexterity, and performing singular Service upon this Occasion.

WHILE this was doing, Cortez, accompany'd by the Cazique, and some of his Soldiers, went to visit the Temple, and found the Cross and Image of the Virgin Mary in the same Place where he had left them; observing withal, to his great Satisfaction, some Signs of the Veneration paid them by these Barbarians, in the Cleanness of the Temple, and the Perfumes they had burned, besides Flowers and Boughs with which they had adorned the Altar. Cortez thanked the Cazique for the Care he had taken in his Absence. The Indian was pleas'd, and received the Compliments of the Spaniards, as if it had been an Instance of his extraordinary Conduct; that the Image and Altar had stood undemolish'd for no longer a Time, at the farthest, than two or three Hours.

THE Accident that thus retarded the Voyage of Cortez deserves a particular Remark, being an Event that may be rank'd with Things depending on Fortune, and yet carrying the Appearance of something more than of Hazard, or Chance. They who saw the Course of their Voyage stopp'd, and a Ship ready to founder, could consider it no otherwise than as a Misfortune which very ordinarily happens: But whoever will reflect that the same Time that was necessary for the refitting the Ship, was no less necessary for the Arrival of a Christian Captive at that Island, who had been Prisoner in Yucatan, sufficiently instructed in the different Languages of those People, to supply the Want of an Interpreter, and that he was afterwards one of the principal Instruments of this Conquest, cannot attribute all this to Fortune, but must own the Hand of Providence in a very extraordinary Manner.

THEY were four Days refitting the Vessel; and on the last, as they were going to embark, they discovered, at a Distance, a Canoe, which was crossing the Gulph of Yucatan, and stood directly for the Island. They quickly perceived that she was filled with armed Indians, and were surpris'd at the Diligence they us'd to come up, without shewing any Fear of the Fleet. Cortez being informed of this, gave Orders to Andres de Tapia to place himself in Ambuscade near the Place at which the Canoe was to land the Indians; and to discover their Designs. Andres de Tapia took his Post accordingly, where he could not be seen: But finding they came on Shore with their Bows and Arrows, he suffer'd them to pass by him a little Way from the Coast, and then cut off their Retreat. As soon as the Indians discovered him, they fled; but one amongst them stopp'd the rest, and advancing three or four Paces, pronounc'd with a loud Voice, in the Castillian Tongue, that he was a Christian. Andres de Tapia received him with open Arms; and full of Joy for his good Fortune, conducted him to the General, followed by the Indians, who appeared to be the Messengers left by Diego de Ordaz upon the Coast of Yucatan. The Christian had nothing to cover him, except just enough to hide his Nakedness. On one of his Shoulders he bore his Bow and Quiver; and over the other was thrown a Mantle like a Cloak, in one Corner whereof was tied our Lady's Office, which he immediately shew'd the Spaniards, ascribing to his Devotion the good Fortune of seeing himself again amongst Christians. He made his Compliments very awkwardly, not being able to forbear his new Manner, or deliver what he had to say, without intermixing with his Spanish some Terms that were not understood. Cortez caref'd him extremely; and covering him with the Coat he had on; informed himself in general who he was; and afterwards gave Orders to have him cloathed, and regaled. He published it among his Soldiers, as a singular Felicity both to himself and the Undertaking, that he had redeemed a Christian from Slavery, having no other Motive in View at that Time than pure Charity.

THIS Man was called Ferom de Aguilar, a Native of Ecija, where he had received Deacon's Orders; and, according to the Account he afterwards gave of his Adventures, had been near eight Years in that miserable Slavery. He was shipwreck'd in a Caravel upon the Flats of the Alacranes, as he was passing from Darien to the Island of St. Domingo, and escaping in the Boat with twenty more in Company, was driven upon the Shore of Yucatan, where they were taken, and carried to a Country of Caribee Indians, whose Cazique immediately cull'd out the best-fed amongst them, to offer them to his Idols, and afterwards to feast on the wretched Remains of the Sacrifice. One of those who were reserved for another Occasion, by Reason of their Leanness, was this Ferom de Aguilar: They used him very rigorously, but at the same Time inhumanly feasted him, that he might be in better Plight to furnish a second Banquet: Amazing Brutality! detestable to Nature, and not to be related without Horror! Aguilar made a Shift to escape out of a wooden Cage, in which he was confin'd; not so much to save his Life, as to seek another kind of Death: And wandering several Days at a Distance from all Settlements, without any other Nourishment than what the Herbs of the Field afforded, he fell into the Hands of certain Indians, who presented him to their

Cazique

Cazique, an Enemy to him from whom Aguilar had made his Escape. This Master used him with more Humanity, either in Contradiction to the other, or perhaps because he had a real Averſion to his Cruelties. Aguilar ſerved him ſome Years, running through different Fortunes in this new Slavery: For at firſt he oblig'd him to work beyond his Strength; but afterwards treated him better, being ſeemingly pleas'd with his Obedience, and eſpecially with his Modeſty; (of which the Spaniard gave ſome Proofs, more admirable, than the Tryals of it are decent to be related;) for there is no Temper ſo barbarous as to be wholly void of the Regard due to Virtue. Accordingly the Cazique gave him an Employment near his Perſon, and Aguilar in a little Time acquir'd his Eſteem and Confidence.

THIS Cazique dying, recommended him to his Son, under whom he held the ſame Employment, and found a favourable Occaſion of encreaſing his Credit; for the neighbouring Caziques making War upon him, he gained ſeveral Victories over them by the Valour and Conduſt of Aguilar, who thereupon became ſo great a Favourite both of Prince and People, and was in ſo much Authority when he received the Letter from Cortez, that he could, without Difficulty, treat for his Liberty, as the Recompence of his Services; and offer, as his own Gift, the Preſents which were ſent as his Ranſom.

THUS did Aguilar relate his Adventures; adding withal, that of the reſt of the Spaniard Priſoners, there remained alive only one Sailor, born at Palos de Moguer, called Gonzalo Guerrero; that he had communicated to him the Letter of Cortez, and endeavour'd to bring him with him, but without Effect, he having married a rich Indian, by whom he had three or four Children, and excuſing his Stay by his Love for them, pretending natural Affection as a Reaſon why he would not abandon thoſe deplorable Conveniences, which with him weighed more than Honour or Religion. We do not find that any other Spaniard, in the whole Courſe of theſe Conqueſts, committed the like Crime; nor was the Name of this Wretch worthy to be remember'd in this Hiſtory: But being found in the Writings of others, it could not be conceal'd; and his Example ſerves to ſhew us the Weakneſs of Nature, and into what an Abyſs of Miſery a Man may fall, when God has abandon'd him.

C H A P. XVII.

Cortez prosecutes his Voyage, and arrives at the River of Grijalva, where the Indians oppose his Landing: He engages them, and disembarks his Troops.

TH E Spaniards left that Island, the second Time, on the 4th of March, 1519; and without any Adventure worthy of Remark, they doubled the Point of Catoche, which, as we have already said, is the most easterly Part of Yucatan; and following the Coast, they came to the Road of Champoton; where the Question was put, in a Council held on that Subject, whether they should land, or no. Cortez inclined to the Affirmative, that he might punish the Indians for the Resistance they made, against Juan de Grijalva, and before that, against Francisco Hernandez de Cordova; and some Soldiers who had been present on both those Occasions, pushed by a Spirit of Revenge, supported his Opinion with extreme Warmth: But the chief Pilot, and the rest of his Profession, opposed it with unanswerable Reasons; for the Wind that favour'd the Continuance of their Voyage, directly oppos'd their landing in that Place: Whereupon they pursued their Course, and arrived at the River of Grijalva. There was no Occasion to deliberate upon the Point of landing here, for the good Treatment they had formerly received, from the Indians of Tabasco, and the Gold which at that Time they brought from thence, were two powerful Attractives to carry them ashore; and Cortez complied, for the sake of maintaining Friendship with the Inhabitants, although he had no Design to stay there many Days; for his Thoughts were continually bent on the Dominions of Motexuma, of which Juan de Grijalva had the first Account in this Province, it being his Opinion, that in this Sort of Expeditions, it was more adviseable to attack the Head than the Members, that he might encounter the greatest Difficulty with his whole Force.

As he had some Knowledge of this Place by the Experience of those who had been there before, he made a Disposition for entering entering the River; and leaving the larger Vessels at an Anchor, he embark'd all his Soldiers, well arm'd, in those of a smaller Size, and in the Boats; and was beginning to make the best of his Way against the Current, in the same Order as had been before practis'd by Juan de Grijalva, when he perceiv'd a considerable Number of Canoes with armed Indians, which covered both Sides of the River, supported by several other Bodies on the Shore. Cortez drew near in close Order, and commanded that none should fire, or shew the least Sign of Hostility. He follow'd in this the Conduct of Grijalva; for he was more solicitous to use the proper Means of succeeding in his Enterprize, than to avoid the Imputation of copying after another, well knowing what Risques they run, who value themselves upon finding out new Ways, with no other Design than to be distinguish'd from those who went before them. The Indians thought to put a Stop to the Spaniards by their horrible Outcries: And as soon as they were so near that what they said could be distinguish'd, Ferom de Aguilar found that he understood their Language, which was the same, or little different from that of Yucatan; and Cortez look'd upon it as the Work of Providence, that he was furnished with so good an Interpreter. Aguilar informed him, that the Words he understood were Menaces; and that the Indians were inclin'd to War. Upon which Cortez stopp'd, and commanded him to advance in one of the Boats with Offers of Peace. Aguilar executed his Orders; and returned in a very short Time with an Account, that the Indians were in great Numbers prepared to defend the Entrance of the River, and so obstinate in their Resolution, that they had very insolently refused so much as to hear him. Cortez had no Design to begin a War in that Country, or delay his Voyage, but finding that he was now engaged, he thought it would be dishonourable to retreat, and of dangerous Consequence to suffer this Insolence of the Barbarians to go unpunished.

THE Night overtaking them in a Country unknown, Cortez thought it most adviseable to lie by till Day; and disposing every Thing after the best Manner he could for the Engagement during this Suspension, he commanded all the Artillery out of the great Vessels, and his Soldiers had Orders to arm themselves with their Cotton Coats, for the better resisting of the Arrows; to which he added such other Directions as he judged necessary, without representing the Danger greater or less than it really was. He us'd all possible Precaution to secure the Success of this first Action of his Troops, well knowing of what Importance it was to begin an Enterprize well, and chiefly in War; which which would not only give Reputation to his Arms, but also add to the Valour of his Soldiers; the first Advantages being generally esteemed good Omens of those which are to come, and seeming to communicate to them their own happy Influence by some secret Virtue.

As soon as the Day appeared, the Vessels were drawn up in a Half-Moon, whose Figure lessen'd by Degrees, till it ended in the Boats, the River being large enough to allow sufficient Room for that Disposition. Their Advance was very slow, and seem'd to invite to Peace: But our Men soon discover'd the Canoes of the Indians, who waited their Coming in the same Order, and using the same Threats as the Night before. The General commanded his Men not to stir till they were attack'd; telling them all, That they ought to use their Shields before they employ'd their Swords, the Justice of this War depending on the Provocation to it. And being desirous to have Reason still more on his Side, he sent Aguilar a second Time to them with Offers of Peace; and to assure them, That this was a Fleet of their Friends, who design'd their Advantage, and came on the Foot of that Alliance which had been formerly made with Juan de Grijalva; that to refuse them Entrance would be a Breach of it, and would oblige the Spaniards to open their Way by Force of Arms; and that whatsoever Damage they should sustain, must be imputed to themselves.

THE Answer to this second Proposal, was the giving the Signal for the Attack. They advanc'd by the Favour of the Current near enough to use their Arrows, of which they discharged so great a Number, both from the Canoes and the Sides of the River, that the Spaniards were very much embarass'd in their Endeavours to cover themselves; but having received the first Charge according to Order, they returned it with so much Vigour, that the Canoes quickly left the Passage free, and the Indians, intimidated by the Deaths of their Companions, flung themselves into the River in great Numbers. Upon which, our Vessels approach'd the Shore without further Opposition, and landed the Troops on the left Side of the River; but in a Place so marshy, and covered with Brambles, that they found themselves engaged in a second Conflict; for the Indians, who lay there in Ambush, and those who escaped from the Engagement on the River united in one Body; and renewed the Attack with extraordinary Fury; the great Quantity of Arrows, Darts, and Stones, which they discharged, encreasing the Difficulty of the Morass: But Hernan Cortez, without ceasing to fight, drew up his Men; and those Ranks which were formed, making Head against

againſt the Enemy, covered the reſt of the Troops who were landing.

HAVING formed his Battalion in Sight of the Enemy, whoſe Numbers continually increas'd, he gave Orders to Captain Alonſo Davila to advance with an hundred Soldiers thro' the Wood, and poſſeſs himſelf of the Town of Tabaſco, the Capital of that Province, not far diſtant from the Place of Action, according to the Accounts of thoſe who had been upon the former Expedition. After which he immediately engaged that vaſt Multitude, forcing them back with equal Courage and Difficulty; for he was obliged very often to march up to the Knees in Mud: And 'tis ſaid, that in the Heat of the Engagement the General loſt one of his Shoes, and fought a great while without miſſing it; ſo thoroughly was his Attention employ'd upon the Buſineſs of the Day.

AFTER the Spaniards had paſſed the Marſh, the Indians gave Way, and diſappeared in an Inſtant among the Woods. Their Flight was owing in part to their loſing the Advantage of Ground, and in part to their Concern for the Town of Tabaſco, upon their diſcovering the March of Davila, as it preſently appeared by the great Multitudes that immediately repaired to the Defence of that Place.

THE Town was fortified with a kind of Wall generally uſed in the Indies, made of large Trunks of Trees, fixed in the Ground after the Manner of Palifades, and ſo plac'd together, that there was Room between to diſcharge their Arrows. The Compaſs was round, without any Traverſes, or other Defences; and at the Cloſing of the Circle, the Extremity of one Line covered the other, and formed a narrow winding Street, in which were two or three little Caſtles of Wood, which filled up the Paſſage, and wherein they were uſed to poſt their Centinels: A ſufficient Fortrefs againſt the Arms of this new World, where they were happily ignorant of the Arts of War, and of thoſe Methods to attack and defend, in which Mankind have been inſtructed, either by Malice or Neceſſity.

C H A P. XVIII.

The Spaniards gain the Town of Tabasco. They send out two hundred Men to discover the Country; and are driven back by the Indians. They shew great Valour both in the Engagement and Retreat.

CORTEZ arrived at the Town a little while before Alonso Davila, who was stopp'd by some Marshes and Lakes that he found in his Way. Without giving Time either to the Indians to recover themselves, or to his own Soldiers to reflect on the Difficulty, he ordered Davila to join him with his hundred Men, distributing among them proper Instruments for the breaking down of the Palisades, he gave the Signal to engage, only stopping to say, "My Friends, here we must lodge this Night: This is the Retreat of those whom you have already conquered in the Field. This weak Wall, that covers them, serves to make them a little more bold, but does not add to their Security: Let us follow the Victory we have begun, before these Barbarians forget their Custom of flying before us, or our longer Delay give them Time to recover their Courage." Having ended thus, he led them on to the Attack, inspired with a Desire to distinguish themselves.

THE Soldiers went on with equal Resolution, and turning aside a Shower of Arrows with their Shields, and even with their Swords, gained the Foot of the Palisade; the Intervals of which were of Service at that Time for the Discharge of the Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows, which quickly drove the Enemy from their Post, while some who were not engaged, overthrew the Palisades, and entered without Resistance, the Indians retiring to the inward Part of the Town; but had stopp'd up the Streets with other Palisades, where they again made Head, but with small Effect; for they were embarrass'd by their own Numbers; and while some were retiring from one Work to another, they put the rest, who would have fought, into Disorder.

IN the Center of the Town there was a large Space, where the Indians made their utmost Efforts ; but after a little Resistance, turn'd their Backs, and fled into the Woods in great Numbers. Cortez would not follow the Chace, that he might give his Soldiers Time to refresh, and the Fugitives to sue for Peace, during the Consternation of their Defeat.

THUS did the Spaniards gain Tabasco, a large Town, and well provided for Defence ; for they had sent away all their Families and Effects, and stored the Town with Provisions : So that the Covetousness of the Soldiers was disappointed ; but they found what was necessary. Fourteen or fifteen of them were wounded ; and amongst them, our Historian, Bernal Diaz del Castillio, whom we follow in what he reports of himself. It cannot be denied but that he was a valiant Soldier, and the Style of his History shews, that he understood a Sword better than a Pen. In this Engagement died a considerable Number of Indians. Of the Wounded there was no Account, because they took Care to carry them off, it being a Point of Honour amongst them to conceal their Losses from the Enemy.

THAT Night the Troops lodged in three Temples, situated in that Part of the Town where they last engaged. Cortez went his Rounds, and posted his Sentinels with as much Care and Exactness, as if he had had a Veteran Army of Enemies in view, well knowing that a Man can never be too circumspect in War, where nothing is more dangerous than too much Security. Caution is as necessary as Valour in a Commander.

THE next Day the Country appeared all forsaken and quiet ; for so far as the Eye could reach, there was not the least Sign of an Enemy, or any Noise to be heard : The neighbouring Woods were search'd, and found to be equally solitary. However, Cortez did not think it proper to march out of his Intrenchments. This great Stillness made him the more suspicious ; and he was still the more apprehensive when he understood that his Interpreter Melchior, who came from Cuba, had deserted that very Night, leaving his Christian Habit hanging on a Tree ; whose informations might be of ill Consequence to him among those Barbarians, as it afterwards appeared : For it was he that induc'd them to renew the War, acquainting them with the small Number of our Soldiers ; that they were not immortal, nor their Fire-Arms Thunder and Lightning, as they imagin'd ; the Dread of which had made them desirous of Peace. But his Crime did not go long unpunished ; for the same Barbarians, whom he had perswaded to take up Arms, being vanquished a second Time, reveng'd themselves on the Advifer

Adviser of the War, by making him a miserable Sacrifice to their Idols.

IN this Uncertainty, Cortez resolv'd to send out Pedro de Alvarado, and Francisco de Lugo, each with an hundred Men, by different Ways to view the Country, with Orders, if they found out an Army in the Field, to retire to their Quarters, without engaging with unequal Numbers. This was executed: And Francisco de Lugo, after little more than an Hour's March, fell into an Ambuscade of numberless Indians, who attacked him on all Sides; and that with so much Fury, that he was oblig'd to draw up his little Battallion into a Square, facing every Way. The Number of the Enemies encreas'd, and the Spaniards began to be tired, when it pleas'd God, that Alvarado, who had taken a different Road from his Companion, met with a March, which oblig'd him to turn aside, and brought him where the Report of the Fire-Arms gav'd him Notice of the Engagement. Alvarado march'd strait to the Noise, and discover'd the Enemies Squadrons, at a Time when our Men were in the utmost Distress. He advanced with all the Hast'e possible, under Cover of a Wood, and sending an Indian of Cuba to Cortez, to advise him of the Accident, drew up his Men, and fell upon the Enemy with so much Resolution, that the Indians surpris'd at the sudden Assault, left them the Passage free, and without giving the Spaniards Time to break them, dispers'd of themselves.

THIS Succour gave Francisco de Lugo's Soldiers Time to breathe; and as soon as the two Captains had join'd their Troops, and doubl'd their Ranks, they charg'd another Squadron of the Enemy, who stopp'd up the Way to their Quarters, that they might execute the Orders they had received to retreat.

HERE again they found Resistance; but, in fine, they made Way through them with their Swords, marching forward, tho' continually attack'd, and sometimes almost borne down; some fought while others took Breath; and whensoever they advanced to gain Ground, they were charg'd by the whole Body of the Enemy, who immediately, upon their facing about, got out of their Reach, retiring with the same Swiftnes that they were attack'd; the Motions of this great Multitude of Barbarians, from one Side to another, resembling the Rolling of the Sea, whose Waves are driven back by the Wind.

THE Spaniards had march'd about three Quarters of a League, continually plying their Weapons, when Ferdinand Cortez appeared at a Distance, who, upon the Notice given him by

Q

Alvarado,

Alvarado, was coming to their Relief, with all the rest of the Troops. As soon as the Indians spy'd him, they made a Halt, giving those they pursu'd Time to march off, and continued a while, looking on, either by Way of Threatning, or to signify that they were not afraid; yet afterwards they dispersed in several small Bodies, and left the Field to their Enemies. Cortez returned to his Quarters, without entering farther into the Dispute, because it was requisite to take care of the Wounded, being eleven in both Companies, of which Number two died, and this was reckon'd, at that Time, a very great Loss.

C H A P. XIX.

The Spaniards engage with a powerful Army of the Indians of Tabasco and the Parts adjacent. A Description of their Manner of fighting; and of the Victory obtain'd by Cortez.

SOME Prisoners were taken upon this Occasion; and Cortez order'd Ferom de Aguilar to examine them separately, to know what it was that those Indians founded their Obstinacy on, and what Forces they had to support it. Their Answers were somewhat different in their Circumstances; but they agreed in declaring, That all the Caziques of the neighbouring Countries were summon'd to the Assistance of those of Tabasco; and that the next Day a very powerful Army was to be drawn together to make an End of the Spaniards at once, of which Number the Body that had attack'd the two Companies under Francisco de Lugo and Pedro de Alvarado, was but a small Detachment. This Intelligence gave Cortez some Uneasiness; whereupon he resolv'd to call his Captains together, and advise with them what was proper to be done. He laid before them the Difficulties they lay under; their small Numbers, and the great Preparations the Indians had made to destroy them, without concealing the least Circumstance of what the Prisoners had declar'd. On the other hand, he ponder'd how far they were engaged, representing to them their own Valour, the Nakedness and Weakness of their Enemies, and how easily they had overthrown them at Tabasco, at their

their Landing; but above all he urged the ill Consequences of turning their Backs upon the Threats of those Barbarians; the Report of whose Boasts might spread as far as the Country they were going to, which would be a Disgrace of so much Consequence, that in his Opinion they must either entirely lay aside the Enterprize of New Spain, or proceed no farther till they had either established Peace, or subdu'd that Province; but that he only propos'd this as his Opinion, being resolv'd to act as should be judg'd the most convenient.

THEY very well knew that this Deference of their General was no Affectation; for he always valu'd himself much upon being fond of Advice, and submitting to that Opinion which was best, this being one of his chief Qualities, and a sufficient Proof of his Prudence: For true Judgment is not so conspicuous in forming an Argument, as it is in discovering the Force of another's. Upon this every one gave his Opinion; and they all agreed, that it was not then practicable to depart that Country till they had either reduced or chastis'd the Inhabitants. Whereupon Cortez proceeded to make the necessary Dispositions for that Enterprize. He ordered the wounded Men to be carried on Board, the Horses to be landcd, and the Artillery to be in a Readiness, and every Thing in Order by the next Morning, which was the Feast of the Annunciation of our Lady, memorable to this Day in that Country, on Account of the Success of that Battle.

As soon as it was Day, he contriv'd that all the Men should hear Mass; and giving the Command of the Foot to James de Ordaz, he and the other Commanders mounted a Horseback, and kept pace with the Artillery, which moved with much Difficulty, because the Ground was boggy and uneven. They drew near to the Place, where, according the Information of the Prisoners, the Enemy's Forces were to rendezvous, but found no one of whom they could get the least Account, till coming to a Place called Cimbla, little less than a League from their Quarters, they discover'd at a great Distance the Indian Army, so numerous, and extending so far, that the Sight could not reach to see the End of them.

WE will now describe the Indian Manner of Marching, and Engaging, which may serve upon all Occasions in this Conquest, the Art of War being almost the same among all the Nations in New Spain. Most of their Weapons were Bows and Arrows: The Bow-Strings were made of the Sinews of Beasts, or of Thongs of Deer Skin twisted; and their Arrows, for Want of Iron, were headed with Bones ground sharp, or Fish Bones. They used also also a kind of Darts, which sometimes they threw, and at others they managed like a Pike, as Occasion required. They had likewise long Swords, which they used with both Hands, as we do our Scimitars or Faulchions, made of Wood, in which they fixed sharp Flints. The strongest of them had Clubs, pointed with Flints. And there were Slingers, who threw Stones with great Force and Skill. The defensive Arms, which were only used by Commanders and Persons of Distinction, were Coats of quilted Cotton, ill-fitted Breast-Plates, and Shields of Wood or Tortoise-Shell, adorned with Plates of such Metal as they could get; and some made use of Gold as we do of Iron. The rest were naked; and all of them deformed with Dies and Painting of several Sorts, which they used about their Faces and Bodies; a Martial Sort of Ornament among them, practis'd to strike a Terror into their Enemies, applying Ugliness to look the more dreadful; as Tacitus relates of the Arii, a People in Germany, and remarks that an Impression on the Eye is the first Step to Victory. Their Heads were covered with divers Plumes of Feathers, like Crowns, raised on high to make them appear taller. They had also warlike Instruments, and Musick, with which they animated their Soldiers; and gave Signals; as Flutes made of great Canes; Sea-Shells; and a Sort of Drums, made of the Trunk of a Tree, so hollowed, and made thin, that they answered to the Stroke of the Stick a very displeasing Sound, but seem'd well suited to the Ears of those People. They formed their Battallions of great Numbers, without any Order; but had Troops of Reserve to relieve where there was Occasion. They made their Attacks with great Fury, and terrible Outcries, with which they thought to intimidate their Enemies, a Custom which some have accounted among the Brutalities of those Indians, without observing that it has been used by many antient Nations, and not despis'd even by the Romans: For Cæsar in his Commentaries commends the Cries of his own Soldiers, and blames the Silence of those of Pompey; and Cato the Elder was wont to say, that he had obtained more Victories by the Cries of the Soldiers, than by their Swords; both of them being of Opinion, that the Cries of the Soldiers proceeded from the Courage that was in the Heart. We do not argue whether this is a commendable Custom, or not, but only say, it was not so barbarous in the Indians, as to be without Example in other Nations. Their Armies were compos'd of Natives, and several Troops of Auxiliaries from the neighbouring Provinces, who came to the Assistance of their Confederates, who being led by their Caziques, or some Prime Indian of their Family.

Family. And they were divided into Companies; whose Captains led, but could scarce govern their Men; for when they came to engage they were directed either by Fear or Rage, as is usual among such Multitudes, being equally eager to attack, and to run away.

SUCH was the Martial Discipline of the Indians; and after this Manner that Army, or rather that Innundation of Men, which seemed to cover all the Country, advanc'd towards the Spaniards. Cortez was sensible of the Danger he was in, yet did not despair of the Success, but encourag'd his Soldiers with a chearful Countenance; and posting them under the Shelter of a rising Ground, which covered their Rear, and placing the Artillery where it could do most Execution, he struck into a Wood with his fifteen Horse, advancing far into it, in order to sally out, and flank them as Occasion should require. As soon as the Indian Army came up within a proper Distance, they made the first Discharge of their Arrows, and attack'd the Spaniards with so much Fury and Precipitation, that the Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows not being able to stop them, they were obliged to make use of their Swords. Great was the Slaughter made among them; and as they press'd on in Throngs, the Artillery destroy'd whole Companies; but they were so obstinate and conceited, that as soon as the Ball was pass'd they clos'd again, and cover'd the Loss they sustain'd, crying aloud, and flinging Handfuls of Dust into the Air, that the Spaniards might not see those who fell, or hear their Lamentations.

Diego de Ordaz repaired to all Parts, acquitting himself both as a good Captain and a valiant Soldier: But the Enemies being so very numerous, the Spaniards had enough to do to stand their Ground; and the Inequality of their Strength began to appear, when Cortez, who could not come sooner to the Assistance of his Men, by reason of some Brooks he had to pass, sally'd forth from the Wood, and fell upon all that Army, breaking through the thickest of their Battallions, and doing such Execution with his Horse, that the Indians wounded, and trod under Foot, thought of nothing but getting from them, throwing away their Arms, to be able to fly the better, and look'd upon them as an Obstacle to their Activity.

Diego de Ordaz was sensible that the Relief he had expected was come, by the weak Resistance of the Enemies Van-Guard, which began to face about by Reason of the Confusion in the Rear; whereupon, without Loss of Time, he advanced with his Foot, charging those who had almost oppress'd him with so much Resolution, that he oblig'd them to give way, gaining the Ground which they lost, till he came to the Place that Cortez and his Captains had clear'd. They all joined to make their last Effort, and were forced to mend their Pace, for the Indians were retiring in an hasty Manner, still making Head against them, casting their Darts, and discharging their Arrows. The which Manner of making off and withdrawing from the Fight in good Order they continu'd till the Spaniards coming up to them, and they finding themselves again attack'd, turn'd their Backs, and instead of retreating, fled outright.

CORTEZ commanded his People to halt, to avoid the shedding of more Blood, ordering only some Prisoners to be taken, whom he might make use of to set on foot a Treaty of Peace, which he chiefly had in View, looking on the War as no more than a Circumstance of his principal Design. Above eight hundred Indians remained dead upon the Spot, and the Number of the Wounded was very great. Of the Spaniards two Soldiers were killed, and Threescore and ten wounded.

THE Enemies Army, according to the Account we find, consisted of forty thousand Men; who, altho' they were naked Barbarians, as some Strangers have observed, yet had Hands to do mischief: And tho' they had wanted Courage, which is proper to Men, yet they could not be destitute of Fierceness, of which Brute Beasts are capable.

THE Action of Tabasco, in spite of Envy, has worthily deserved to be remember'd, by building a Church in Commemoration of the Day on which the Battle was fought, dedicated to our Lady of Victory, and giving the same Name to the first Town which the Spaniards built in that Province. The greatest Share of the happy Success must be ascrib'd to the Valour of the Soldiers, who by their Courage and Resolution, made amends for the Inequality of Numbers, tho' they had the Advantage of engaging in good Order, against an Army without any Manner of Discipline. Cortez opened the Way to the Victory, by breaking through the Body of Indians with his Horse: An Action, in which he shewed no less Conduct than Valour, the Contrivance before-hand, being as commendable as the Execution was afterwards. Nor can it be denied but that the Horses had their Part in this Action, the Strangeness of them terrifying the Indians; for they had never seen any before, and imagin'd them to be fierce Monsters, made up of half Man and half Beast, as the antient Heathens, who were less excusable in that Particular, fancy'd of the *Centaur*s. Some Authors relate, that St. James the Apostle fought for the Spaniards in that Battle upon a white Horse; and add, that Cortez, out of his particular particular Devotion, attributed this Relief to St. Peter. But Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who was present, utterly denies the Miracle; and declares, that neither he, nor any of his Companions either saw or heard of any such Thing. It is an Excess of pious Zeal to ascribe those Things to Heaven which succeed contrary to all Appearances, or Hope. I confess my self little inclin'd to this; but, in case of any extraordinary Accident, am willing to leave the immediate Operation to natural Causes: But it is certain, that those who read the History of the West Indies, will meet with many Truths that look like Hyperboles; and many Events, which it was necessary to make miraculous; that they might appear credible.

C H A P. XX.

The Spaniards make Peace with the Cazique of Tabasco, and celebrate the Festival of Palm-Sunday. After which they reimbarck, and continue their Voyage.

THE next Day Cortez caused the Prisoners to be brought before him, among whom were two or three of their Commanders. They discovered in their Countenances very great Fear, expecting to be treated after the same cruel Manner they used to treat the Vanquish'd. But Cortez receiv'd them with great Courtesy; and encouraging them with a chearful Countenance, and with Embraces, set them at Liberty, giving them some trifling Presents; and telling them at the same time, That he knew both how to Conquer, and Forgive. This Piece of Humanity had so good an Effect, that within a few Hours several Indians came to the Quarters loaden with Indian Wheat, Fowl, and other Provisions, designing by that Present to facilitate the Peace which they were to propose from the principal Cazique of Tabasco. The People who came on this Embassy, were of the meanest Sort, and made no Figure; which Ferom de Aguilar took Notice of; it being the Custom of this Country, upon all such Occasions, to send the principal Indians, adorned with all their Finery. And altho' Cortez was very desirous of Peace, he refused to admit their Proposals, as not coming in due Form; and sent back the

Indians

Indians, without so much as seeing them; bidding them, by his Interpreter, acquaint their Cazique, That if he desired his Friendship, he must send Persons of greater Account, and after a more decent Manner, to sollicite it. Cortez was of Opinion, that these Formalities, which support Authority, were not to be dispensed with, nor any Failings of Respect suffer'd in those who came as Suppliants; for in such sort of Affairs, the Manner of Acting is almost of as much Importance as the Thing it self.

THE Cazique acknowledg'd his Fault; and to make amends, the next Day sent thirty Indians of better Quality, with their Ornaments of Plumes and Jewels, wherein all their Pride consisted. They were followed by a Train of Indians, loaded with another Present of the same Kind as before, but in greater Abundance. Cortez gave them Audience, attended by all his Captains, affecting a grave and severe Countenance, because he thought it proper upon this Occasion to lay aside his natural Affability. They approached with very great Submission; and having perfum'd him with their Fire-Pans, in which they burnt Gum-Anime, Gum-Copal, and other sweet Scents, (a usual Ceremony when they would express the greatest Veneration,) they delivered their Embassy; which began with some frivolous Excuses for their past War, and concluded in earnest Entreaties for Peace. The General represented to them, after a very serious Manner, the just Causes he had to be displeas'd with them; to the end that on a View of their Faults, the Pardon might appear with greater Lustre, and the Peace which he granted them prove the more welcome. The Ambassadors received it with great Applause, returning extremely satisfied, and easily enriched with those slight Baubles they so highly valu'd.

AFTERWARDS the Cazique himself came to visit Cortez, accompany'd by all his Officers and Relations, bringing with him a Present of Cotton Cloths, Plumes of various Colours, and some Pieces of low Gold, more valuable for the Workmanship than for the Metal. He first made his Present, in order to be better received. Cortez caress'd him very much; and all the Visit pass'd in Compliments and Protestations of a reciprocal and sincere Friendship, all transacted by the Interpreter. The Spanish Captains treated the other Prime Indians, who accompany'd the Cazique, after the same Manner; and nothing appeared but Signs of Joy and Peace, which they explained by their Countenances and Embraces, to supply the Want of Language. The Cazique took his Leave, appointing another Day for an Interview; view; and to shew his Sincerity, and how much he confided in the General, he immediately ordered his Subjects to return with their Families to Tabasco, and assist the Spaniards in whatsoever they should want.

THE next Day he came again to the Quarters, with the same Attendance, and twenty Indian Women, well dress'd, after the Manner of the Country; telling Cortez he brought them as a Present, to serve him and his Companions, as being very skilful in dressing all Sorts of Meat, and in making Bread of Indian Wheat, which amongst them was always the Work of Women.

THEY ground the Grain between two Stones, like those we use for Chocolate; and when reduced to Flower, they made it into Paste, without having any occasion for Leaven. Then they spread and moulded it upon a sort of earthen Plates, which they put over the Fire, and baked it; this being the Bread with which God has abundantly supplied that new World, to make Amends for the Want of Wheat, and is very agreeable to the Taste, and not offensive to the Stomach. Among these Women came one principal Indian, well made, and of more than ordinary Beauty, who was afterwards baptized, and received the Name of Marina, and proved very necessary in the Conquest, as will appear in its proper Place.

CORTEZ went aside with the Cazique, and the Chief of those that followed him; and by means of his Interpreter informed them, That he was the Subject and Officer of a very powerful Monarch; and that his Intention was to make them happy, by bringing them under the Obedience of his Prince; to convert them to the true Religion; and destroy the Errors of their Idolatry. He enforced these Proposals with his natural Eloquence, and so much Authority, that the Indians were perswaded, or at least inclined to Reason. The Answer they gave was, That they should think themselves very happy in obeying a Monarch, whose Power and Greatness appear'd with such Advantage in the Valour of his Subjects. But as to the Point of Religion, they were more reserved.

THE Defeat of their Army by such a Handful of Spaniards, made them doubt whether they were not assisted by some Deity superior to their own. But though they could not resolve to confess it, their admitting the Doubt was no small Step towards the Truth.

THE Pilots press'd the Departure of the Fleet, which, according to their Observations, might be endanger'd by any longer Stay in that Place. And though Cortex was concerned to leave those People, before he had better instructed them on the Subject of Religion, he found himself obliged to think of his Voyage; and Palm-Sunday drawing near, he appointed that Day for embarking, so ordering it, that the Festival might be kept first, according to the Rites of the Church, Religion being always his first Care. To which End he raised an Altar in the Fields, which he covered with Boughs, in Form of a Chapel: A rustick, but decent Structure, and which was the second Church of New Spain. At the same Time they embarked their Provisions, and made all other necessary Preparations for their Voyage. The Indians assisted in all Things with an officious Diligence; and the Cazique, with his Captains attended Cortex with the greatest Respect and Veneration. Father Bartolome de Olmedo, and the Licentiate Juan Diaz, made use of this Opportunity to endeavour to bring them into the Way of Truth, pursuing what Cortex had so well begun, and taking Advantage of the good Inclinations they shewed in their Answers: But they only comply'd as Men that were subdu'd, being more inclin'd to receive another God, than to part with any of their own. They hearken'd with Pleasure, and seem'd desirous to comprehend what they heard: But Reason was no sooner admitted by the Will, than it was rejected by the Understanding. The most that the two Priests could effect at that Time, was to leave them in a good Disposition, and to perceive that it required more Time to prepare their rude and uncultivated Minds, to become sensible of their Blindness,

ON Sunday Morning there came an infinite Number of Indians, from the neighbouring Parts, to see this Festival of the Christians; and the Boughs, being blest with the usual Solemnity, were distributed among the Soldiers, who all marched in Procession with equal Modesty and Devotion: A Sight worthy of better Spectators; and which appeared with the more Lustre among those Infidels, as Light from the Opposition of Darknes. However, it had some little Effect upon those Heathens; for, as Aguilar afterwards declar'd, they cry'd out, This must needs be a great God, to whom such valiant Men shew so much Respect. They hit upon the Truth, but mistook in their Way of Reasoning.

WHEN Mass was done, Cortex took Leave of the Cazique, and the principal Indians; and having confirm'd the Peace with further Demonstrations of Friendship, he embarked, leaving those those People rather obedient, than subject to the King ; and as to Religion, so far in the Way to Salvation, as to desire, or at least, not to oppose the Means of obtaining it.

C H A P. XXI.

Cortez proceeds on his Voyage. The Fleet arrives at St. Juan de Ulua. The Soldiers land. The General receives an Embassy from Motezuma's Governors. An Account who Donna Marina was.

THE Monday after Palm-Sunday the Spaniards set Sail, along the Coast to the Westward: They came up with the Province of Guazacoalco ; and, without putting in at Rio de Banderas, or the River of Banners, had a View of the Island of Sacrifices, and other Places, which had before been discovered and forsaken by Juan de Grijalva ; the Soldiers who had served under him, telling their Comrades what Adventures they had met with in that Expedition : Cortez learning from the ill Success of that Enterprize, how to manage his own better, prudently making his own Advantage of the Errors committed by another. At length they arriv'd at St. Juan de Ulua on Maundy-Thursday at Noon ; and the Ships had no sooner anchored between the Island and the main Land, to shelter themselves from the North Winds, than they saw two large Canoes, which in that Country are called Piraguas, coming from the neighbouring Coast, with some Indians in them ; who drew near, without shewing the least Concern at the Fleet, discovering by this Security, and some Signs they made, that they came in a peaceable Manner, and desired to be heard.

WHEN they were within a small Distance of the Admiral, they began to speak in a strange Language, that Aguilar did not understand ; which much troubled Cortez, being concern'd to want an Interpreter when he had most Occasion for him, looking upon it as a great Obstacle to his Undertaking : But Providence, that brings about its Designs, by Ways that to Men appear casual, soon relieved him in this Distress : The Indian dian Woman, whom we shall now call Donna Marina, was not far from Cortez and Aguilar, and gueſſing by their Looks what they were diſcourſing, and what they wanted, ſhe told Aguilar in the Yucatan Tongue, that thoſe Indians ſpoke the Mexican Language, and deſired Audience of the General on the Part of the Governor of that Province. Cortez order'd them to come aboard; and laying aſide the Uneaſineſs he had been under, gave Thanks to God, acknowledging it was owing to his infinite Goodneſs, that, contrary to all his Hopes, he had found an Inſtrument whereby to make himſelf underſtood in a Country which he had ſo earneſtly deſired to ſee.

DONNA MARINA, according to the Report of Bernal Diaz del Caſtillo, was Daughter to the Cazique of Guazacoalco, one of the Provinces ſubject to the Emperor of Mexico, bordering upon that of Tabasco, and had, through ſome Accidents of Life, which are variously reported, been carry'd away in her Youth to Xicalango, a ſtrong Place upon the Confines of Yucatan, which was kept by a Mexican Garrifon. There ſhe was bred in a poor Manner, no way agreeable to her Birth, till by a freſh Miſfortune, either by Sale, or being taken in War, ſhe became a Slave to the Cazique of Tabasco, who made a Preſent of her to Cortez. In Guazacoalco, and in Xicalango, they ſpoke the general Mexican Language, and in Tabasco that of Yucatan, which Aguilar underſtood: So that Donna Marina underſtood both thoſe Languages, and explained to the Indians in the Mexican, what Aguilar told her in that of Yucatan; Cortez making uſe of this round-about Way of Speaking by two Interpreters, till ſuch time as Donna Marina had learn'd Spaniſh, which was not long; for ſhe had a very ready Wit, and ſeveral natural Endowments, which well agreed with the Nobility of her Birth. Antonio de Herrera ſays ſhe was a Native of Xaliſco, and that ſhe was brought to Tabasco from a very diſtant Country; for Xaliſco is on the other Sea, in the very furtheſt Part of New Galicia. Perhaps he took this Notion from Franciſco Lopez de Gomara; but we cannot apprehend, why in this, and other more important Matters, he does not follow the Account of Bernal Diaz del Caſtillo, whoſe Manuſcript he had at hand; for he follows and quotes him in many Parts of his Hiſtory. Donna Marina was ever a moſt faithful Interpreter to Cortez; and he confirmed her in his Intereſt by Ways not altogether ſo decent, for he had a Son by her, called Don Martin Cortez, who was made a Knight of St. Jago, in Conſideration of the Nobility of his Mother's Birth. This was no juſtifiable Method to ſecure her Fidelity; but ſome will have it to have been good Policy: However,

However, we are more apt to believe it was the ill Effect of an ungoverned Passion, notwithstanding the World is accustomed to give the specious Title of Reason of State, to that which is in Reality no other than human Weakness.

THE Indians being admitted to the Presence of the General, acquainted him, That Pilpatoe and Teutile, the one Governor, and the other Captain-General of that Province, for the great Emperor Motexuma, had sent them to know of the Commander of that Fleet, with what Intention he was come upon their Coast; and to offer him what Succour and Assistance he should stand in need of, in order to continue his Voyage. Cortez cared for them, gave them a few Baubles, and treated them with some Spanish Diet and Wine; and having thus obliged them, answer'd, "That he came as a Friend to treat concerning Matters of great Importance to their Prince, and all his Empire; for which Purpose he would meet the two Governors, and hoped to receive the same good Treatment from them, as others of his Nation had done the Year before." And having receiv'd some Information concerning the Greatness of Motexuma, his Riches, and Form of Government, he sent them away very well contented.

THE next Day in the Morning, being Good-Friday, the Spaniards all landed on the Shore nearest the Fleet: And Cortez gave Orders for landing the Horses and Artillery; and that the Soldiers, in Companies, should go and cut Fascines to entrench themselves, not forgetting to post the necessary Guards at the Avenues, and to build a sufficient Number of Barracks to shelter them from the Heat of the Sun, which at that Time was very great. The Artillery was planted so as to command the Country, and in a little Time they were all under Cover; for Teutile sent a great Number of Indians with Provisions, and Orders to assist the Spaniards in that Work: To whom they were of great Use, because they brought their Tools made of Flints, with which they cut Stakes, and fixing them in the Ground, interwove them with Boughs and Palm Leaves, forming the Walls and Roofs of a Lodging with much Ease and Diligence, being great Masters in this Kind of Architecture, as having in many Places no other Houses, and less barbarous in proportioning their Structures to what Nature requires, than those who build vast Pallaces, where still they cannot find sufficient Room for their Vanity. They also brought some Cotton Cloths, with which they covered the Officers Barracks, the better to defend them from the Heat of the Sun. In the best of them Cortez ordered an Altar to be set up, on which, when adorn'd,

he placed the Image of the Virgin Mary, and at the Entrance a great Cross, in order to celebrate Easter : For Religion was always his principal Care ; and in that he was equally zealous with the Priests. Bernal Diaz del Castillo assures us, that Mass was said on that Altar the same Day they landed ; but we do not believe that Father Bartolome de Olmedo, and the Licentiate Juan Diaz, could be so ill instructed, and so ignorant of the Offices of the Church, as not to know that Mass could not be said on Good-Friday. He very often depends too much upon his Memory : But what is most to be wondered at, is, that Antonio de Herrera should follow him, and almost copy him in this Particular, which, it is likely, proceeded from Inadvertency in both ; which we do not so much mention with a Design to censure them, as to make it a Lesson to our selves against taking the same Liberties.

CORTEZ understood by these Indians, that General Teutile had a considerable Body of Men in that Province, where he was endeavouring to confirm some Places, newly conquered, in their Obedience to Motexuma, the Civil Government of which was vested in Pilpatoe. And the great Care they took to send Provisions, and help the Spaniards in building of their Barracks, was not without Artifice, so far as could be gathered ; for they were very much terrified with the Account they had of their Success at Tabasco, which had now spread over all the Country, and believing their own Forces too weak, they made use of those Presents, and their Assistance, to oblige those whom they could not oppose : A Contrivance of Fear, which often makes those generous who dare not to appear as Enemies.

C H A P. I.

Teutile General of Motezuma's Troops, and Pilpatoe Governor of the Province, come to visit Cortez on the Part of Motezuma. An Account of what passed between them; and of the Painters who drew the Pictures of the Spanish Forces.

THEY passed this Night, and the following Day, in great Tranquility, but not the less upon their Guard, some Indians continually repairing to their Quarters; some to work, and and others with Provisions, which they truck'd for Baubles. Nothing extraordinary happening till Easter-Day in the Morning, when Teutile and Pilpatoe came with a very great Attendance to visit Cortez. He received them in equal State, surrounded by his Officers and Soldiers; for he thought it proper to make a Shew of Authority, when he was to treat with the Ministers of a great Prince. The first Compliments ments being over, in which the Mexicans exceeded, and Cortez endeavour'd to temper his Gravity with Courtesy, he carried them with him to the great Barrack, which served for a Chapel, it being the Hour for divine Service, ordering Aguilar and Donna Marina to tell them, that before he acquainted them with the Intention of his Journey, he was to comply with the Duties of his Religion, and recommend to the God of all other Gods the good Success of his Proposition.

IMMEDIATELY Mass was celebrated with all possible Solemnity. Father Bartolome de Olmedo officiated, assisted by the Licentiate Juan Diaz, Ferom de Aguilar, and some Soldiers, who understood how to sing the Service of the Church. The Indians looking on all the while with a kind of Astonishment, which tho' the Effect of Novelty, had the Air of Devotion. After Service was over, they returned to the General's Barrack, who entertained the two Governors at Dinner, and treated them with great Plenty and Ostentation.

THE Banquet being over, Hernan Cortez called his Interpreters, and in a grave and stately Manner told them, That his coming thither was to treat with the Emperor Motexuma on the Part of Don Carlos of Austria, Monarch of the East, touching Affairs of great Importance, not only to his own Person and Estate, but likewise for the Good of all his Subjects, for performing whereof, it was necessary for him to appear before his Royal Presence, and hoped he should be admitted with all the Civility and Respect that was due to the Greatness of the King who sent him.

BOTH the Governors seemed disturbed at this Proposal, and to hear it with great Dissatisfaction: But before they returned an Answer, Teutile ordered a Present he had provided to be brought into the Barrack; and about twenty or thirty Indians came in loaded with Provisions, fine Cloths, Feathers of several Colours, and a great Box, in which were divers Pieces of Gold, curiously wrought. Having made his Present with a good Grace and Civility, and finding it was well received and praised, he turned to Cortez, and by the Help of the same Interpreters, prayed him to accept that small Present from two Slaves of Motexuma's, who had Orders to entertain such Strangers as should come upon his Coasts; but that they must immediately think of prosecuting their Voyage, for they were to understand that to speak to their Prince was a Matter of great Difficulty; and that they thought they did him no small Piece of Service in that plain Dealing, before he went about to try by Experience how difficult a Matter it was that he intended.

CORTÉZ replied with some Heat, That Kings never refused to hear the Embassies of other Princes; neither could their Ministers, without very positive Orders, take upon themselves so bold a Resolution as to oppose it: That what belonged to them to do in this case, was to acquaint Moteczuma with his Arrival, for which he would allow some Time; but that they should likewise let him know that he came fully resolved to see him, and positively determined not to leave his Country, with Dishonour to one that represented his King. This bold Resolution of Cortez gave the Indians so much Uneasiness, that they durst not reply; on the contrary, they earnestly entreated him not to move from those Quarters till the Return of Moteczuma's Answer, offering to supply him with all Things that were necessary for the Support of his Soldiers.

AT this Time some Mexican Painters, who came in the Train of the two Governors, were very busy about drawing (upon Cotton Cloths, which they brought ready prim'd for that Purpose) the Ships, Soldiers, Arms, Artillery, and the Horses, and every Thing else that appeared to them remarkable, of which Variety of Objects they formed different Landskips, no way contemptible, either for Drawing or Colours.

OUR Bernal Diaz enlarges too much about the Skill of these Painters; for he saith they drew all the Captains, and that the Pieces were very like: But let that pass as an unlikely Hyperbole; for supposing them to have understood the Art of Painting, they had too little Leisure to observe the Nicety and Tedioufness that Imitation requires.

THESE Pictures were drawn by the Order of Teutile, the better to inform Moteczuma of that extraordinary Novelty; and to make that Account the more intelligible, they placed some Characters here and there, with which they seemed to explain, and give the Signification of the Picture. This was their Manner of Writing; for they had not attained the Use of Letters, nor were they acquainted with those Signs or Elements, invented by other Nations, to represent Syllables, and make Words visible; but they explained themselves by their Pencils, marking down material Things with their own proper Images, and the rest with Numbers and significant Signs, disposed after such a Manner, that the Number, Sign, and Figure formed the Idea, and fully explained the Meaning; an excellent Invention, (which shewed their Capacity,) like the Hieroglyphicks of the Egyptians, who boasted of their Wit in that, which was common among the Indians, and which the Mexicans used with such Dexterity, that they had whole Books of this Kind of Characters, and legible Pictures, in which they preserved the Remembrance of their Antiquities; and left to Posterity the Annals of their Kings.

CORTEZ had Notice of what these Painters were doing, and went out to see them, not without admiring their Skill; and being informed that they were painting upon those Cloths the Information which Teutile was to give Motexuma of what he had propos'd, and the Forces Cortez had with him to make it good, he, with his usual sprightly Wit, presently observed that those dumb Images wanted Action and Motion to express the Valour of his Soldiers; and therefore resolv'd to exercise his Men before them, to give the greater Life and Vigour to the Picture. To this End he order'd them to their Arms; drew up all his Men in a Body, caus'd the Artillery to be made ready; and telling Teutile and Pilpatoe that he would entertain them after the Manner of his Country, he mounted his Horse, with his Captains. They first ran some Races in Order, and then they skirmish'd in a martial Manner; at which strange Sight the Indians stood amaz'd, and like Men beside themselves: For observing the obedient Fierceness of those Beasts, they began to think there was something more than natural in those Men that managed them. Immediately, at a Signal made by Cortez, the Fire-Arms discharg'd, and soon after the Artillery: The Confusion and Astonishment of those People encreasing (as the Noise was repeated and augmented) with such various Effects, that some fell down upon the Ground, others began to fly, and the most Considerate affected Admiration, to dissemble their Fear.

HERNAN CORTEZ encouraged them, giving them to understand, that among the Spaniards these were military Diversions, as one who design'd to make his Arms appear the more formidable, by the Terror of such friendly Entertainments; and they presently perceived that the Painters were inventing new Figures and Characters, to supply what was wanting on their Cloths. Some painted the Spaniards armed, and drawn up in Form; others the Horses in their Exercise and Motion. They describ'd the Artillery with Fire and Smoke, and represented the very Noise with the Similitude of Lightning, without omitting any one of those frightful Circumstances, that most directly regard'd what their King most desir'd to understand.

IN the mean time Cortez return'd to his Barrack, with the two Governors; and after having presented them with some small Spanish Jewels, he prepar'd a Present of sundry Sorts of Curiosities to be sent from him to Motexuma; to which Purpose he made Choice of several neat Pieces of the most solid and brightest Glass; to which he added a Holland Shirt, a Cap of Crimson

Crimfon Velvet, adorned with a Gold Medal representing St. George; and Tapestry Chairs, which the Indians fo much feem'd to admire, that it was thought a fit Prefent for the Emperor. With this fmall Shew of Liberality, which, among thofe People, look'd like Magnificence, did Hernan Cortez foften the Difagreeablenefs of his Refolution, and took Leave of the two Governors, who were equally thankful, and troubled.

C H A P. II.

Moteczuma returns his Answer, with a Prefent of great Value; but refufes to grant the Leave they defired, to go to Mexico.

THE Indians halted at a fmall Difance from the Spanifh Quarters, and feemed to confult about what they were to do: For the Refult of this Stop was, That Pilpatoe remained there to obferve the Actions of the Spaniards; for which Purpofe, having fixed upon the Spot of Ground, they built feveral Cabbins, and in few Hours Time, the Morning difcover'd a confiderable Village built upon the Plain. Pilpatoe immediately provided againft the Suspicion this Novelty might produce, fending Word to Cortez, that he ftay'd in that Place to take Care of his Entertainment, and the better to fupply his Troops with Provilions. And tho' the Artifice of the Meflage was known, and that his Intentions were to keep within View of the Army, and watch their Motions, they conniv'd at their Diffimulation, making their Advantage of that very Pretence: For they fupplied them with all Neceffaries; and the Fear of having their Design fufpected, made them more punctual and careful.

TEUTILE proceeded to his own Quarters, and difpatched an Account to Moteczuma of all that had happen'd upon the Coafts, fending the Pictures which were drawn by his Orders, and Cortez's Prefent, with the utmoft Diligence. For this Purpofe, the King of Mexico had a great Number of Couriers diftributed along all the principal Roads of the Kingdom, chofen out of the fwifteft Indians, and bred them up to it carefully from little Children, allotting Rewards out of the publick Treafury jury to those who arrived first at the appointed Place: And Father Joseph de Acosta (a faithful Observer of the Customs of that Nation) says, That the chief School where these Indian Runners were bred, was the principal Temple of Mexico, where the Idol stood on the Top of an hundred and twenty Stone Steps, and those who first arrived at its Feet, gained the Reward: A notable Exercise to be taught in a Temple, and perhaps the least Indecency used in that miserable Place of Worship. These Couriers were reliev'd at every Town, like our Post-Horses; and made the greater Speed, because they succeeded one another, before they were tired; so that the first Force of the Carreer never ceased.

IN the General History, we find it reported, that Teutile himself carry'd his Dispatches and Pictures, and that he returned in seven Days with the Answer; too expeditious for a General: Nor doth it seem likely, the Distance being sixty Leagues, the shortest Way, from Mexico to St. Juan de Ulua: Nor can it easily be believed, that the Mexican Ambassador, whom our Bernal Diaz calls Quintalbor, came upon this Affair, or the hundred noble Indians, the Rector of Villabermosa pretends that attended him: But this is of no great Importance. The Answer came in seven Days, (a Number which all agree in;) and Teutile brought it to the Spanish Quarters. He brought with him a Present of Motexuma's; which loaded the Shoulders of an hundred Indians; and before he delivered his Embassy, he caus'd them to lay Mats, made of Palm-Tree Leaves, (which they call Perates;) upon the Ground, and place in Order upon them; as it were on a Buffet, the several Things of which the present was composed.

THERE were various Sorts of Cotton Cloths, well wove, and so fine, that they could not be known from Silk, but by feeling. A Quantity of Plumes, and other Curiosities made of Feathers, whose Beauty and natural Variety of Colours (found on rare Birds that Country produces) so placed and mixed with wonderful Art, distributing the several Colours, and shadowing the Light with the Dark so exactly, that without making use of artificial Colours, or of the Pencil, they could draw Pictures, and would undertake to imitate Nature. They next produc'd a great Number of Arms, Bows, Arrows, and Targets, made of extraordinary Woods. Two very large Plates, of a circular Form, the one of Gold, which by its embossing, represented the Sun; and the other of Silver, representing the Moon. And lastly, a considerable Quantity of Jewels, Pieces of Gold, some Precious Stones, Collars of Gold, Rings, Pendants, dants after their Fashion, and other Ornaments of greater Weight in the Shape of Birds and Beasts, so curiously wrought; that notwithstanding the great Value of the Metal; the Workmanship seem'd to exceed it.

As soon as Teutile had laid all his Wealth before the Spaniards, he turned to Cortez, and making a Sign to the Interpreters, told him, That the great Emperor Motexuma sent him those Things in return for his Present, and to shew how much he valu'd his King's Friendship; but that he did not think it convenient; nor was it possible at that Time, according to the present Posture of his Affairs, to grant the Permission he asked of passing forward to his Court: The which Refusal Teutile endeavoured to soften, by urging the Badness of the Roads, savage Indians, who would take up Arms, and obstruct his March, and other Difficulties, which plainly discovered the Intention; and in a covert Manner denoted, that there was a particular Reason (which we shall see hereafter) why Motexuma would not suffer himself to be seen by the Spaniards.

CORTEZ returned Thanks for the Present, with Words of much Respect; and answered Teutile, That it was not his Intention to be wanting in his Obedience to Motexuma; but that it was not in his Power to go back with Dishonour to his King, or to desist from his Demand, with all the Earnestness to which he was obliged, by the Reputation of a Crown that was honoured and respected among the greatest Princes of the World: Discouraging upon this Point with so much Life and Resolution, that the Indians durst not presume to reply, but, on the contrary, they offered to importune Motexuma a second Time; and he dismiss'd them with another Present like the former, letting them know, that he would expect the King's Answer without moving from that Place; but that he should be very much concerned if by any Delay, he should be obliged to go nearer to sollicite that Affair.

ALL the Spaniards admired Motexuma's Present; yet they had not all the same Notion of that Wealth, but reasoned variously; each maintaining his own Opinion, and carried on their Disputes with some Heat. Some pleas'd themselves with the Hopes of bettering their Fortune, promising themselves mighty Advantages from such a favourable Beginning; others by the Greatness of the Present, made a Judgment of Motexuma's Power, and of the Difficulty of the Undertaking. Many declar'd absolutely, that the Design of attempting so great an Affair with so few Men, was a Piece of Rashness; and most of them justified the Valour and Constancy of their Captain, looking on the Conquest as good as made: Every one judging of the Success according to his Inclination. Such are the Discourses and Reasoning of Soldiers, by which the Influence the Courage has over the Understanding is better discover'd, than by any other Means. But Cortez gave them leave to talk on, without discovering his Resolution, till he had taken Time to advise; and to keep his People out of Idleness, which is the best Way to make them less inquisitive, he ordered two Vessels out, to view the Coast, and search out some Port, or Bay, where the Fleet might be more under Shelter, (for in that Place they had but little Security against the North-Winds,) and some more fertile Piece of Ground, where they might be accommodated in Quarters, until the Return of Motexuma's Answer; making a Pretence of the Suffering of his People in that Sandy Soil, where the Sun reflected his Heat with double Force; besides that, they were persecuted by the Mosquitoes, or Gnats, which made even the Hours of Rest uneasy. He appointed Captain Francisco de Montejo to command in this Cruize; and pick'd out the Soldiers that were to bear him company, being those that seem'd most averse to his own Opinion. He ordered him to run along as far as he could, steering the same Course he had done the Year before with Grijalva; and that he should take notice of what Towns appeared along the Coast, without landing to view them, allotting ten Days for their Return. By which Means he order'd what he thought convenient, employed those that were troublesome, and entertained the rest with Hopes of Relief; being himself full of Care, and uneasy, considering the Greatness of the Design, and the Smallness of the Means; but resolving not to desist till he could see the very utmost of the Difficulty, and so much Master of himself, that he disguis'd his inward Concern with an easy and chearful Countenance.

C H A P. III.

Gives an Account how ill the Positiveness of Cortez was received at Mexico. Who Motezuma was. The Greatness of his Empire, and the Condition his Monarchy was in at the Arrival of the Spaniards.

CORTÉZ's persisting in his Resolution, gave much Trouble at Mexico. Motezuma was angry; and in his first Fury, propos'd to make an End at once of those Strangers, who presum'd to contend contrary to his Inclination. But afterwards, considering better, his Courage fail'd him, and Anger gave Way to Sorrow and Confusion. He summon'd his Ministers and Relations; they held several secret Councils; they resort'd to the Temples with publick Sacrifices; and the People began to be uneasy, seeing their King so much disturb'd, and those who managed the Government in such a Fright. So that they began to talk, with very little Reserve, of the approaching Ruin of that Empire, and of the Signs, and Presages, which (according to their Traditions) threatn'd it. But it seems necessary now, that we should shew who Motezuma was, and the State of his Monarchy at this Time; and why both he and his Subjects were in such a Consternation at the coming of the Spaniards.

THE Empire of Mexico was then at its greatest Heighth, having under its Dominion almost all the Provinces and Countries which had been discovered in North America, which were govern'd by Motezuma himself, and his petty tributary Kings, or Caziques. The Length of it extended, from East to West, above five hundred Leagues; and the Breadth, from North to South, in some Places, was two hundred; a Country populous, rich, and plentiful. On the East it was bounded by the Atlantick Sea, (now call'd the North Sea,) and stretch'd along all that great Space of Land between Panuco and Yucatan: On the West, it reach'd the other Sea, lying along the Asiatick Ocean, (or Gulph of Anian,) from Cape Mendocino, to the farthest Part of New Galicia. On the South, it stretch'd out farther, running along the South-Sea, from Acapulco to Guatemala; and went so far as to approach, by the Way of Nicaragua, to that Isthmus, or narrow Neck of Land, which divides, and at the same time unites the two America's. On the North, it reached out as far Panuco, including that Province; but was streighten'd considerably by the Mountains, or hilly Countries possessed by the Chichimecas and Ottomies, a barbarous People, without Government or Policy, living in the Caves of the Earth, or in the Holes of Rocks, feeding upon the Game they kill'd in Hunting, and the Fruits of such Trees as grew wild; but so dextrous in the Use of their Arrows, and in making their Advantage of the Craggs and Passes of the Mountains, that they had often withstood the whole Power of Mexico; being Enemies to Subjection, satisfied with not being conquered, and only desiring to preserve their Liberty, amongst the wild Beasts.

THIS Empire grew from a small Beginning to this vast Greatness in little more than an hundred and thirty Years; for the Mexicans naturally a warlike Nation, were always making way with their Arms among the rest of the Nations which inhabited that Part of the World. They were at first governed by a valiant Captain, who made them Soldiers, and sensible of Military Honour. Afterwards they chose a King, giving the supreme Dominion to the Person that had the greatest Reputation for Valour, being acquainted with no other Virtue but Fortitude; and if they knew any other they look'd upon them as much inferior. They always observed this Custom of chusing the greatest Captain for their King, without Regard to the Succession; tho' where Actions were equal, they preferred the Royal Blood; and the War, which made their Kings, by little and little enlarged the Monarchy. At first Justice supported their Arms, for the Oppression of their Neighbours forced them to an unblameable Defence; and Heaven favoured their Cause with the first Successes: But their Power afterwards encreasing, Justice was laid aside, and Tyranny took place.

WE shall see the Progress of this Nation, and the great Conquests they made, when we come to give an Account of the Succession of their Kings, and the principal Part of this History shall be less depending. Motexuma was the Eleventh King, (according to their painted Annals,) and the Second of that Name, a singular Person, and much respected among the Mexicans before he began to reign.

HE was of the Royal Blood; and in his Youth followed the Wars, where he gained the Reputation of a valiant Captain, by several Actions, which raised his Character. He returned to the Court, somewhat puffed up with these Flatteries of Fame; and finding himself applauded and respected as the first Man of his Nation, he entertained Hopes of grasping the Scepter at the next Election, behaving himself in his own Thoughts as one that was beginning to be crown'd, upon the Notion he had conceived of being King.
the

HE then plac'd all his Happiness in gaining Friends; to which End he made use of some Politick Arts, a Science which sometimes does not disdain to be found amongst the Barbarians, but is rather apt to make People so, when that which is called Reason of State gets the better of natural Reason. He affected great Obedience and Veneration towards his King, and extraordinary Modesty and Composure in his Words and Actions, always so carefully preserving the Gravity and Stateliness in his Countenance, that the Indians were wont to say, the Name of Moteczuma became him well, which, in their Language, signifies a surly Prince, though he endeavoured to temper this Severity, making himself agreeable by his Liberality.

HE also gained the Character of being very zealous for his Religion; a powerful Motive to captivate those who are taken with outward Shew: And to this End, he erected a little separate Pile in the most frequented Temple, after the Manner of a Tribune; to which he retir'd in the Sight of all the People, and staid there many Hours to attend that popular Devotion, or placing the Idol of his Ambition among his other Gods. He gained so much Reputation by these outward Appearances, that when the King his Predecessor died, the Electors gave him their Votes without any Opposition, and the People received him with great Acclamations. He made a Shew of refusing, suffering himself to be courted for that which he desired, and seemed to accept it with Reluctancy: But no sooner was he possess'd of the Imperial Throne, than all that Artifice which he had forc'd upon his natural Temper ceased, and he discovered those Vices that had been hitherto covered with the Shew of Virtues.

THE first Action by which he manifested his Pride, was the discarding of all those that belonged to the Royal Family, which, till his Time, was composed of midling People and Plebeians; and under Colour of greater Decency, he made his Nobles serve him, even in the meanest Employments of his House. He shewed himself but seldom to his Subjects, and only when it was necessary to his Ministers and Servants, looking upon Retirement and Melancholy as a Part of Majesty; and for those who obtain'd Leave to come into his Presence, he invented new Obeysances and Ceremonies, enlarging the Respect almost to Adoration.

He perswaded himself, that he had the entire Command of the Lives and Liberties of his Subjects, and exercised great Cruelties to perswade others to the same.

HE imposed new Taxes, without any publick Necessity, at a certain Rate on each Head of that vast Number of Subjects; and exacted it with so much Rigour, that even poor Beggars were not exempted from the miserable Oppression, bringing to his Treasury some mean Things, which were received, and then thrown away before their Faces.

THESE violent Practices made his People fear him: But as it is usual for Fear and Hatred to go together, some Provinces rebelled; to reduce the which, he went himself in Person; being so jealous of his Authority, that he would not suffer any other to command his Armies. Tho' it cannot be denied, but that he had a martial Inclination and Spirit: None resisted his Power, and maintained their Rebellion, except the Provinces of Mechoacan, Tlascalala, and Tepeaca. And he was wont to say, "He did not subdue them, because he wanted those Enemies to supply him with Captives for the Sacrifices of his Gods." A Tyrant, even in what he permitted, and what he did not punish.

HE had reigned fourteen Years when Cortex arrived on his Coasts; and the last was full of Presages, horrible, and wonderful Portents, which God either ordered, ordained, or permitted, to crush the Spirits of those fierce People, and render that great Work less difficult to the Spaniards; Providence, by Degrees, disposing all Things towards it by such unlikely Means.

C H A P. IV.

An Account of the several Prodigies, and Signs that were seen in Mexico, before the Arrival of Cortez; from which the Indians apprehended, that the Ruin of their Empire drew near.

AFTER knowing who Moteczuma was, and the Condition and Greatness of his Empire, it remains that we enquire into the Motives which caus'd that Prince and his Ministers so obstinately to oppose the pressing Instance made by Hernan Cortez: The first Contrivance of the Devil, and the first Difficulty in the Undertaking.

As soon as they had Notice of the Spaniards in Mexico, when Juan de Grijalva arriv'd upon their Coast the Year before, several Prodigies began to appear in this Country, and very astonishing Signs, which did in a manner assure Moteczuma that the Ruin of his Empire drew near; and greatly terrified and discouraged both him and his Subjects.

A FRIGHTFUL Comet appeared many Nights, in Shape like a Pyramid, which beginning at Midnight, advanc'd slowly to the highest Part of the Heavens, where it vanish'd at the Presence of the Sun.

AFTERWARDS, at Midday, another Comet, or Exhalation, was seen to rise in the West, or like a fiery Serpent with three Heads, which ran swiftly till it vanish'd in the East, scattering an infinite Number of Sparks that dy'd in the Air.

THE great Lake of Mexico overflow'd its Banks, and with an extraordinary Impetuosity drown'd the Country, carrying away several Houses, with a sort of Waves that look'd as if it had boil'd up; tho' there were no Floods or stormy Weather to which they could attribute the Motion of the Waters.

ONE of their Temples took Fire of it self, without their being able to find out the Cause of its burning, or Means to extinguish the Flame. The very Stones were seen to burn, and the whole Pile was reduced to little more than Ashes. Lamentable Voices were heard in the Air from different Parts, which foretold the End of that Monarchy; and the same was repeated

ed in the Answers of their Idols; the Devil pronouncing by them what he could conjecture of those Natural Causes which were in Motion, or as much as the God of Nature permitted him to know, who sometimes torments him by making him the Instrument of Truth.

SEVERAL Monsters of horrible Deformity, and never seen before, were brought to the King; which, in his Opinion, had a Meaning, and denoted great Misfortunes. And if they were called Monsters from demonstrating, or foreshewing Things to come, as the Ancients believ'd, who gave them that Name, it was not strange that they should be held for Prefages among those barbarous People, where Ignorance and Superstition went hand-in-hand.

HISTORIES make mention of two very remarkable Accidents, which extremely troubled the Mind of Motexuma; nor are they fit to be omitted, since they found Credit with Father Joseph de Aosta, Juan Botero, and other Writers of Judgment and Authority.

CERTAIN Fishermen near the Lake of Mexico, took a monstrous Fowl, of extraordinary Make and Greatness; and accounting it a Novelty, presented the same to the King. Its Deformity was horrible; and on the Head of it was a shining Plate like a Looking-Glass, from which the Sun reflected a sort of dim and melancholy Light. Motexuma observed it, and drawing nearer to take a better View, saw within it a Representation of the Night, amidst whose Obscurity were seen some Parts of the Heaven covered with Stars, and so distinctly represented, that he turned his Eyes to the Sun, as one doubtful of the Day: and upon fixing his Eyes the second Time on that seeming Glass, he spy'd instead of Night, what gave him greater Astonishment; for there appear'd to his Sight an Army of Men that came from the East, making a terrible Slaughter of his Subjects. He assembled the Magicians and Priests to consult about this Prodigy, and the Bird stood immoveable till many of them had tried the same Experiment; but then it got away, and vanish'd in their Presence, leaving them another Prefage in its astonishing Flight.

SOME few Days after a Country Man came to the Palace, one that was reputed a plain downright Man, who earnestly, and with mysterious Instances, press'd to have Audience of the King. He was introduced to his Presence after various Consultations, and having made his Obeysance, without any Manner of Disturbance or Fear, he spoke to him in his rustick Idiom, but with a kind of Freedom and Eloquence, which denoted denoted a more than natural Transport, or that the Words were not his own, but were inspired, saying, “Yesterday in the Evening, Sir, being upon my Farm, employed in the Improvement of my Land, I saw an Eagle of an extraordinary Magnitude, which stoop’d down furiously upon me, and, catching me between his Claws, carried me a great Way through the Air, till he set me down near a spacious Cave, in which was a Man in Royal Robes, sleeping amongst Diversity of Flowers and Perfumes, with a scented Composition burning in his Hand. I drew somewhat nearer, and saw your Likeness, or, perhaps, it was yourself; for I cannot affirm it, though, in my own Opinion, I had my Senses free. I was going to withdraw, being afraid, and full of Awe; but an imperious Voice stopp’d and frighted me a-new, commanding me to take the burning Perfume out of your Hand, and apply it to some Part of your Thigh that was uncovered. I refused, as much as I could, to commit such a Piece of Wickedness: But the same Voice, in a terrible one, forced me to obey. Upon which, Sir, without being able to resist, and being made bold by Fear, I applied the burning Composition to your Thigh, and you endur’d the burning, without waking, or making any Motion. I should have thought you had been dead, but that your quiet Breathing shewed you to be alive, the Repose expressing what was wanting in the Senses. Then that same Voice (which seemed to be formed in the Air) said to me; Thus sleeps thy King, given up to his Delights and Vanities, when he has the Anger of his Gods upon him, and so many Enemies, who come from the other Part of the World to destroy his Monarchy and Religion. Bid him awake, and prevent, if he can, the Miseries and Calamities that threaten him. Scarce had he pronounced these Words, which I bear deeply imprinted in my Memory, when the Eagle took me up in his Talons, and set me down on my Land, without the least Hurt. And thus do I perform what the Gods have enjoin’d me. Awake, Sir, for your Pride and Cruelty hath provok’d them: I say again, Awake, or take care how you sleep, since the burning Sting of your Conscience does not rouze you; nor can you be now ignorant, that the Cries of your People have reach’d Heaven before they came to your Ears.”

THESE, or such like Words, did the Peasant deliver, or the Spirit, that spoke in him, inspired him; and turned his Back with so much Resolution, that no Man durst stop him. Moteczuma (in the first Heat of his Passion) was going to order him to be killed; but was prevented by a new Pain he felt in his Thigh, where he found, and all saw the Mark of a fresh Burning: Which strange Sight astonish'd and made him thoughtful; but still resolv'd to chastise the Peasant, by sacrificing him to appease his Gods. These Admonitions proceeded from the Devil, and shew'd the Wickedness of their Original, as serving rather to provoke a Man to Anger and Obstinacy, than to bring him to the Knowledge of his Fault. But those Accidents might be improv'd by the Credulity of those barbarous People, from whose Relation the Spaniards had them in this Manner. We do not insist on the Nicety of the Truth; but do not think it unlikely, that the Devil should make use of such-like Artifices to set Motexuma against the Spaniards, and put what Stops he could to the Introduction of the Gospel. For it is certain, that he might (supposing the Divine Permission in the use of his Knowledge) feign or form those Phantoms and monstrous Apparitions, or even make visible Bodies, by condensing the Air with a Mixture of the other Elements; or, as often happens, he might impose upon the Senses, and delude the Imagination; of which we have some Examples in the holy Scriptures, which make what we find of the same Nature in prophane History the more credible.

THESE and other portentous Signs, which were seen at Mexico, and in several Parts of the Empire, had so broke the Spirit of Motexuma, and so dismayed the wise Men of his Council, that when the second Embassy from Cortex arrived, they concluded, that all the Ruin and Calamity with which they were threatned, was come upon them.

THE Consultations were long, and the Opinions various. Some thought, that those armed Strangers, coming at a Time of so many Prodigies, ought to be treated as Enemies; for that either to admit, or trust them, would be opposing the Will of their Gods, who had given them so many Warnings before the Blow, in order to avoid it. Others, either out of Moderation or Fear, endeavoured to obstruct the Breach, by extolling the Valour of the Strangers, the Force of their Arms, and the Fierceness of their Horses: And calling to Mind the Destruction and Slaughter they made at Tabasco, (of which War they had presently Notice;) and tho' they did not believe they were immortal, as the Fear of the Vanquished had given out, yet did they not think them Creatures of their own Species, but found in them some Resemblance of their own Gods, by their Management of Lightning, with which (in their Opinion) they fought, and by the Command they had over those Brutes, who understood their Orders, and fought for them.

MOTEXUMA

MOTEZUMA heard them ; and taking a Medium between both Opinions, resolv'd absolutely to deny Cortez the Liberty he ask'd of coming to his Court ; commanding him immediately to leave those Coasts ; and at the same Time sending him another Present like the former, to oblige him to obey. But if that was not sufficient to stop him, he resolv'd to use Force ; raising a powerful Army of such Men, that they should have no Cause to fear the like ill Success as that of Tabasco. For he was sensible they ought not to despise the small Number of those Strangers, in whose prodigious Arms, and extraordinary Valour, there appeared so many Advantages ; and more particularly when they arriv'd upon their Coasts, at so calamitous a Time, and when so many frightful Prodigies had appeared, as seem'd to magnify their Forces, since they merited the Care, and Warning of their Gods.

C H A P. V.

Francisco de Montejo returns, having discovered the Town of Quiabistan. Motezuma's Ambassadors arrive, and depart dissatisfy'd. Some Muttering happens among the Soldiers, who incline to Mutiny ; and Hernan Cortez makes use of Artifice to appease them,

WHILST Motezuma's Court was taken up with these melancholy Reflections, Hernan Cortes endeavour'd to get some Account of the Country ; to gain the good Will of the Indians who repaired to his Quarters ; and to encourage his Men, endeavouring to inspire them with the same great Hopes of which his own Heart assur'd him. At that Time Francisco de Montejo returned from his Voyage, having coasted some Leagues up to the Northward, and discovered a Town called Quiabistan, situate in a fertile Soil, and well cultivated, near an anchoring Place, or Bay, capacious enough, where, in the Opinion of the Pilots, the Ships might ride and be secure under the Shelter of some great Rocks, which broke the Force of the Winds. This Place was distant from St. Juan

de Ulua about twelve Leagues: And Hernan Cortez began to look on it as commodious for him to remove his Quarters thither: But before he came to any Resolution, Motexuma's Answer came.

TEUTILE, with the principal Captains of his Troops, came with their little Perfuming Pans, burning Gum-Copal. After the smoaking Courtesies and Ceremonies were over, Teutile ordered Motexuma's Present to be produc'd; which was somewhat less, but of the same Sort of Goods, and Pieces of Gold, as came with the first Embassy: All that they brought particular, was four green Stones, like Emeralds, called Chalcuites; and Teutile told Cortez, with a great deal of Gravity, that Motexuma sent those Stones to the King of Spain, as Jewels of an inestimable Value: But that was not much regarded, as coming from those who held Glass in such great Esteem.

THE Embassy was deliver'd in Terms resolute and disagreeable; and the Conclusion of it was, to dismiss their Guests, without giving them Leave to reply. Night drew on; and when Cortez began to return his Answer, the Ave-Maria Bell rung in that Barrack that served for a Chapel: He kneell'd down to say that Prayer; as did all the rest, after his Example. Their Silence and Devotion, struck the Indians with Admiration; and Teutile asked Donna Marina the Meaning of that Ceremony. Cortez understood it, and thought it proper to make use of that Opportunity of satisfying their Curiosity, to talk to them upon the Subject of Religion. Father Bartolome de Olmedo took it in hand, and endeavoured to suit his Discourse to their Blindness, giving them some small Light into the Mysteries of our Faith. He labour'd, with all his Eloquence, to make them understand that there was but One God, the Beginning and End of all Things: That in their Idols they adored the Devil, the mortal Enemy of Mankind; enforcing what he said with Reasons easy to be comprehended: Which the Indians listned to with some sort of Attention, as if they were sensible of the Force of Truth.

HERNAN CORTEZ made use of this Beginning to return to his Answer; telling Teutile, That one of the Points of his Embassy, and the principal Motive which his King had to offer his Friendship to Motexuma, was, the Obligation Christian Princes lay under to oppose the Errors of Idolatry, and the Desire he had to instruct him in the Knowledge of the Truth, and to help him to get free from the Slavery of the Devil, the invincible Tyrant of his Kingdoms, who, in Reality, held him a Slave and Vassal, tho', in outward Appearance, he was so powerful a Monarch. And that since he came from such remote Countries, upon Affairs of such a Nature, and in the Name of another more powerful King, he could not omit making new Efforts, and persevering in his Instances, till he should prevail to be heard, since he came on a peaceable Account, as appeared by the small Number of his Men, from which no Suspicion could be had of greater Designs. No sooner had Teutile heard the Resolution of Cortez, than he started up hastily, and with some sort of Impatience, between Anger and Confusion, told him, That hitherto the Great Motexuma had dealt courteously, treating him as a Guest; but that if he was resolved to continue in that Opinion, it would be his own Fault if he found himself treated as an Enemy, and without staying for any other Answer, or so much as taking Leave, he turned his Back, and went hastily out of his Presence, followed by Pilpatoe, and the rest of his Attendance. Hernan Cortez was a little startled at Teutile's Proceeding; but so much Master of himself, that turning to his People, more inclined to laugh, than to be concerned, "We shall see, says he, where this Challenge will end: For we know already how their Armies fight. And, for the most part, Threats are the Effects of Fear." And whilst they were gathering up the Present, he went on, saying, "These Barbarians should not so easily prevail with the Spanish Troops to retire; for those Riches are to be looked upon as Gifts out of Season, which shew more Weakness than Generosity." Thus did he lay hold of all Opportunities, to encourage his People. And that very Night (tho' it was not likely that the Mexicans should have provided an Army to assault the Quarters) the Guards were doubled, looking upon that which was possible, as likely to happen: For Commanders can never be too careful; and many Times, that which seems superfluous, is found to have been necessary.

As soon as the Day appeared, they found a considerable Alteration, which gave them some Disturbance; for those Indians which inhabited Pilpatoe's Cabbins, were retired within the Land, and not a Man appeared in all the Country: They also kept away, who used to bring them Provisions from the neighbouring Towns. These Beginnings of Want (rather feared, than suffered) were sufficient to make some Soldiers begin to be uneasy, looking upon it as very unadvised to think of settling in that Country; which Murmuring some Friends of Diego Velasquez took the Advantage of, and began to exclaim, saying, without any Reserve, in common Discourse, That Hernan Cortez had a Mind to destroy them, and ambitiously pursued a Design without a Force any way proportioned to the Undertaking: That the Intention of maintaining themselves with such a Handful of People in the Dominions of so powerful a Prince, would be judged rash by all Men: And that it was now necessary for them all to demand to return to the Island of Cuba, in order to refit their Fleet, and reinforce the Army, and so proceed upon that Undertaking with better Foundation.

HERNAN CORTEZ was informed of this, and making use of his Friends and Confidants, he endeavoured to enquire into the Opinion of the principal Part of his People; and found that he had on his Side the most in Number, and those of greatest Consequence. Upon which Security he suffered himself to be seen by the Malecontents.

DIÉGO DE ORDAZ was the Person who spoke in the Name of all the rest, and, with some Heat and Disrespect, told him, That the Soldiers were very much dissatisfy'd, and upon the Point of laying aside all Obedience, having been informed that he designed to prosecute that Undertaking; and that no body could blame them, for neither the Number of Men, Condition of the Ships, nor their Reserve of Provisions or Ammunitions of War, had any Proportion with the Intent of conquering so large and powerful an Empire: That no Man had so little Value for himself, as to submit to be cast away to please another's Humour; and that therefore it was now Time to consider of returning to the Island of Cuba, to the End that Diego Velasquez might reinforce his Fleet, and take this difficult Enterprize in hand upon better Advice, and with a greater Force.

HERNAN CORTEZ heard him, without seeming offended, as he might have been, both with the Proposal, and the Manner of delivering it; on the contrary, he answered him, (with a composed Voice and Countenance,) That he was obliged to him for the Advice, because he did not know that the Soldiers were dissatisfied, but rather believed they were well contented, and desirous to go on; for in that Enterprize none could complain of Fortune but those that were weary of being happy: First, a Voyage, without any ill Accidents, favoured by the Winds and Seas; Successes, such as their Hearts could wish; the remarkable Favours of Heaven at Cozumel; a Victory at Tabasco, and in that Country where they were, so much good Treatment and Prosperity; were not Prefages that could any ways discourage them. Nor was it very much for their Honour to desist from that Design before they had seen the Face of Danger, especially considering that Difficulties are wont to appear greatest at a Distance, and what the Imagination magnifies, vanishes as it draws draws near: But that if the Soldiers were already so dejected and fearful, (as he said,) it would be a Folly to depend upon them in so difficult an Enterprize; and therefore he would immediately consider of returning to the Island of Cuba, as had been proposed; confessing that the Knowledge of the private Soldiers being possessed with that Notion, did not make such an Impression upon him, as it did to find it supported by the Advice of his Friends. With these and other like Words he at that Time frustrated the Intention of those prejudiced Mutineers, without leaving them any thing to desire, till the Time should come to undeceive them; and with this dissembled Artifice, (a Subtlety which Prudence sometimes allows,) he made believe he gave way, that he might return with the greater Force to the Execution of his Designs.

C H A P. VI.

The Return to Cuba is given out. The Soldiers, prepar'd by Cortez, exclaim against it. The Cacique of Zempoala sues for his Friendship; and, in fine, they make a Settlement.

SOON after Diego de Ordaz and those of his Party had left Hernan Cortez, he gave Directions for publishing the Return to the Island of Cuba, and ordered the Captains should embark with their respective Companies on Board the Vessels under their Command, and be ready to sail the next Day early in the Morning: But no sooner was this Resolution published among the Soldiers, than those who were underhand gained to the General's Interest began to stir in the Affair, crying out, That Hernan Cortez had deceived them, making them believe they were going to settle in that Country; that they would not leave it, or return to the Island of Cuba; adding, that if he had a Mind to retire, he might do it with all such as were willing to follow him, for they could not want some Gentleman that would take upon him to command them.

THIS Clamour encreased so much, and was so well managed, that it brought over many of those that had been forced over, or perfwaded perswaded into the contrary Opinion; and Cortez's Friends, who had stirred up one Part, were obliged to appease the other: They commended their Resolution, and offered to speak to Cortez to suspend the Execution of his Order. And before this Ardour of theirs cooled, they went to him, attended by many of the Soldiers, in whose Presence they acquainted him loudly; That the Troops were upon the Point to Mutiny, on Account of his Order; complaining (or pretending to complain) that he had taken such a Resolution, without the Advice of his Captains. They laid it before him as a Dishonour, unbecoming Spaniards, to quit their Undertaking on the first Rumours of Difficulty, and to turn their Backs before they had drawn their Swords. They put him in Mind of what had happened to Juan de Grijalva; that all the Displeasure of Diego de Velasquez was occasioned by his not making a Settlement in the Land he discover'd, and maintaining himself there; for which Action he was treated as a pusillanimous Person, and the Command of the Fleet taken from him. Lastly, they told him what he himself had dictated, to which he hearkened as to something new: And suffering himself to be entreated and perswaded, he did what he desired, giving them to understand that he was convinced; and said he had been misinformed; that some of those who were principally concerned in the Success of the Undertaking, (whom he did not name, to make the greater Mystery of the Matter,) had assured him that all the Men cried out to leave that Country, and return to the Island of Cuba; and that as he had taken that Resolution (contrary to his own Opinion) to please his Soldiers, he would stay with much more Satisfaction, since he found them better disposed for the Service of the King, and to discharge the Duty of good Spaniards; but that they must know he would not have Soldiers against their Inclinations; nor was War an Employment for those that were forced to it; that whosoever thought fit to return to the Island of Cuba, might freely do it, and that he would immediately give Orders to provide Vessels and Provisions for the Voyage of all such as were not willing to follow his Fortune. This Resolution met with great Applause: Their Acclamations rung with the Name of Cortez: The Air was filled with Noise and Hats, after the Manner Soldiers are wont to express their Satisfaction: Some rejoiced because they were of that Opinion, and others that they might not be distinguished from those who approved the best. No one was so bold at that Time as to contradict the making of a Settlement; nor did those very Men, who had been the Malecontents, know what to say for themselves; but

Hernan

Hernan Cortez admitted of such Excuses as they could offer, without enquiring further into the Affair, laying that up for a better Opportunity.

It happened at this Time, that whilst Bernal Diaz del Castillo, with another Soldier, were Centinels at one of the Avenues, they spy'd five Indians coming along the Way next the Sea-side, towards the Quarters, and thinking them too small a Number to alarm the Army, they suffer'd them to draw near. They stopp'd at a little Distance, and gave to understand by Signs, that they came in a peaceable Manner with a Message to their General. Bernal Diaz went with them, leaving his Comrade in the same Post to observe if any more followed. Hernan Cortez received them very civilly, ordering them to be well treated before he heard them, and observed they seem'd to be of another Nation, as differing from the Mexicans in their Habit, though like them they had Rings in their Ears and Lips, with Jewels hanging to them; which, tho' they were of Gold, were a Deformity, instead of an Ornament.

THEIR Language also had a different Sound; till Aguilar and Donna Marina coming, it appear'd that they spoke in a different Idiom; and it was good Luck that one of them understood, and with some Difficulty pronounced the Mexican Language; by which Means, and not without some Trouble, it appeared, that they were sent by the Lord of Zempoala (a Province at a small Distance) to visit the Captain of those valiant People; whose great Actions in the Province of Tabasco had reached his Ears; and being a warlike Prince, and a Friend to brave Men, he desired his Friendship, very much magnifying the Value their Master had for good Soldiers, as one who doubted least they should attribute that to his Fear, which sounded better as the Effect of his Inclination.

HERNAN CORTEZ very courteously accepted of the good Correspondence and Friendship propos'd to him on the Part of their Cazique, looking on it as a particular Favour of Heaven, that this Embassy should arrive at a Time when the Mexicans had left him, of whom he was now grown jealous; and he put the more Value upon it, when he understood that the Province of Zempoala was in the Road to that Place, which Francisco de Montejo discovered from the Coast, whither he was then thinking to remove his Quarters. He asked the Indians some Questions, to inform himself of the Inclination and Forces of the Cazique. One of them was, how it came to pass, that they (being so near) had so long delayed coming with this Proposal. To which they answer'd, that those of Zempoala had nothing to do where the Mexicans appeared, whose Cruelties were ill brooked by those of their Nation.

THIS Intelligence was not disagreeable to Hernan Cortez; and diving farther into it with some Curiosity, he understood that Motexuma was a cruel Prince, abhorred for his Pride and Tyranny; that many of his People were subject out of Fear; and that some Provinces thereabouts were desirous to free themselves from his Yoke. This made his Power appear the less formidable; and several Sorts of Stratagems came into his Head, and Means of encreasing his Army, which gave him some sort of confused Encouragement. The first that occur'd, was to take Part with those afflicted People; and that it would not be difficult or unreasonable to form a Party against a Tyrant among his own Rebels. So he reasoned then; and it fell out afterwards accordingly, it being verified (by a fresh Example) in the Ruin of that so powerful an Empire, that the greatest Strength of a King consists in the Love of his Subjects. He immediately dismiss'd those Indians with some Gifts, in Token of Friendship; and told them he would soon go and pay their Master a Visit, in order to establish a Friendship, and stand by him, in case he should have any Occasion for his Assistance.

HIS Intent was to pass through that Province, and take a View of Quiabistan, where he had Thoughts of fixing his first Settlement, by Reason of the good Account he had received of its Fertility. But it behov'd him for other Ends, which were then in Agitation, to hasten the forming of his small Corporation in those very Quarters, altho' he was to remove the People to a Place more commodious. He communicated his Resolution with those Captains that were his Confidants; and having, by this Means, smoothed the Way for what he had to propose, he assembled the Men, in order to name the Officers of the new Government. At which short Conference, those who were acquainted with the Mind of Cortez prevailed; and Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero, and Francisco de Montejo, were appointed Alcaldes; Alonso Davila, Pedro and Alonso de Alvarado, and Gonzalo de Sandoval were Regidores: The chief Alguazil and Procurator-General were Juan de Escalante and Francisco Alvarez Chico. They also appointed the Clerk of the Council, with other inferior Officers; and having taken the accustomed Oath, to observe Reason and Justice, according to their Duty, for the greater Service of God and the King, they took Possession, and began to exercise their Employments with the accustomed Solemnity, calling their new Settlement by the Name of Villa Rica de la Vera Cruz, which Title it preserved in the same Place

Place where it was fixed, being called Villa Rica, in Remembrance of the Gold they had seen in that Country, and that of La Vera Cruz, in Acknowledgement of their landing there on the Friday of the Cross, or Good-Friday.

HERNAN CORTEZ was present at these Functions, as one of that Corporation, appearing then as a private Person among the rest of the Inhabitants : And tho' he could not easily lay aside that Kind of Superiority which is wont to consist in the Respect which others pay, he endeavoured to support the Authority of these new Ministers, by the Respect he paid them, thereby to induce the rest the better to obey them. Which sort of Modesty was founded upon Policy ; for the Authority of that Council, and the Submission of those that were under them, was of much Consequence to him, to the End that the Sword of Justice, and the Voice of the People, might supply the Defect of his Military Jurisdiction, which resided in him by Delegation from Diego Velasquez, and was, in Truth, revoked, and then stood upon too weak a Foundation to enter upon so difficult an Enterprize : A Defect which gave him great Trouble ; for he was obliged very often to dissemble with those that obeyed him, and was check'd in his own Resolution of making others obey.

C H A P. VII.

Hernan Cortez (in the first Council which was held at Vera Cruz) renounces the Title of Captain-General, which he held from Diego Velasquez ; and the Town and People elect him anew.

THE next Day in the Morning the Council met, under Colour of consulting about some Points relating to the Preservation and Augmentation of their new Settlement ; and soon after Hernan Cortez desired Admittance to propose an Affair of the same Sort. The Council rose up to receive him ; and he paying his Respects to the Magistracy of the Town, went and took his Seat immediately next to the first Regidor, and spoke to this Effect.

GENTLEMEN,

GENTLEMEN, “ Since, by the Mercy of God, we have in this “ Council the Person of the King represented, before whom we “ ought to discover our Hearts, and speak without Artifice, “ which is the Vassalage, wherein Men of Worth pay him the “ greatest Acknowledgement ; I come into your Presence, as if “ I appeared before his, without any other Design than that “ of his Service, in which sort of Zeal you will allow me the “ Ambition of not being your inferior. You are considering “ of the Means of establishing this new Corporation, happy al“ ready in depending upon your Direction. It will not be fo“ reign to the Purpose to inform you of my Thoughts and Re“ solutions, that you may not act upon any ill-founded Sup“ positions, which may oblige you to reason afresh, and take “ new Measures. This Town, which to Day begins to rise un“ der the Protection of your Government, is founded in a “ Country unknown, and full of People, where we have al“ ready seen some Signs of Resistance, sufficient to make us believe “ that we are engaged in a difficult Enterprize, where we shall “ stand in equal Need of Heads and Hands, and where very “ often Force must prosecute what Prudence has began. This “ is not a Time to depend on politick Maxims, or unarmed “ Counsels. Your first Care must be to preserve this Army, “ which serves you as a Rampart ; and ’tis my first Duty to in“ form you, that it is not at this Time in such a Condition as “ is requisite to entrust it with our Security, and our Hopes.
 “ You very well know, that I command this Army, without “ any other Commission than by the Appointment of Diego
 “ Velasquez ; which was recall’d soon after it had been given “ me. I lay aside the Injury he did me by his Mistrust, as be“ ing another Affair : But I cannot deny, but that the Military “ Power, which we so much stand in need of, is lodged at pre“ sent in me, contrary to the Inclination of him who gave it,
 “ and is founded on a Title of Force, which cannot conceal the “ Weakness of its Original. The Soldiers are not ignorant of “ this Defect ; nor am I so mean spirited, as to desire to “ command them with such Authority as may be questioned :
 “ Nor is the Enterprize we have in hand of such a Nature, as “ to enter upon it with an Army that rather obeys out of mere “ Custom, than for that it is under a reasonable Obligation of “ Obedience. It belongs to you, Gentlemen, to apply the Re“ medy to this Inconveniency ; and the Council which at pre“ sent represents our King, may, in his Royal Name, provide “ for the Government of his Troops, by chusing a Person free “ from such Exceptions. There are several Persons in this Army “ capable

“capable of that Employment ; and it will be much better “bestow’d on any one that may have another Sort of Au“thority, or that may receive it at your Hands. I, from this “Moment, quit all Right which could accrue to me by Posses“sion, and deliver back into your Hands the Title by which I “have held it, that you may consider with all imaginable “Freedom upon your Election : And I can assure you that all “my Ambition solely tends to promote the good Success of “our Undertaking ; and that I can, without offering the least “Violence to my self, take up a Pike with that Hand which “lays down the Staff of a General ; for if in War Men learn “to command by obeying, there are also Cases, in which ha“ving commanded, teaches them how to obey.”

THIS said, he threw upon the Table the Commission given him by Diego Velasquez, kiss’d the Truncheon, and delivering it into the Hands of the Alcaldes, retired to his Barrack. It is likely he was under no Uneasiness about the Event ; for he had so disposed Matters, that he adventured but little in the Resolution. But it must be confess’d, that the Remark was much like a Gentleman, and no less commendable the Art he used to supply the Defect in his Authority. The Council soon resolv’d upon the Election ; for some, it is likely, had considered what they were to propose, and others had nothing to reply. They all voted to admit the Resignation of Cortez ; but that he ought to be obliged to take upon him the Command of the Army again ; the Town giving him his Commission in the Name of the King, during the Time, and in the Interim, until His Majesty should otherwise order. And they resolv’d to communicate the new Election to the People, either to see how they would receive it, or that indeed they were satisfied of their Approbation.

THE People were called together by the Voice of a Cryer ; and the Renunciation of Cortez published, with the Resolution of the Council : And they received such Applause as was either hoped or concerted. Great were the Acclamations and Rejoicings of the People. Some congratulated the Council on their good Election : Others demanded Cortez, as if he had been denied them : And if any were of a contrary Opinion, they either dissembled their Content by Acclamations, or took care not to be remarkable by their Silence. This Work being over, the Alcaldes and Regidores went with the greatest Part of those Soldiers (who now represented the Town’s People) to the Quarters of Hernan Cortez, and acquainted him, That the Town of Villa Rica de la Vera Cruz had, in the Name of the King Don Carlos, with the Consent and Approbation of the Inhabitants, in full Council, chosen and appointed him General of the Army of New Spain; and in case it were necessary, did require and command him to take upon him that Post, it being convenient for the publick Good of the Town, and his Majesty's greater Service.

HERNAN CORTEZ accepted the new Command (for so he called it, to distinguish it even by Name from that which he had renounced) with great Civility and Respect; and now began to govern the Troops with another kind of Authority and inward Security, which had its Effect in the Obedience of the Soldiers.

THE Dependents upon Diego Velasquez resented this Alteration in a very indiscreet Manner; for they could not disguise their Vexation, nor would they give way to the Current which they were not able to stem. They endeavoured to invalidate the Authority of the Council; and cast Reflections on Cortez, blaming his Ambition; and talking with Contempt of those that were deceived, and did not know it. And as Scandal has its hidden Poison, and an unknown Power over the Inclination of the Ears, it spread in their Conversations, where there wanted not some who hearken'd to, and endeavoured to foment it.

HERNAN CORTEZ did all that lay in his Power to remedy this Inconvenience in the Beginning, apprehending it might occasion some Commotion among People who were easily stirred up. He had already found by Experience how little his Patience avail'd, and that gentle Means produc'd contrary Effects, rendering the Evil worse; and therefore resolv'd to make use of Severity, which generally has the best Effect upon the insolent. He ordered Diego de Ordaz, Pedro Escudero, and Juan Velasquez de Leon, to be seized, publickly carried on Board the Fleet, and put in Irons. This Action struck a great Terror into the Troops; and it was his Design to improve it, declaring in a very positive and resolute Manner, that he seized them as seditious Persons, and Disturbers of the publick Peace; and that he would proceed against them, and make them pay for their Obstinacy with the Loss of their Heads. In which Severity, whether real or affected, he continu'd some Days, without proceeding to the Rigor of Justice: For he rather desired to reform, than to punish them. At first he suffer'd none to go near them; but afterwards he, by way of Toleration, permitted it, artfully making use of this Permission, to make way for some of his Confidants to endeavour to reduce, and bring them to Reason; which in Time they compassed, he suffering himself to be pacified with such a Shew of Authority, that he made them his Friends; and they stood by him in all the Accidents which afterwards befel him.

C H A P. VIII.

The Spaniards march; and the Fleet sails for Quiabiflan. They enter Zempoala in their Way; where the Cazique makes them welcome; and they receive fresh Accounts of the Tyrannies of Motezuma.

AS soon as the aforesaid Persons were imprison'd, Pedro de Alvarado was ordered out with a hundred Men, to view the Country, and bring in some Provisions; for now they began to be sensible of the Want of those Indians who used to provide the Army. They were ordered to commit no Hostility, nor make use of their Arms but in case of Necessity, if they should be obliged to defend themselves, or much provoked; and he had the good Luck to perform it in that Manner, with little Trouble. At a small Distance he came into some Habitations; or Farms, the Inhabitants whereof left all they had to him, and fled into the Woods. They found the Houses deserted, but well provided with Hens, Indian Corn, and other Provisions; and without doing any Damage, either to the Houses or their Furniture, the Soldiers took what they had Occasion for, as acquired by the Right of Necessity, and returned to their Quarters, loaded and well pleased.

HERNAN CORTEZ immediately disposed his March, as he had resolved, and the Ships set sail for the Bay of Quiabiflan; and he followed by Land, taking the Road of Zempoala, keeping the Coast on his Right Hand, and sending out a Party before to discover the Country, providing very considerably against all Accidents which might happen in a Country, where Security might be blamed as a Neglect.

IN few Hours they reached the River of Zempoala, (near which they afterwards founded the City of Vera Cruz;) and by reason it run deep, they were obliged to get some Canoes, and other Vessels of Fishermen, which they found upon the Shore, in which the Soldiers passed over, making their Horses swim.

HAVING

HAVING overcome this Difficulty, they arrived at some Houses in the District of Zempoala, (as they afterwards found;) and they took it for no good Sign to find them, not only forsaken by the Indians, but also without either Furniture or Provisions, betokening a premeditated and concerted Flight; only they left in their Temples several Idols, with various Instruments, or Knives made of Flint, and some miserable Remains of human Victims, scattered upon the Ground, which at the same Time mov'd Compassion and Horror.

HERE they first saw (and not without Admiration) the Mexican Books, of which we have already made mention. There were three or four of them in the Temples, which, 'twas thought, contained the Rites of their Religion, made of a long Skin, or varnished Cloth, which they folded in equal Doublings, so that every Fold made a Leaf, and, altogether, made up the Volume, like ours to the outward Appearance; and for the Letters, they were written or painted with that kind of Imagery or Cyphers used by the Painters of Teutile.

THE Army was presently quartered in the best Houses, and passed the Night somewhat incommodiously, their Arms in Readiness, with Centinels at a convenient Distance, by whose Watching, the rest might take some rest.

THE next Day they continu'd their March in the same Order, along the most beaten Road, which turned off to the Westward, leading further from the Shore; and during the whole Morning they saw no Person, of whom to gain Intelligence, nor ought but a suspicious Solitude, whose very Silence made a Noise in their Imagination, and gave them Uneasiness; till entering into some very delightful Meadows, they discovered twelve Indians, who were coming in search of Hernan Cortez, with a Present of Hens, and Bread made of Indian Corn, sent him by the Caziq̄ue of Zempoala, very earnestly entreating him not to fail of coming to his Town, where he had provided Quarters for his Men, and where he should be more plentifully entertained.

BY these Indians he understood that the Caziq̄ue's Residence was at a Town one Sun's Distance from that Place, which, in their Language, signified the same as one Day's March; for they understood not the Division of Leagues, but measured Distance by Suns, counting the Time, and not the Paces.

CORTEZ dismiss'd six of the Indians with many Thanks for the Present and Offers, keeping the other six to shew him the Way, and ask them some Questions; for he was not entirely satisfied satisfied of the Sincerity of this kind Treatment, which being so much unlooked for, seemed the less to be depended on.

THAT Night they halted in a small Village thin of Inhabitants, who seemed very desirous to entertain the Spaniards well: And by the Behaviour of these People, the Spaniards judged that their Nation was inclined to Peace; nor were they deceived in their Opinions, tho' People are easily inclined to flatter themselves. In the Morning the Army moved towards Zempoala, following the Guides with all necessary Caution; and at the Declining of the Day (being now near the Town) there came twenty Indians forth to receive Cortez, well dressed after their Fashion; who, after having pay'd their Respects, said, Their Caziq̄ue did not come out with them, by reason of some Impediment, and had therefore sent them to pay that Respect on his Part, being very desirous to be acquainted with such valiant Guests, and to receive into his Friendship those whom he already held in his Esteem.

THE Town was large, and of a beautiful Prospect, situated between two Rivers, which fertilized the Country, descending from some Mountains at a small Distance, which were covered with Trees, and of an easy Ascent. The Buildings were of Stone, covered or adorn'd with a sort of Lime, very white and shining, and made a pleasing and noble View at a Distance, in so much, that one of the Scouts, who was sent before, return'd in haste, crying aloud, That the Walls were of Silver; which Mistake made much Sport in the Army, and, perhaps, some did then believe it, who afterwards made a Jest of his Credulity.

THE Squares and Streets were filled with an innumerable Company of People, who came to see the Entry, without any Arms that could give them the least Suspicion, or any other Noise than that which usually proceeds from a Multitude. The Caziq̄ue came out to the Gate of his Palace; and his Impediment was a monstrous Fatness, which oppressed and disfigured him. He drew near with some Difficulty, supported by the Arms of some noble Indians, to whom he seemed to owe all his Motion. His Habit was a Mantle of fine Cotton slung over his naked Body, enriched with various Jewels and Pendants, which also he wore in his Ears and Lips: A Prince of a very extraordinary Make, in whom Weight and Gravity agreed notably well. It was necessary for Cortez to put a Stop to the laughing of the Soldiers; and as he had Occasion to put a Restraint upon himself, he gave the Order with a forced Severity. But as soon as the Caziq̄ue began his Discourse, receiving Cortez with his Arms, and welcoming the rest of the Captains, he shewed his good Sense, and by the Ears gained the Respect of the Eyes. He spoke to the Purpose, and shortened his Compliments with Respect and Discretion, bidding Cortez retire to Rest after his Journey, and quarter his Men; after which he would visit him in his Quarters, and talk more at Leisure about their common Interests.

HE had provided Quarters in square Courts, which had many great Chambers, where they were all accommodated with sufficient Room, and plentifully furnish'd with all they had Occasion for. After which the Cazique made way for his Visit, by sending a Present of Jewels of Gold, and other Curiosities, to the Value of about two thousand Peso's, and soon after came himself, with a splendid Attendance, in a Chair carried on the Shoulders of the Chief of his Family; and at that Time, it is likely, the strongest, had that Honour. Cortez went forth to receive him, attended by his Captains; and giving him the Precedence, and the Right Hand, retired with him and his Interpreters; for he thought it convenient to talk to him without Witnesses. After having made him the usual Speech, about the Intent of his Coming, the Grandeur of his King, and the Errors of Idolatry, he proceeded to tell him, That one of the Designs of those valiant Troops was to redress Wrongs, punish Violence, and to take Part with Justice and Reason; having touch'd upon that Point on purpose to draw him in, by Degrees, to complain of Motexuma, and to discover (according to the Information he had received) what Advantages might be expected from that Misunderstanding. It presently appear'd, by the Change of his Countenance, that he had touched the Sore; and before he resolv'd on an Answer, he began to sigh, as one concerned at the Difficulty of complaining; but he overcame his Passion, and breaking out into Lamentations of his Unhappiness, told him, That all the Caziques of the neighbouring Countries were under a miserable and shameful Slavery, groaning under the Oppressions and Tyrannies of Motexuma, without sufficient Force to free themselves, or Courage to think on a Remedy; that he caus'd himself to be served and adored by his Subjects like one of his Gods; and would have his Violences and Injuries revered like the Decrees of Heaven: But that it was not his Design to engage him in adventuring to support them, because Motexuma was too powerful and strong for him to resolve (on so small Obligation) to declare himself his Enemy; nor would it be civil in him to ask his Friendship, and sell so small a Service at so great a Price.

HERNAN

HERNAN CORTEZ endeavoured to comfort him, letting him know that he should little regard Moteczuma's Power, having Heaven on his side, and a natural Predominancy over Tyrants; but that he was obliged to pass on to Quiabiflan, where the Oppressed and Needy should find him, and all who, having Reason on their side, stood in need of his Arms; which he might communicate to his Friends and Confederates; assuring them all, that Moteczuma should cease to oppress them, or should not be able to compass his End, while he undertook their Defence. With this they both took Leave, and Hernan Cortez prepared for his March, having gained the good Will of that Cazique, extremely well pleased within himself at the happy Prospect of his Designs, which from those far distant Views in his Imagination, began now to appear possible.

C H A P. IX.

The Spaniards pursue their March from Zempoala to Quiabiflan. An Account of what passed at their Entrance into that Town; where they find fresh Relations of the Uneasiness of those Provinces; and they take six of Moteczuma's Officers.

WHEN the Army was ready to march, they found four hundred Indians of Burden provided to carry their Cloak-Bags and Provisions, and to help to conduct the Artillery; which was a very great Ease to the Soldiers, and look'd upon as an extraordinary Respect of the Cazique, till they understood from Donna Marina, that among those Lords of Vassals it was a common Practice to assist the Armies of their Allies with that sort of human Baggage-Carriers, which in their Language they called Tamenes, and were wont to travel five or six Leagues with two or three Arrobas, that is, half or three Quarters of an hundred Weight. The Country they were entring upon, was pleasant and delightful, Part of it covered with great Trees, and the rest cultivated with Grain; at which Sight the Spaniards went on chearful and diverted, rejoicing at their good Fortune in marching over so plentiful a Country. At the Setting of the Sun, they found themselves near a little Village, unpeopled, where they staid to avoid the Inconveniency of entering Quiabiflan by Night, at which they arrived the next Day by Ten in the Morning.

THE Buildings appeared at a large Distance on an Eminence of Rocks, which seemed to serve instead of a Wall; a Situation naturally strong, the Avenues narrow, and steep, which they found without Resistance, yet they entered with Difficulty.

THE Cazique had retired with the Inhabitants, to discover at a Distance the Intentions of our People; and the Troops took possession of the Town, without finding any Person from whom they could get the least Information, till coming to a Square, where the Indians had their Temples, there came out fourteen or fifteen Indians to meet them, handsomely dressed after their Manner, with Abundance of Cringes and Perfumes, continuing their Civilities for some Time, with an affected Security and Civility, endeavouring to cover their Fear with Respect, and Motions of the Mind, which are pretty much alike in Appearance, and hard to be distinguished. Hernan Cortez encouraged them by his Caresses, and gave them some Beads of blue and green Glas; a sort of Coin, which, for the Effects it had, began to be valued even among those who knew it. With which good Treatment they recovered from the Fright which they dissembled, and gave him to understand, that their Cazique had withdrawn himself to avoid beginning a War, by putting himself on his Defence, or adventuring his Person, by trusting to armed Troops which he did not know; and by that Example it was impossible to hinder the Flight of the Inhabitants, who were under less Obligations to run themselves into Danger; an Action to which they had offered themselves, as being People of better Fashion and greater Boldness: But that as soon as they should be sensible of the Goodness of such honourable Guests, they would immediately return to their Houses, and account it a very great Happiness to serve and obey them. Hernan Cortez gave them fresh Assurances; and whilst they were gone with this News, he gave strict Orders to the Soldiers to treat the Indians well; who shewed the Confidence they had in the Spaniards so quickly, that that very Night some Families returned, and in a little Time the Town was filled with its Inhabitants.

SOME Time after the Cazique returned, bringing with him the Cazique of Zempoala to befriend him. They both came in Litters on the Shoulders of Men. He of Zempoala made a handsome Excuses for his Neighbour; and after some short Discourse they themselves introduced their Complaints of Motexuma, recounting

recounting with great Warmth, and sometimes with Tears, his Tyrannies and Cruelties, the Misery of their People, and Despair of their Nobles; to which the Cazique of Zempoala added as the utmost Aggravation; “This Monster is so proud and fierce, “that besides his impoverishing us by his Tributes; and raising “his Wealth out of our Calamities, he likewise invades the “Houses of his Subjects, taking forcibly from us both our “Wives and Daughters, staining with their Blood the Altars of “his Gods, after having sacrificed them first to other Uses more “cruel, and less honest.”

HERNAN CORTEZ endeavoured to comfort and dispose them for entering into a Confederacy with him; but at the Time that he was enquiring into their Strength, and the Number of People that would take Arms in Defence of their Liberty, two or three Indians came in, who seemed in a very great Fright; and whispering them in the Ears, put them into such Confusion, that they rose up, losing both Courage and Colour, and went hastily away, without so much as taking Leave, or making an end of their Discourse. The Cause of their Disorder was presently known, for six Officers, or Royal Commissaries, such as went about the Kingdom to gather Moteczuma's Tributes pass'd before the Spaniards Quarters. They were adorned with Abundance of Feathers, and Pendants of Gold on fine clean Cotton Cloths, with a sufficient Number of Servants and inferior Officers, who moving great Fans, made of Feathers, fann'd their Masters to cool them, or officiously shaded them from the Sun, as Occasion requir'd. Cortez went out to the Gate with his Captains to see them; and they pass'd on, without paying him any Respect, with a Countenance that shewed Indignation and Contempt; which Pride displeas'd some of the Soldiers so much, that they would have chastis'd them, had they not been withheld by Cortez, who rested satisfied at that Time with sending Donna Marina, with a sufficient Guard, to inform herself of what they were doing.

By this Means they came to understand, that after having seated themselves in the Town-House, they summoned the Caziques to appear before them, and reprimanded them publicly, and very sharply for their Boldness in admitting Strangers into their Town, who were Enemies to their King; and therefore, besides the ordinary Service, to which they were obliged, they demand twenty Indians to sacrifice to their Gods, as a Satisfaction and Attonement for such a Crime.

HERNAN CORTEZ sent for the two Caziques by some Soldiers, who had Orders, without any Noise, to bring them to his Presence; when letting them know that he saw into their most hidden Designs, the better to authorize his Proposal by this Mystery, told them, That he was well acquainted with the Violence of those Commissaries, who, without any other Crime than their having admitted his Troops, endeavoured to impose on them new Tributes of human Blood; that it was no Time then for such Abominations, nor would he suffer them to obey such horrid Commands in his Presence; but, on the contrary, he ordered them, without fail, to call their People about them, and seize them, and leave him to maintain what they had done by his Advice.

THE Caziques were at a stand, refusing to execute such a bold Command, as being grown mean spirited by constant Use of enduring the Smarts, and even honouring the Rod: But Hernan Cortez repeated his Order with so much Resolution, that they immediately went to execute it; and with great Applause of the Indians they seized the Ministers of Moteczuma, whom they put in a kind of Pillories, used in their Prisons, and very incommodious; for they held the Delinquents by the Neck, obliging them continually to do their utmost with their Shoulders to ease the Weight, for the Freedom of breathing. It was very pleasant to see how proud and elevated the Caziques returned to give an Account of their noble Action; for they thought to execute them the same Day, and make them suffer the Punishments assigned by their Laws to Traytors; and seeing that would not be permitted, they desired at least to sacrifice them to their Gods, as if it were a kind of Grace.

THE Prisoners being secured with a sufficient Number of Spanish Soldiers, Hernan Cortez retired to his Quarters, and began to consider with himself what was to be done in order to disentangle himself from the Difficulty he was in, of protecting and defending the Caziques from the Danger that threatened them for having obeyed him; but he was not willing quite to provoke Moteczuma, but still to keep him in Suspence.

HE did not altogether like taking up Arms in Defence of Subjects complaining against their King, and to lay aside his Designs of Peace, without Provocation, or a better Pretence. On the other hand, he considered it as a very necessary Point, to maintain that Party which was beginning to form, in case he should happen to want them. In fine, he held it most convenient to manage with Moteczuma, by making a Merit of suspending the Effects of that Disrespect, and shewing that at least he would so far discharge himself, as not to foment the Sedition, nor draw any Advantage from it to himself, until the last Necessity.

THE Result of these Reflexions (which kept him some Hours awake) was, to send at Midnight for two of the Prisoners with all possible Privacy: And after receiving them courteously, he told them, (as one desirous they should not attribute to him what they had suffered,) that he had sent for them in order to set them at Liberty; and that as they received it solely from his Hands, they might assure their Prince, he would endeavour very shortly to send the rest of their Companions who remained in the Power of the Caziques, whom he would endeavour to make sensible of their Fault, and perform all that should be most for his Service; for that he was desirous of Peace, and to deserve, by his Respects and Actions, all the Remarks of Gratitude that were due to the Ambassador and Minister of so great a Prince.

THE Indians durst not set out on their Journey, for fear of being kill'd, or taken by the Way; and he was forced to give them a Guard of Spanish Soldiers, who conveyed them to the next Bay, where the Ships lay, and one of the Boats was ordered to land them beyond the District of Zempoala.

THE Caziques came in the Morning much frightned and troubled for the Escape of the two Prisoners; and Hernan Cortez receiv'd the News with Signs of Surprise and Concern, blaming their Want of Vigilance; and upon this Pretence he ordered in their Presence, that the rest should be carried on board the Fleet, as desiring to take upon himself the Care of their Imprisonment; but he privately ordered the Sea-Officers to treat them well, and to keep them satisfied and safe; by which he gained the Confidence of the Caziques, without disobliging of Moteczuma, whose Power, so much cried up and dreaded among those Indians, made him careful how he acted. After this manner he endeavoured to provide for every thing, keeping up the discontented Party, without engaging himself too far, and still keeping in View all Accidents which might oblige him to support it: A great Master in adjusting his Designs and Suspicions. And he is a prudent General who knows how to provide beforehand against Accidents, and, by Foresight, lessen the Force and Unexpectedness of Events.

C H A P. X.

The Caziques of the Mountains come to submit, and offer their Service to Cortez. The Spaniards build the Town of Vera Cruz, and put it in a Posture of Defence. New Ambassadors arrive there from Motezuma.

THE Benignity and good Behaviour of the Spaniards towards their Allies, was quickly divulged thro' all the Districts thereabouts; and the two Caziques of Zempoala and Quiabiflan gave Notice to all their Friends and Confederates of the Happiness they enjoyed, being freed from Impositions, and their Liberty secured by the Protection of a People invincible, who knew the very Thoughts of Men, and seemed of a superior Nature. Upon this Report's spreading, which Fame (as is usual) magnifying, Truth became confounded with overmuch Addition: It was said publickly among those People, that their Gods were come down to Quiabiflan, darting Lightning against Motezuma; the which Credulity lasted some Time among the Indians, and caused a Veneration, tho' ill founded, which very much facilitated the Beginnings of this Conquest. Nor were they altogether wide of the Truth, in esteeming those sent from Heaven, who by its Decree and Appointment, came to be the Instruments of their Salvation: A Notion proceeding from their Ignorance, in which there might be some Mixture of a superior Light, dispensed in Favour of their Sincerity.

THIS Opinion of the Spaniards did so encrease, and the Name of Liberty sounded so well in the Ears of the Oppressed, that in a few Days there came to Quiabiflan above thirty Caziques, Lords of the Mountain that was in sight, which had numerous Settlements of Indians, called Totonaques, a rustick People, of different Languages and Customs, but strong, and valuing themselves upon their Courage. They all paid their Obedience, offered their Troops, and, in the Form proposed to them, swore Fidelity and Vassalage to the King of Spain, of which a solemn Act was made before the Secretary of the Council.

Council. Antonio de Herrera says, that the Troops offered by those Caziques exceeded the Number of a hundred thousand Men. Bernal Diaz del Castillo doth not relate it; nor were they ever lifted. The Number, it is likely, was very great, the Settlements being many, and the People easily stirred up against Motexuma, especially for that the Mountainous Country consisted of Warlike Indians, lately subdu'd, or not quite conquered.

THIS kind of Confederacy being made, the Caziques returned to their Houses, ready to do as they should be commanded; and Hernan Cortez resolv'd to settle the Town of Villa Rica de la Cruz, which, till then moved with the Army, tho' they observed the Distinctions of Government. They pitch'd upon the Plain between the Sea and Quiabiflan, half a League from that Town; a Land which invited with its Fertility, abounding in Water, and having great Plenty of Trees, which lay commodious for the Cutting of Timber for the Buildings. They laid the Foundations, beginning with the Church. The handicraft Men were distributed, Carpenters and Masons, who came with Soldiers Pay; and the Indians of Zempoala and Quiabiflan assisting with equal Skill and Activity. The Houses began to rise; mean as to Architecture, rather for a Covering, than any Commodiousness. They presently drew the Compass of the Wall with Travesses of strong Mud Work, a sufficient Defence against the Weapons of the Indians; and in that Country it might be properly called a Fortrefs. The principal Officers of the Army help'd to carry on the Work, applying both their Hands and Shoulders to it; and Hernan Cortez work'd as the rest, seeming to set himself a Task, not satisfied with the scanty Diligence which is sufficient in a Superior to set a good Example.

IN the mean time they received at Mexico the first Advice of the Spaniards being received in Zempoala by that Cazique, a Man, in their Opinion, of suspected Fidelity, and the neighbouring Places little to be depended on: Which Account so provoked Motexuma, that he propos'd to join his Forces, and march out in Person to chastise this Offence of the Zempoalans, and put the rest of the Mountain Nations under his Yoke; taking the Spaniards alive, whom he had already in his Imagination designed for a solemn Sacrifice to his Gods.

BUT at the same Time that they began to make great Preparations for this Enterprize; the two Indians, whom Cortez had dispatched from Quiabiflan, arrived at Mexico, and gave an Account of their Imprisonment; and that they owed their Liberty to the Captain of the Strangers, who had sent them to represent how much he desired Peace, and how far it was from his Intentions to do him any Disservice; extolling his Courtesy and Mildness with so much Weight, that it might be perceived by the Praises they gave Cortez, how much they had feared the Caziques.

UPON this the Face of Affairs was changed: The Anger of Motexuma was mitigated, Preparations for War ceased, and they determined again to try the Way of Negotiation, endeavouring to divert Cortez from his Designs with a new Embassy and Present, to which Measures he easily inclined; for in the Midst of his Anger and Pride he could not forget the Signals of Heaven, and the Answers of his Idols, which he looked on as evil Omens of his Undertaking, or at least, they obliged him to delay the Breach, endeavouring to qualify his Fear after such a Manner, that it should be taken for an Effect of his Prudence, and Respect for his Gods.

THIS Embassy arrived, when they had almost perfected the new Settlement and Fortrefs of Vera Cruz. With the Embassy came two Youths, Nephews to Motexuma, attended by four antient Caziques who govern'd them as Counsellors, and added to their Authority by the Respect they paid them. The Attendance was splendid; and they brought a Present of Gold, Feathers, and Cotton, worth about two thousand Pieces of Eight. The Message the Ambassadors delivered, was, That the great Emperor Motexuma having been informed of the Disobedience of those Caziques, and their Insolence in taking and misusing his Officers, had provided a powerful Army to come in Person to chastise them; which he had suspended, that he might not be obliged to break with the Spaniards, whose Friendship he desired, and whose Captain he was obliged to esteem, and acknowledge the Respect he had shewn in sending him his two Servants, whom he had released from so cruel an Imprisonment; but that tho' he durst entirely rely upon him for restoring their Companions to their Liberty, yet he could not but complain in a friendly Manner, that so valiant and wise a Man should think fit to live among his Rebels, making them more insolent under the Shelter of his Arms: And as the making of Traytors bold, was little less than approving the Treason, he did request him upon that Consideration immediately to leave that Country, that he might punish them without Breach of his Friendship. And with the same Sincerity of Heart he admonish'd him not to think of passing on to his Court, for that the Impediments and Dangers of that Journey were very great.

On

On which Point they enlarged with a mysterious Tedioufness, this being the principal Point of their Instructions.

HERNAN CORIEZ received the Embassy and Present with great Respect; and before he returned his Answer, he ordered the four imprisoned Officers to come in, whom he had purposefully sent for from on board the Fleet; and, gaining the good Will of the Ambassadors, with delivering them up, well treated and thankful, he told them, That the Error committed by the Caziques of Zempoala and Quiabistan, was amended by the Restitutions of those Officers; and that he was highly pleased with the Opportunity of shewing his Respect by that Action, and giving Motezuma that first Proof of his Obedience: That he could not but own the Insolence of that Imprisonment, tho' it might in some measure be excused by the Extravagancy of the Officers themselves, who, not content with the ordinary Tributes due to the Crown, had of their own Authority demanded twenty Indians for their Sacrifices, a cruel Proposition, and an Abuse which the Spaniards could not suffer, being bred in another Religion of greater Piety and Regard to human Nature: That he found himself obliged to those Caziques for admitting and entertaining him in their Lands, when his Governors Teutile and Pilpatoe discourteously abandoned him, failing in Point of Hospitality and the Law of Nations; an Action done, in all likelihood, without Motezuma's Orders, and which he believed would be displeasing to him, or at least, he understood it so; but that having nothing but Peace in view, he did not desire to aggravate Matters by his Complaints: That neither that Country nor the Totonaque Mountainiers should move to his Disservice, neither would he permit it; for the Caziques were at his Devotion, and would not transgress his Orders; for which Reason he was obliged to interceed for them, that he would pardon what they had done to his Officers, and for having admitted and lodged his Troops: That for the rest he could only say, that when he should be so happy as to appear in his Presence, he would make known the Importance of his Embassy, without any Regard to the Impediments and Dangers which threaten'd him; for that the Spaniards were unacquainted with Fear, and Obstacles only induc'd them to go on, being a People enured to Dangers, and used to seek for Glory amidst the greatest Difficulties.

WITH this short and resolute Speech, (in which the Constancy of Hernan Cortez is to be observed, and the Art with which he endeavoured to set a Value upon his Intentions,) he answered the Ambassadors, who departed much carefs'd, and rich rich in Castillian Trifles, carrying for their King, as a Present, another Treasure of the same kind.

It was observed that the Ambassadors went away dissatisfied, for not having obtained the Retreat of the Spaniards, which was the Point all their Endeavours tended to. The Spaniards gained much Reputation among those Nations by this Embassy; for the Indians were now confirmed in their Opinion, that Hernan Cortez must be some Diety, and none of the least powerful, since Motexuma (whose Pride disdained to bend his Knee in the Presence of his Gods) fought him with so much Submission, and solicited his Friendship with Gifts, which, in their Opinion, were little less than Sacrifices; the Effect of which Extravagancy was, that they lost great Part of the Fear which they had for their King, giving themselves up with greater Subjection to the Obedience of the Spaniards: And no less than such Dotage was necessary, that a Work, so wonderful, and undertaken with so small a Force, might be made practicable, the Most High permitting these Things, that it might not appear wholly a Miracle, or lie under the Imputation of Temerity.

C H A P. XI.

The Zempoalans, by Deceit, engage HERNAN CORTEZ to take up Arms against the People of Zimpazingo, their Enemies. He makes them Friends, and reduces that Country.

S O O N after the Cazique of Zempoala came to Vera Cruz, with some principal Indians, whom he brought as Witnesses of what he intended to propose. He told Hernan Cortez, that now the Time was come to protect and defend their Country; for that some Troops of the Mexicans were arrived in Zimpazingo, (a Place of Strength, distant from thence about two Suns,) and went out to over-run the Country, destroying the Corn-Fields, and committing some Hostilities in their District, with which it seemed they were beginning their Revenge. Hernan Cortez found himself engaged to support the Zempoalans, to maintain the Credit of his his Offers; and besides, he thought it would not be right to suffer that Insolence of the Mexicans, as it were in his Sight; and that in case they were some advanced Troops of Motezuma's Army, it would be necessary to strike a Terror into them, to discourage the rest of his People. For which Purpose he determined to march in Person upon this Undertaking, engaging in it somewhat too hastily, for he was yet unacquainted with the Deceits and Lyes of those People, (a Capital Vice among the Indians;) and suffer'd himself to be carried away by what was likely, without examining into the Truth. He offered them to march out immediately with his Troops, to chastise those Enemies, who disturb'd the Peace of his Allies; and ordering them to provide Indians of Burden for the Baggage and Artillery, he made a Disposition immediately for his March, and took the Road of Zimpazingo, with four hundred Men, leaving the rest in the Fortrefs of Vera Cruz.

As he pass'd by Zempoala, he found two thousand armed Indians, whom the Cazique had provided to serve under him in that Expedition, divided into four Bodies, or Commands, with their Captains, Colours, and Arms, according to the Custom of their Warriors. Hernan Cortez thanked them very much for the Care they took to provide that Succour; and tho' he let him understand that he had no Occasion for his Men upon an Expedition of so small Importance, yet he suffered them to go, to provide against all Events, as if he had done it only to let them share in the Glory of the Success.

THAT Night they lodged in some Houses three Leagues from Zimpazingo; and the next Day a little before Three in the Afternoon, they discovered the Town on the Top of a small Hill, a Branch of the Mountain among great Rocks, which hid Part of the Buildings, and threaten'd at a Distance, with the Difficulty of the Way. The Spaniards began to overcome the Craggedness of the Mountain, but not without considerable Trouble; for being jealous of an Ambush, they went Doubling, and filing off as the Ground would permit; but the Zempoalans, either more dextrous, or less disturb'd with the Narrowness of the Paths, advanced with a sort of Fury which appeared like Valour, but was indeed Revenge, and a theivish Temper. Hernan Cortez was obliged to give Orders to halt, at a Time when some Troops of the Vanguard were already in the Town.

HE held on his March, without meeting any Resistance; and just as he was consulting to attack the Town in several Parts, there came out of it eight antient Priests, who asked for the Captain of that Army, before whose Presence they came with great Submissions, pronouncing some Words in an humble and pitiful Manner, such as sufficiently shewed Submission, without the Help of an Interpreter. Their Dress was a black Mantle, whose End reached the Ground, and the upper Part was gathered and pleated about the Neck, with a Piece hanging loose, in Form of a Hood, with which they kept their Heads warm. Their Hair reached to their Shoulders, dashed and clotted with the human Blood of their Sacrifices, Marks of which they superstitiously preserv'd on their Faces and Hands; for it was not lawful for them to wash themselves; fit Ministers of such unclean Gods, whose Filth shewed it self in this and other Deformities.

THEY began their Speech by asking Cortez, for what Resistance or Offence of theirs the poor Inhabitants had merited the Indignation or Chastisement of a People, already so much famed in the Countries thereabouts for Clemency and Goodness. He answered, That he did not design to offend the Inhabitants of the Town, but only chastise the Mexicans, who were quartered in it, and sallied from thence to infest the Lands of his Friends. To which they replied, That the Mexican Troops, which had been garisoned in Zimpazingo, were retired, flying further up the Country, as soon as they heard that Motexuma's Officers were imprisoned at Quiabistan; and that if his Design was against them, through the Influence or Suggestion of those Indians that accompanied him, he was to understand, that the Zempoalans, were their Enemies, and had deceived him, feigning those Inroads of the Mexicans to destroy them, and make him the Instrument of their Revenge.

BY the Confusion and frivolous Excuses of the Zempoalan Captains themselves, it appeared that those Priests spoke Truth; and Hernan Cortez was concerned at the Deceit, as a Reflection upon his Arms, being vexed at the same Time at the Malice of the Indians and his own Sincerity; but considering what was most convenient upon this Occasion, he presently ordered the Captains Christoval de Olid and Pedro de Alvarado to go with their Companies, and gather the Indians together, who had advanced before to get into the Town, and were now busy in the Pillage, and had taken a considerable Quantity of Cloths and Furniture, and already bound some Prisoners. They were brought to the Army, shamefully loaded with what they had robbed, and the miserable plundered People following them, crying out for their Goods: For whose Satisfaction and Comfort Hernan Cortez commanded to unbind the Prisoners, and deliver up the Goods to the Priests, that they might restore them to the proper Owners; and calling for the Zempoalan Captains, reprov'd them publickly for their Presumption, in very angry Terms, telling them they had incurred the Penalty of Death for their Offence, in obliging him to march his Troops only to compass their Revenge; and causing himself to be entreated by the Spanish Captains, whom he had instructed before to pacify him. Whereupon he pardoned them for that Time, enlarging upon that Action of his Clemency; tho', in truth, he did not dare at that Time to chastise them with the Rigour they deserved, knowing well, that to preserve new Friends, acquired Clemency was more proper than Justice.

HAVING done this, which gave him a Reputation with both the Nations, he commanded the Zempoalans to lodge without the Town, and he marched in with the Spaniards, where he was received with the Applause of a Deliverer. Immediately the Cazique of Zimpazingo visited him in his Lodging, with others of the Neighbourhood, who came either out of Friendship or Obedience, acknowledging the King of Spain for their Prince; whose Name was already beloved and revered in that Country, where the People desired to be his Subjects out of Hatred to Moteczuma.

HE afterwards took in hand the adjusting of the Differences between those Indians and the Zempoalans; which began about the Division of their Districts, and Disputes of Jurisdiction, first between the Caziques, and had now occasion'd such a Rancour among the People, that they lived in continual Hostility. To which End, he drew up a Scheme for compounding their Differences; and taking upon himself to content the Lord of Zempoala, made them Friends, and returned to Vera Cruz, leaving his Interest advanced by the Obedience of new Caziques, and Friendship established among those of his Party, whose Disagreement, might have been a Hindrance to his receiving any Service from them: so that he made his Advantage, and found his Conveniency even in that ill-concerted Enterprize; Errors sometimes serving to correct humane Prudence, which generally makes Dispositions according to the first Conception of Things.

C H A P. XII,

The Spaniards return to Zempoala; where they overthrow the Idols, with some Resistance of the Indians: And the principal of their Temples is converted into a Church of our Lady.

THE Cazique of Zempoala waited for Cortez at some Houses a little distant from the Town, with great Store of Provisions, to refresh his Men; but much ashamed and troubled, that his Deceit was discovered. He went about to excuse himself; but Cortez did not permit it, telling him, He had laid aside his Displeasure, and desired an Amendment for the future, which was the only Satisfaction of pardoned Crimes.

THEY passed on directly to the Town, where he had provided a second Present of Eight Virgins finely adorned: One of them was his Niece; and he brought her on Purpose that Hernan Cortez might do him the Honour, to take her for his Wife, the rest to be distributed among his Captains, as he should think fit; making this Offer as one desirous to strengthen the Friendship between them by the Bonds of Blood. Cortez answered, That he very much esteemed that Testimony of his good Will and Sincerity; but that it was not lawful for the Spaniards to take Wives of a different Religion; for which Reason, he suspended the receiving them until such Time as they became Christians. Upon this Occasion he pressed him again to quit his Idolatry, for that he could not be his true Friend, who differ'd so much from him in the most essential Point; and as he took him for a Man of Reason, he undertook, with some Hopes, to convince and reduce him. But he was so far from opening his Eyes, or being sensible of the Force of Truth, that presuming on the Opinion he had of his own Understanding, he undertook to argue in Defence of his Gods; and Hernan Cortez, suffering himself to be carry'd away by his Zeal for Religion, grew offended, and turned his Back upon him with some sort of Passion.

AT this Time happen'd one of the most solemn Festivals of their Idols; and the Zempoalans assembled (not without some Circumspection on account of the Spaniards) in the principal of their Temples, were they celebrated a Sacrifice of Human Blood, which horrible Function was performed by the Hands of the Priests, with the Ceremonies, which will be related in their proper Place. Afterwards those unhappy Victims were sold cut out in Pieces, which were sought after, and bought as sacred Food: An abominable Brutality in the Taste; and a much worse in their Devotion. Some Spaniards happen'd to see part of this Slaughter; who came and told Cortez how much they were scandalized; and he was so highly provok'd at it, that the pious Disturbance of his Mind immediately appear'd on his Countenance. The Motives which oblig'd him to keep certain Measures with those Confederates, gave way to a greater Cause; and as Anger has its first Fury, even when supported by Reason, he broke out into Threats, commanding his Soldiers to take Arms, and call the Caziq and the principal Indians which used to attend him. As soon as they came into his Presence, he went with them to the Temple, causing his Troops to march in Order with him.

THE Priests, who were then jealous of the Event, came out to the Gate, and with loud Cries, began to call the People to the Defence of their Gods; at which Time some Troops of armed Indians appear'd; which, as it was afterwards known, those very Priests had provided: For they feared some Violence, believing their Sacrifice, so much abhorred by the Spaniards, had been discovered. The Number of the Indians who had possessed themselves of the Avenues, was considerable; but Hernan Cortez (always easy at such Times) ordered Donna Marina to tell them aloud, That upon the first Arrow they should let fly, he would cause the Throats of the Caziq, and all the Zempoalans in his Power, to be immediately cut, and afterwards permit his Soldiers to chastise their Insolence with Fire and Sword. The Indians trembled at the Terror of such a Threat; and the Caziq quaking like the rest, commanded them to lay down their Arms and retire; which Command was immediately obeyed, shewing in the Readiness with which they disappeared, how much they desired their Fear should pass for Obedience.

HERNAN CORTEZ remained with the Caziq, and those who attended him; and calling for the Priests, declaimed against Idolatry with more than Military Eloquence. He encouraged them, that they might not hearken to him with Fear: He endeavoured voured to make use of soft Expressions, that there might be no Appearance of Violence, where Reason was to speak: He lamented the Error in which they lived; and complained, that being his Friends, they should not give Credit to him in that which did most concern them: He laid before them how much he desired their Good; and from loving Expressions, which move the Heart, he proceeded to the Motives that affect the Understanding: He demonstrated their Errors, laid before them, as it were, in a visible Manner the Truth: And lastly, told them, that he came fully resolv'd to destroy those Representations of the Devil; and that the Work would be most acceptable to him, if they themselves would execute it by their own Hands. To which End, he perswaded and encouraged them to go up the Steps of the Temple, and overthrow their Idols: But they were so much concern'd at this Proposal, that they only answered with Sighs and Lamentations; till prostrating themselves on the Ground, they declar'd aloud, That they would sooner suffer themselves to be cut in Pieces, than lay Hands upon their Gods. Hernan Cortez would not insist overmuch on a Circumstance to which he found them so averse, and therefore ordered his Soldiers to put it in Execution: By whose Diligence the principal Idol, together with those on each side, were flung down from the Top of the Steps, and came to the Pavement all broke to Pieces, followed and crush'd by their own Altars, and the detestable Instruments of their Adoration. Great was the Commotion and Astonishment of the Indians; they beheld each other, as expecting at least the Punishment of Heaven; and the same soon happened as had been at Cozumel; for seeing their Gods thus debased, without Power to revenge themselves, they laid aside all Fear, and were sensible of their Weakness, just as People generally do by a ruined great Man, whom, after his Fall, they despise as much as ever they formerly adored him.

THE Zempoalans by this Experiment became more easy to be perswaded, and more submissive to the Orders of the Spaniards: For if before they considered them as Men of a superior Nature, they now found themselves obliged to confess that they were more powerful than their Gods. Hernan Cortez finding how much his Authority was increased among them, commanded them to cleanse the Temple; which Order was executed with so much Fervour and Chearfulness, that affecting to be undeceived, they flung into the Fire the Fragments of their Idols. The Cazique immediately ordered his Masons to scrape the Walls, wiping out the Stains of human Blood, which they preserved preserved as an Ornament. After which they whiten'd them, laying on a Covering of that shining Mortar which they used in their Building; and they erected an Altar, on which was placed an Image of our Lady, with some ornamental Flowers and Lights; and the Day following, the holy Sacrifice of the Mass was celebrated with all possible Solemnity, in sight of abundance of Indians, who assisted at the Novelty, rather admiring than attentive; tho' some bent their Knees, and endeavoured to imitate the Devotion of the Spaniards.

THERE was no Opportunity at that Time to instruct them in the fundamental Principles of Religion, for their Barbarity required more Time; and the Intention of Hernan Cortez was to begin their Spiritual Conquest from the Court of Moteczuma. But they remained inclined to despise their Idols, and well disposed to the Worship of the Image of the holy Virgin, offering to take her for their Advocate, that the God of the Christians might favour them, whose Power they were already sensible of, by the Effects, and by some Glimmerings of natural Light, always sufficient to distinguish that which is best, and perceive the Force of those Helps with which God assists all reasonable Creatures.

AND here we must not omit the pious Resolution of an old Soldier, who staid alone among these People, as yet but imperfectly reduced, to take Care of that Image, crowning his old Age with this holy Service. His Name was Juan de Torres a Native of the City of Cordova: An Action truly worthy of a Soldier, and which at once records both his Valour and Piety.

C H A P. XIII.

The Army returns to Vera Cruz. Commissaries are dispatch'd to the King; with an Account of what had been done. Another Sedition is quell'd with the Punishment of some Mutineers. And Hernan Cortez executes his Resolution of sinking his Ships.

THE Spaniards departed immediately from Zempoala, (which Place was afterwards called New Sevil;) and when they came to Vera Cruz, there was just arrived at the Place where the Fleet lay at Anchor a small Vessel, which came from the Isle of Cuba, commanded by Captain Francisco de Saucedo, Native of Medina de Rio Seco, and in Company with him Captain Luis Marin, who was afterwards in the same Station in the Conquest of Mexico. They brought with them ten Soldiers, one Horse, and one Mare; which was reckon'd at that Time a considerable Supply.

THE Spanish Writers have not acquainted us with the Intention of their Voyage; and it is most likely, that they left Cuba with a Design to seek out Cortez, and follow his Fortune; and of this the Readiness with which they joined his Troops, seems to convince us. By this Means it was known that the Governor Diego Velasquez had a fresh threatned Hernan Cortez; for by the Negotiation of one of his Chaplains, whom he had dispatched to the Court, for this and other Pretensions, he had obtained the Title of the King's Lieutenant of that Island, with a Power to discover and people it; which Grace of the King's had made him inexorable, believing that this Addition to his Authority was a fresh Ground for his Complaints.

BUT Hernan Cortez, whose Thoughts were now employed in greater Affairs, received this News as a Matter of no Concern, tho' it somewhat hastened his Resolution of giving the King an Account of his Proceedings: For which End, he disposed Matters so, that the Town of Vera Cruz should write a Letter, laying at his Majesty's Feet this new Settlement, and giving a short Relation of the Success of his Expedition; the Provinces that were already reduced to his Obedience, with the Riches,

Riches, Fertility, and great Plenty of this new World; the Progress he had made in favour of Religion; and the Dispositions that were making, in order to come at a true Knowledge of the Empire of Moteczuma.

HE very earnestly entreated the Members of the Council of Vera Cruz, That they would not omit to take notice of the Violences intended against him by Diego Velasquez, and the little Reason he had to do so; and that they would lay before his Majesty the great Valour and Constancy of the Spaniards with him; and left them to speak of his own Person, as every own should think proper. It was not Modesty but a Confidence in his own Merit, more than in any Words he could use, for no Man is displeas'd to hear his own Actions extoll'd, especially in this martial Profession, in which certain bare-fac'd Virtues are much in use, whose very Name is look'd upon as their Reward.

THE Letter was writ in the proper Form; the Conclusion whereof was to beseech his Majesty that he would grant Hernan Cortez a Commission of Captain-General, confirming what the Town and Troops had done, without any Dependence on Diego Velasquez. Cortez writ to the same Purpose, speaking with more Certainty of the Hopes he had to bring that Empire to the Obedience of his Majesty, and of the Dispositions he was making to contend with the Power of Moteczuma, by the Help of his own revolted Subjects.

THE Dispatches being finished, they were committed to the Care of the Captains, Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero, and Francisco de Montejo; and it was agreed that they should carry the King all the Gold, valuable Jewels, and Curiosities they had acquired as well by the Presents of Moteczuma, as the Exchanges and Gifts of other Caziques, both Officers and Soldiers giving up their Shares, that the Present might be the greater. They also carried some Indians, who voluntarily offered themselves for the Voyage, as the first Fruits of those new Subjects they were going to conquer; and Hernan Cortez sent a Present in particular to his Father Martin Cortez, a worthy Thought amidst the many Cares that lay heavy upon him. The best Ship in the Fleet was immediately fitted, and the Charge of the Sailing committed to the Care of the chief Pilot Antonio de Alaminos: And when the Day appointed for the Embarkation came, their happy Voyage was recommended to the divine Favour by a solemn Mass of the Holy Ghost. With this happy Auspice they set Sail the 16th Day of July, 1519, with positive Orders to steer their Coast directly for Spain, endeavouring to pass the Channel of Bahama, without touching at the Island of Cuba, where they ought to apprehend, as an evident Danger, the Snares of Diego Velasquez.

WHILST they were making Preparations for this Voyage, some Soldiers and Sailors (People of little Honour) raised new Disturbances, by endeavouring to make their Escape, and give notice to Diego Velasquez of the Dispatches and Riches sent to the King in the Name of Cortez; and their Intention was to go with this Advice, that they might seize the Passes, and make Prize of the Ship: To which End, they had gained the Sailors of another Vessel, and had laid in Provisions of all Things necessary for their Voyage. But on the very Night design'd for their Flight, one of the Conspirators, called Bernardino de Coria, repented. He was going among the rest to embark; but taking a nearer View of the Foulness of his Crime, he privately stepp'd aside from his Companions, and went to inform Cortez. He consulted presently how to remedy this Evil; and made his Dispositions with so much Secrecy and Diligence, that the Accomplices were all seized on board the same Vessel, without being able to deny their Crime; which Hernan Cortez thought to deserve an exemplary Punishment, not confiding in his own Clemency. They were soon brought to their Tryal, and two of the Soldiers, who had been the chief Promoters of the Contrivance, were adjudg'd to die; two others, this being the second Fault, to be whipp'd. The rest were pardoned, as drawn in, and deceived; a Pretence Cortez made use of, that he might not lose all who were guilty; tho' he ordered that the principal Mariner of the Ship, destined for their Flight, should have one of his Feet cut off: An extraordinary Sentence, and upon this Occasion very necessary; that the Crime which had deserved so severe a Chastisement, might not be forgot in Time. In such Cases the Memory stands in need of the Eyes; for it with Difficulty retains the Idea of that which is greivous to the Imagination.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo, and after him Antonio de Herrera say, That the Lieciantiate Juan Diaz was guilty of this Crime; and that out of Respect to the Priesthood, he was not proceeded against as he deserved. That Privilege might perhaps avail him against their Pens; for it is certain that in a Letter Hernan Cortez writ to the Emperor on the 30th of October, 1520, (for the which we are beholding to Juan Baptista Ramus, in his Voyages,) he makes no mention of this Priest, tho' he names all the Accomplices of that same Sedition; so that either the Crime imputed to him is not true, or we have the same Reason not to believe it, as Cortez had to conceal it.

THE Day on which this Sentence was executed, Cortez went with some of his Friends to Zempoala, where he was disturb'd with various Thoughts. The Boldness of those Soldiers gave him much Uneasiness: He looked upon it as a Consequence of the past Disturbances, and a Spark of Fire not quite put out: He was now to march forward with his Troops, and very probably he should be obliged to try his Strength with Motexuma; a very unequal Dispute; and more especially with Men divided and suspected.

HE thought of staying some Days among those Caziques his Friends; and divert his Troops by some small Undertakings, to make some new Settlements for the strengthening of Vera Cruz: But still he found some Inconveniences; and from this Disturbance of his Mind resulted an Action, which very much shewed the Greatness of his Soul; for he resolved to destroy his Fleet, and break up all the Vessels, that he might be secure of the Soldiers, and either conquer with them, or die. In which Resolution he also found his Advantage, by reinforcing his Army with above a hundred Men, who were employed as Pilots and Mariners. He communicated this Resolution to his Confidants, and by their Means so disposed Matters, with some Gifts, and keeping it as secret as conveniently they could, that the very Sailors themselves declared with one Voice, That the Ships would certainly founder by reason of the Damage they had sustain'd in that Road, and by the bad Quality of the Port. Upon which Information, the Orders which Cortez gave, seem'd no more than a necessary Care, That they should bring ashore their Sails, Tackling, and Iron, with such Planks as might be of Service, and sink all the great Vessels, reserving only Boats for Fishing: A Resolution deservedly applauded, as one of the greatest of this Conquest; and we know not whether a greater of the Kind can be found in all History.

JUSTIN relates of Agathocles, that having landed his Army on the Coasts of Africk, he burnt his Vessels, to deprive his Soldiers of all Means of Flight.

POLIENUS celebrates the Memory of Timarchus, General of the Etolians, for his equal Boldness; and Quintus Fabius Maximus has left us, among his Military Remarks, such another Instance, if we can give more Credit to the Report of Frontinus, than to the Silence of Plutarch. But none of these Actions are lessen'd by the Example of others. And if we consider Hernan Cortez, with fewer Men than any of them, in a more distant Country, and less known, without any Hopes of human Succour, among barbarous People, so savage in their Customs,

Customs, with a Tyrant to oppose, so proud and powerful, we shall find that the Undertaking of Cortez was the greater, and his Resolution the most heroick : Or, granting to those great Captains the Glory of having first led the Way, let us allow Cortez that of having gone beyond them in their own Track.

IT is not to be endured that Bernal Diaz del Castillo, with his usual, we know not whether, Malice or Sincerity, should introduce himself as a Counsellor, upon so great an Occasion, usurping from Cortez the Glory of having been the first Projector. “ We (says he) that were his Friends, advised him “ not to leave a Ship in the Port, but to sink them all.” But he knew not how to support his Ambition ; for a little after, he adds ; “ And this Design of sinking the Ships, he had “ already concerted, but desired it should come from us.” So that we are only beholden to him for the Advice which came after the Resolution. And the Remark of Antonio de Herrera on the same Action, is less tolerable ; for he affirms, That the Fleet was destroyed at the Instance of the Soldiers ; and that they were persuaded and sollicitated thereto by the Craft of Cortez, (that is his Expression,) that he alone might not be obliged to make good the Payment of the Ships, but impose it upon the Troops. It doth not appear that Hernan Cortez was at that Time either in a Place, or a Condition, to fear any Civil Disputes with Diego Velasquez ; nor does this Manner of Reasoning any way agree with the high Designs which he was then forming. If he took this Account from the same Bernal Diaz, (that thus presumed, as fearing some Part of the Payment of those Vessels might come to his Share,) he should have disregarded it as the Grumbling of an interested Person : And if it was his own Conjecture, as he gives us to understand, and that he, as an Historian, had the Dexterity to penetrate into the Secret of the Actions he relates, he lessens the Credit of the Action by the Meanness of the Motive, and is wanting in a just Proportion, by attributing great Effects to ordinary Causes.

C H A P. XIV.

Cortez having made a Disposition for the March, was informed that Ships were seen upon the Coasts. He departs for Vera Cruz, and takes seven Soldiers belonging to the Fleet, commanded by Francisco de Garay. They begin their March; and having with much Difficulty passed the Mountains, the Army enters the Province of Zocothlan.

SOME of the Soldiers were much grieved at this Destruction of the Fleet; but were easily brought to Reason, by the Memory of the past Punishment, and the Example of those of better Understanding.

THEY consulted immediately about the March; and Hernan Cortez joined his Troops in Zempoala, which consisted of Five hundred Foot, fifteen Horse, and six Pieces of Artillery, leaving an Hundred and fifty Men and two Horses in Garrison at Vera Cruz, appointing Captain Juan de Escalante Governor, a Soldier of Valour, very diligent, and one in whom he entirely confided. He strictly charged the neighbouring Caziques, that during his Absence they should obey and respect him as a Person in whom he had vested his whole Authority; that they should take Care to supply him with Provisions, and People to help to build the Church, and the Fortifications of the Town, which he took care of, not so much out of Fear of any Disturbance that might happen from the Indians of that Neighbourhood, as out of a Jealousy of some Invasion or Surprize from Diego Velasquez.

THE Cazique of Zempoala had provided two hundred Tamenes, or Indians of Burden, for the Baggage, and some armed Troops to augment the Army; out of which Hernan Cortez picked about four hundred Men, including in this Number forty or fifty noble Indians, of the greatest Account in that Country. And tho' he immediately treated them as his own Soldiers, his real Intention was to carry them as Hostages, for the Security of the Church he left in Zempoala, and of the Spaniards who remained at Vera Cruz, together with a young Page of his, whom he left in Charge with the Cazique, to learn the Mexican Language, in case he should loose his Interpreters. In which he shewed his great Care, and how far he look'd before him, to be provided upon all Events.

WHEN all Things were in a Readiness for the March, an Express arrived from Juan de Escalante, with Advice, that some Ships were on the Coast of Vera Cruz; without caring to come too, tho' they had made them Signals of Peace, and endeavoured it several Ways. This was not an Accident to be disregarded, and left behind; therefore Hernan Cortez went immediately away with some of his Friends for Vera Cruz, leaving the Command of the Troops to Pedro de Alvarado and Gonzalo de Sandoval. At his Arrival, one of the Vessels seem'd to be at Anchor at a considerable Distance from the Shore; and soon after they discovered four Spaniards on the Shore, who drew near without any Fear, giving to understand they fought them.

ONE of them was an Escrivano, or Notary, and the others came as Witnesses, of a Notification they intended to make to Cortez in the Name of their Captains. They brought it in Writing, and it contained, That Francisco de Garay, Governor of the Island of Jamaica, by Virtue of an Order which he had from the King, to Discover and People, had freighted three Ships with two hundred and seventy Spaniards, under the Command of Captain Alonso de Pineda, and taken Possession of that Land, on the side of the River of Panuco; and because he intended to establish a Colony near Naotlan, twelve or fourteen Leagues to the Westward, intimated to him, and required, that he should not make any Settlements that way.

HERNAN CORTEZ answered the Notary, that he did not understand what he meant by his Notification, or those Forms of Law. But desired that the Captain and he might meet, and all Things should be adjusted after the most convenient Manner; for they were all Subjects of the same King, and lay under an equal Obligation of assisting each other for his Service. He bid them go back with this Message: But because they did not go, but on the contrary, the Notary insisted in a disrespectful Manner, that he should return a direct Answer to his Notification, he ordered them to be seized; and hid himself with his Men among some little Sand Hills, whereof there are many on that Shore; where he stay'd all that Night, and part of the next Day, the Ship never offering to stir, or discovering any other Design they had, than that of staying for their Messengers; which put him upon trying whether he could by any Stratagem draw any of their Men on Shore. The first Thing he thought on, was to order the Prifoners to be stripp'd, and four of his own Men to go to the Shore in their Cloaths, making Signals to the Ship with their Cloaks and other Things. The Confequence of this Contrivance was, that twelve or fourteen Men, armed with Fire-Arms and Crofs-Bows, came in a Boat: But the four Men, who were disguis'd, retiring that they might not be known, and answering their Call, and hiding their Faces, they durst not land: So that they only took three who leap'd on Shore, being more courageous, or lefs confiderate; the reft returned on board the Veffel, which, being thus undeceiv'd, weigh'd Anchor, and followed her Courfe. Hernan Cortez at firft doubted that thefe Veffels might belong to Diego Velafquez, and feared they might have obliged him to put a Stop to his March: But the Defigns of Francifco de Garay gave him very little Uneafinefs, as an Affair which in Time might be much eafier adjusted; fo that he returned to Zempoala eafed of his Cares, and not without fome Advantage; for he brought with him an Addition of feven Soldiers, which, in a Place where a Spaniard was of fo much Value, was efteemed a Happinefs, and look'd upon as a good Recruit. Soon after, they provided for their March; and upon their leaving the Place, drew up the Army in Order, forming a Body of Spaniards for the Vanguard, and the Indians for the Rear, commanded by Mamegi, Theuche, and Tamelli, Caziques of the Mountains: The ftrongeft of the Tamenes were ordered to take Charge of the Artillery, the reft were referved for the Baggage. In this Order, with a Party before to look out, they began their March on the fixteenth Day of Auguft. The Army was well received in their firft Marches, at Jalapa, Socochima, and Texucla, Towns in the fame Confederacy. As they went along they fcattered among thofe friendly Indians the Seeds of Religion, not fo much to inform them of the Truth, as to leave them fufpicious of their own Errors. Hernan Cortez feeing them fo docil and well difpofed, was of Opinion, that they fhould erect a Crofs in every Town they paffed thro', that at leaft by this Means their Worfhip might be introduced; but Father Bartolome de Olmedo, and the Licentiate Juan Diaz, oppofed this Opinion, perfwading him that it might be a Rashnefs to truft the Holy Crofs to Barbarians ill instructed, who might offer fome Indecency to it, or at leaft treat it after the fame Manner as they did their Idols, if they fhould fuperftitiously worfhip the fame, without being fenfible of the Myftery which the Crofs represented.

HIS Piety first moved him to make the Proposition; but his good Judgment made him sensible of the Force of the others Reason.

THEY next enter'd upon the rough Part of the Mountain, the first Difficulty they met with in their Road to Mexico; where they suffered very much; for they were obliged to march over an uninhabitable Mountain three Days, whose Paths were over Precipices. They carried the Artillery by Strength of Arms, and some Contrivances; and the Badness of the Weather fatigued them much. The Cold was excessive, and the Showers of Rain very hard and frequent, and the poor Soldiers having no Conveniency to make Barracks at Night, and no other Shelter but their Arms, they marched to keep themselves warm, and were obliged to seek for Ease with Weariness. Their Provisions also failed them, the last Calamity upon these Occasions; and their Resolution began now to contend with their Strength, when they gained the Top of the Mountain: There they found a Temple and a great Quantity of Wood; but they made no Stay, because on the other Side they discovered some neighbouring Villages, to which they marched hastily, to refresh themselves, and there found Accommodation sufficient to make them forget all that they had suffered.

AT this Place began the Country of Zocoatlan, in those Days a large and populous Province, whose Cazique resided in a City of the same Name, situate in the Valley at the Foot of the Mountain.

HERNAN CORTEZ gave him notice of his Arrival and Designs, sending two Zempoalan Indians with the Message, who quickly returned with a grateful Answer; and in a short Time after they discovered the City, a large Place, which in a stately manner filled great Part of the Plain. Their Towers and other Buildings at a Distance appeared white, and because a Portuguese Soldier compar'd it to Castilblanco in Portugal, for some Time it preserved that Name. The Cazique came forth to receive Cortez with great Attendance; but with a kind of forced Civility, which shewed more of Artifice than Good-will. The Entertainment he gave the Troops was not very pleasant, their Lodging incommo- dious, and the Provisions scanty, and in every Thing it appeared, how little he was pleas'd with his Guests: But Hernan Cortez stifled his Resentment, and repress'd the Anger of his Soldiers, that he might not give the Indians any Mistrust of the Peace which he had propos'd, when he treated of only marching thro' their Country, preserving the Reputation of his Arms, without stopping to improve it by more inconsiderable Enterprizes.

C H A P. XV.

The Cazique of Zocothlan visits Cortez a second Time, and highly extols the Greatness of Motezuma. Cortez resolves to march by the Way of Tlascalala, of which Province, and the Nature of its Government, some Information is got at Xacazingo.

TH E next Day the Cazique repeated his Visit, and came with a greater Train of Relations and Servants: His Name was Olinteth; he was a Man of Capacity, and Lord of many Towns, and respected as the most considerable Person among all his Neighbours. Cortez adorned himself to receive him with all the usual outward Shew. And this Meeting was very remarkable; for after having received him with great Civility, and the usual Compliments being over, with a becoming Gravity, Cortez (believing he should find the same Complaint from him which he had heard from others,) asked whether he was a Subject of the King of Mexico. To which the Cazique readily replied, "Is there any Man upon the Earth who is not a Vassal and Slave to Motezuma?" Cortez might very easily have been discompos'd at the Cazique's answering him with another Question, which seem'd so resolute and lofty; but he was so much Master of himself, that with some Scorn he told him, "He knew very little of the World, for that himself and those who accompanied him, were Subjects of another King, so powerful, that he had many Subjects greater Princes than Motezuma." The Cazique was not mov'd at these Words, but, on the contrary, without entering into any Dispute or Comparison, went on, recounting the Grandeur of his King as if he would not stay to be asked, saying with great Gravity, That Motezuma was the greatest Prince then known in the World; that the Provinces of his Dominion were not to be reckon'd; that he kept his Court in a City impregnable, founded in the Water in great Lakes; that the Entrance to it was by Dikes, or Causeways, with Drawbridges over several Openings, by which there was a Communication of the Waters.

He enlarged much on the Immensity of his Riches, and the Strength of his Armies; and above all on the Unhappiness of those who did not obey him; for with them he made up the Number of his Sacrifices, and that every Year above twenty thousand Men (Enemies, or Rebels) died upon the Altars of his Gods. What he said was true, but he spoke it by way of Hyperbole, and it was easily perceived that he was influenced by Motexuma, and recounted his Greatness rather to cause Fear than Admiration.

HERNAN CORTEZ perceived the Design of his Discourse, and thinking it necessary to put on Resolution, to disappoint those boasting Expressions, answered, That he was already sufficiently informed of the Empire and Greatness of Motexuma; and that were he a less Prince he should not have come from such distant Countries to make an Offer of Friendship from another greater Prince than himself: That his Embassy was peaceable, and that the Men who attended him in Arms served more for a Shew of Authority than Force; but that both he, and all the Caziques of the Empire must know, that he desired Peace without being afraid of War; for that the most inconsiderable of his Soldiers was able to cope with an Army of his King; that he would never draw the Sword without just Provocation: But once drawn, I will (said he) put every Thing before me to Fire and Sword, and Nature will assist me with her Prodigies, and Heaven with its Lightnings; for it is the Cause of Heaven I come to defend, by banishing your Vices, and the Errors of your Religion, and these very Sacrifices of human Blood, which you account the Greatness of your King. And (breaking up the Visit) he turned to his Soldiers, and said, "This, my Friends, is what we seek, great Difficulties, and great Riches: By the one we gain Fame, and by the other Estates." With this short Speech he abated the Pride of the Indians, and added fresh Courage to the Spaniards; telling his Thoughts to all without Artifice; for from the very Beginning of this Undertaking, God had so strengthened his Heart, that altho' he sufficiently considered, and knew the Dangers, he entered upon them, as if he had been sure of Success.

THE Spaniards stay'd five Days in Zocoatlan; and Cortez quickly found in the Cazique another sort of Respect; for the Accommodation of the Troops was bettered; and they were more punctual in the Entertainment of their Guests.

CORTEZ's Answer gave him much Uneasiness, and he discovered a thoughtful Pensiveness, occasioned by his own Observations, as he himself afterwards confess'd to Father Bartolome de Olmedo. He concluded in the first Place, that no Men would be so bold as to oppose Motexuma: And again, that they must be something more, who talked with so much Contempt of his Gods.

WITH this Conceit he observ'd the Difference of their Countenances, the Novelty of their Arms, and the Strangeness of their Habit, together with the Obedience of their Horses: And it seem'd to him, that the Spaniards were endued with superior Reason, when they argued against the Inhumanity of their Sacrifices, the Injustice of their Laws, and the Permissions of Sensuality (so unbounded amongst those Barbarians, that the greatest Injuries against Nature were accounted lawful.) And from all these Principles, his high Esteem of them drew Consequences, to make him believe, that some Divinity dwelt in them. For there is no Understanding so deprav'd, as not to be sensible of the Deformity of Vice, notwithstanding it be embraced by the Inclination, and disfigured by Custom. But the Fear of Motexuma, so entirely possess'd him, that he could not prevail with himself to acknowledge the Influence those Considerations had on his Mind.

HE rested satisfy'd with giving what was necessary for the Support of the Troops: And not daring to show his Riches, was sparing of his Presents, the greatest of his Liberality being four female Slaves, which he gave Cortez to make his Bread, and twenty noble Indians; which he offered as Guides for the Army.

THERE arose a Question about the Road which they should chuse for their March; and the Cazique propos'd that of the Province of Cholula, as being a fertile Country and well peopled, whose Inhabitants being more inclined to Merchandise than War, would give a secure and commodious Passage to his Troops: And he advis'd them with great Earnestness not to march by the Road of Tlascala, as being a Country always in War, and the Inhabitants of so bloody a Disposition, that they plac'd their Happiness in making and keeping Men their Enemies. But the principal Indians who commanded the Zempoalans, told Cortez privately, that he must not confide in that Advice, for that Cholula was a very populous City, and the People not to be depended on. That in Cholula, and the Towns of that District, Motexuma commonly quarter'd his Troops: And that it was very possible the Cazique might lead them into the Danger with an evil Design: For the Province of Tlascala (tho' it were large, and the People warlike) were Confederates and Friends to the Totonaques and Zempoalans, which were in his Army, and made continual Wars with Motexuma: For which two Considerations, it would be more secure to March thro' their Country:

Country : And being in Company with their Allies, the Spaniards would not be looked upon as Strangers. Cortez lik'd what they said, and finding it more reasonable to trust to his Indian Friends, than to a Cazique so much affected to the Interest of Motexuma, he commanded the Troops to march to the Province of Tlascalala, whose Bounds they in a little Time discovered; for they border'd upon those of Zocotlan; and during the first Marches nothing considerable offered: But afterwards they heard some Rumours of War, and were informed that the Country was in Arms, and their Design kept secret; for which Reason Cortez resolv'd to halt in a Town but indifferently peopled, called Xacazingo, until he might be better informed.

TLASCALA was at that Time a Province abounding with Inhabitants, and above fifty Leagues in Circumference: The Land was mountainous and uneven, full of Hills, and seem'd to be Branches of the Mountain, which is now called the Great Cordillera. Their Towns, whose Structure was rather durable than handsome, were built upon Eminences, partly to make use of the Advantages of the Ground in their Defence, and partly to leave the Plains to cultivate. At first they had Kings, which Government lasted some Years, until Civil Wars arising, they no longer cared to obey, and flung off the Yoke. But as the People cannot subsist of themselves, (being always Enemies to Subjection, till they are sensible of the Damages of Liberty) they formed themselves into a Commonwealth, making many Princes to get rid of one. They divided their Towns into different Districts, and each named one of their Chiefs to reside in the Court of Tlascalala, where they formed a Senate, whose Resolutions all obeyed. A notable Kind of Aristocracy, which being found amongst the Barbarity of those People, diminishes pretty much the Credit of our Politicks. Under this Form of Government they maintained themselves long against the Kings of Mexico, and at that Time were in their greatest Strength; for the Oppressions of Motexuma had augmented the Number of their Confederates; and they had now brought over to their Party the Otomies, a Nation barbarous even among Barbarians; but always desirous of War, in which they knew not how to distinguish Valour from Cruelty.

CORTÉZ having receiv'd this Account, and not thinking it reasonable to despise it, consulted about sending Messengers to the Republick, to facilitate the Passage of his Troops; which Message he entrusted to four of the chiefest Zempoalans, instructing them by Means of Donna Marina and Aguilar, in the Speech they were to make to the Senate, till they had in a Manner got it by Heart: And he chose them out of those who proposed in Zocotlan the Road of Tlascalala, that they might have their own Advice in view, and be the more interested in the good Success of the Negotiation.

C H A P. XVI.

Cortez's four Envoys set out for Tlascalala. An Account of the Habit, and the Manner how Embassies were deliver'd in that Country; and of the Debates of that Republick about the Point of receiving the Spaniards in a peaceable Manner.

THE four Zempoalans immediately adorn'd themselves after the Manner of Ambassadors: For which Employment, they put upon their Shoulder a Mantle, or Tippet of Cotton, wreath'd, and knotted at the Ends: In the Right Hand they bore a large Arrow, with the Feathers up on high, and on the left Arm a Target made of a Shell. The Intent of the Embassy was known by the Feathers of the Arrow; for the Red denoted War, and the White denoted Peace; after the same Manner as the Romans distinguish'd by different Symbols the Feciales and Caduceatores. By these Signs they were known and respected in their Marches: But they could not go out of the high Roads of the Province where they were travelling; for if they were found without them, those Privileges, held for sacred, lost all Force and Immunity; observing religiously this kind of publick Faith, which Necessity invented, and placed among their Laws, as the Right of Nations.

WITH these Marks of their Employment, the four Envoys of Cortez entred into Tlascalala; and being known as such, they were lodged in the Calpisca, (for so they called the House set aside for the Reception of Ambassadors;) and the Day following the Senate met to give them Audience in a great Hall, where they held their Councils. The Senators were seated according to their Seniority, upon low Chairs of an extraordinary Wood made of one Piece, which they called Yopales. As soon as the Ambassadors appear'd, they raised themselves a little from their Seats, and welcomed them with moderate Courtesy. They came in with their Arrows raised on high, and the Points upon their Heads; which, among their Ceremonies, was accounted the most submissive. Having paid their Respects to the Senate, they walked leisurely up to the middle of the Hall, where they kneel'd down, and without lifting up their Eyes, waited for Leave to be given them to speak. The eldest Senator ordered them to declare their Business, and they seating themselves on their own Legs, one of them who was pitch'd upon as the properest Person to make the Speech, delivered himself after this Manner.

NOBLE Republick, Valiant and Potent Tlascallans; “The Lord of Zempoala, and the Mountain Caziques, your Friends, and Confederates, send you Health; and wishing you abundant Crops, and the Death of your Enemies, they give you to understand, that certain invincible Men, are arrived among them from the East, who seem to be Deities; for they sail upon great Palaces, and make use of Thunder and Lightning, the peculiar Arms of Heaven: They are Servants of another God, superior to ours, who is offended with Tyrannies and Sacrifices of human Blood. Their Captain is Ambassador from a very powerful Prince, who by the Impulse of his Religion desires to reform the Abuses of our Country, and redress the Violences of Motexuma; and having already rescued our Provinces from the Oppression under which they lived, finds himself obliged to pass thro' your Republick, in his Way to Mexico; and desires to know wherein that Tyrant has offended you, that he may take your Cause in hand, and add it to the rest, which justify his Undertaking. With this Notice then of their Designs, and with Experience of their Benignity, we come before you to request and admonish you, on the Part of our Caziques and all their Confederates, that you would admit these Strangers, as Men desirous of doing Good, and Friends to your Allies. And on the Part of their Captain, we assure you, that he comes in a peaceable Manner, and only desires you would grant him a free Passage thro' your Country, believing that he desires your Good; and that his Arms are the Instruments of Justice and Reason, which defend the Cause of Heaven, in their own Nature good and mild, and only hurtful to the Wicked, and where they are provoked.”

HAVING thus concluded, the Four raised themselves upon their Knees, and making a profound Reverence to the Senate, they seated themselves as before, expecting their Answer.

THE Senators conferred a little among themselves; and one in the Name of all the rest, told them, That they admitted the Proposition of the Zempoalans and Totonaques their Confederates, with all imaginable Gratitude; but that the Answer they were to give to the Captain of the Strangers, required further Deliberation.

HAVING received this Answer, the Ambassadors retired to their Lodging; and the Senate shut themselves in, to discuss the Difficulties or Conveniences of that Proposal. They first weighed the Importance of the Affair, thinking it worthy of mature Deliberation; and they disagreed so far in Opinion, as to occasion great Disputes. Some were for granting the Strangers the Liberty of passing on, as they desired; others were for making War upon them, and endeavouring to destroy them at once; others were for denying them Passage, but permitting them to continue their March, provided it were without their Confines: Which Difference of Opinion occasion'd much Noise, without coming to any Resolution, till Magiscatzin, one of the eldest of the Senators, and of greatest Authority in the Republick, took it upon himself, and causing Silence to be made, is said to have spoke after this Manner.

“ You well know, Noble and Valiant Tlascalans, that in the “ first Ages of Antiquity, it was revealed to our Priests, and is “ to this Day believed amongst us as a Point of Religion, that “ an invincible Race of Men are to come from the Oriental Re“ gions to this World, which we inhabit, with such Dominion “ over the Elements, that they shall found moveable Cities up“ on the Seas, making use of Fire and Air to subdue the Earth:
 “ And tho’ among the Judicious, it is not believed that they “ shall be Gods, (as the Vulgar apprehends it,) yet the same “ Tradition informs us, that they shall be a celestial Race of “ Men, so valiant, that one shall be able to vanquish a thou“ sand; and so good, that they shall only endeavour to make “ us live according to Reason and Justice. I cannot deny, but “ that the great Conformity there is between these Strangers, “ and those Signs, have given me a very great Concern. These “ come from the East; their Arms are Fire, and Houses on the “ Waters are their Vessels. Of their Valour, you have already “ heard from the Fame of their Actions in Tabasco; and their “ Goodness you now see acknowledged by your own very Con“ federates; and if we cast our Eyes upon those Comets and “ Signals from Heaven, which have so often terrified us, me“ thinks they speak to us, and come as Messengers of this great “ Novelty. Who then will be so bold and rash, (if these be the “ People

“ People of our Prophecies,) to try his Strength with Heaven,
 “ and treat as Enemies those who come armed with its Decrees?
 “ I, at least, for my own Part, shall fear the Indignation of the “ Gods, who rigorously punish those that rebel against them;
 “ and with their own very Lightning, it seems as if they were “ pointing out to us to obey, for the Threats of Thunder are “ to all, and it only destroys where it meets Resistance. But I “ will suppose that these Signals are to be disregarded as casual,
 “ and that the Strangers are Men, like us: What Harm have they “ done us that we should consult about Revenge? Upon what “ Injury done to us shall we found this Violence? Shall Tlascalá, “ which maintains its Liberty by its Victories, and its Victo“ ries by the Justice of its Arms, enter voluntarily into a War, “ which casts a Blemish upon its Government and Valour?
 “ These People come in a peaceable Manner: Their Request is to “ pass through our Republick, which they do not endeavour “ without our Permission: Where then is their Crime? Where “ our Provocation? They arrive at our Gates, confiding in the “ Protection of our Friends; and shall we loose our Friends by “ engaging with those who desire our Friendship? What will
 “ the rest of our Confederates judge of this Action? and what “ will Fame report of us, if five hundred Men oblige us to take “ Arms? Shall we gain as much by overcoming them, as we “ shall loose by having feared them? My Opinion is, that we “ admit them with Courtesy, and grant them the Passage they “ desire; if they are Men, because their Request is reasonable;
 “ and if they are any Thing more, because the Will of the “ Gods is a sufficient Motive.”

THE Opinion of Magiscatzin met with great Applause, and all were inclined to follow him with Acclamations; when one of the Senators, called Xicotental, desired Leave to speak: A young Man of great Spirit, who, on Account of Capacity and noble Actions, possess'd the Post of General of their Army.
 Leave being obtained, and Silence being made, “ Grey Hairs, “ said he, are not always infallible in their Decisions, as being “ more inclined to mistrust, than to act with Boldness; and “ more proper to perswade to Patience, than to valiant Actions.
 “ I pay all Respect, as you do, to the Authority and Opinion of “ Magiscatzin: But you will not think it strange, considering “ my Age, and Profession, that I differ in Opinion, and per“ haps give the best Advice; for when we are talking of making “ War, we are often deceived by that which we call Prudence;
 “ for every Thing that looks like Fear, is not Virtue, but a “ Passion. It is true, there is an Expectation among us of these “ Oriental

“ Oriental Reformers, whose Coming is kept up in the Prophe“ cy, and is dilatory in convincing us. It is not my Intention “ to make little of a Report, that has been made venerable by “ the Consent of Ages; but tell me, I desire you, what Secu“ rity have we, that these are our promised Strangers? Is it the “ same Thing to come by the Way of the East, as to come from “ the Celestial Regions, which we consider as the Birth-Place of “ the Sun. The Fire-Arms and great Embarkations which you “ call Sea Palaces, may they not be the Effect of human In“ dustry, which are admired, because they have not been seen?
 “ And perhaps they may be the Illusions of some Inchantment, “ like the deceiving of the Sight, which we call cunning in our “ Diviners. What they did in Tabasco, was it any Thing more “ than breaking an Army superior to them in Number? Shall “ this be thought in Tlascalala supernatural, where every Day “ greater Deeds are done, with the ordinary Force? And this “ great Benignity they have used towards the Zempoalans; may “ it not be an Artifice, the more easily to gain the People? At “ least I shall take it for a suspicious Sweetness, that pleases the “ Palate, to cover the Poison; for it is not of a Piece with the “ rest, that we know of their Covetousness, Pride, and Am“ bition. These Men (if they are not some Monsters, flung “ up by the Sea upon our Coasts) rob our People; live at Dis“ cretion by the Law of their own Will, thirsting after Gold “ and Silver, and given up to the Delights of the Land. They “ contemn our Laws, and endeavour dangerous Novelties, “ both in Justice and Religion: They destroy our Temples, “ pull in Pieces our Altars, and blaspheme our Gods; and is “ this the Race you call celestial? and can any one make it a “ Doubt whether we should resist? and do we listen without “ Scandal to the Name of Peace? If the Zempoalans and Toto- “ naques have admitted them into their Friendship, it was with“ out consulting our Republick: They advance under no better “ Protection than the Want of Thought, which deserves to be “ punish’d in those that support them. These Impressions of “ the Air and frightful Signals, so magnified by Magiscatzin, do “ rather perswade us to treat them like Enemies, as being con“ stant Forerunners of Calamities and Miseries: Heaven with its “ Prodigies, does not give us notice of what we wish, but what we “ are to fear; for those Felicities never come accompanied by “ Terrors; nor does Heaven light Comets to lull us asleep, and “ to make us negligent and careless. My Opinion therefore is,
 “ that we join our Forces, and make an end of them at once;
 “ for they come into our Power, mark’d out by Signals in
 “ the

“ the Heavens, purposely that we may look on them as Oppressors of our Country, and of our Gods; and that establishing the Reputation of our Arms upon their Punishment; the World may perceive, that it is not the same Thing to be immortal in Tabasco, and invincible in Tlascalala.

THESE Reasons made greater Impression on the Senate than those of Magiscatzin, as more agreeable to the Inclination of the People, bred up in Arms, and breathing nothing but War; but upon discussing the Matter again, they resolved (as a Medium between both Opinions,) that Xicotental should join his Troops, and try his Strength with the Spaniards, supposing if he overcame them, they preserved the Reputation of their Nation, and if he should be beaten, room might be left for the Republick to treat of Peace, by laying the Blame of the Engagement upon the Otomies, and declaring it was a Disorder occasioned by their unseasonable Fierceness. For which End they so disposed Matters, that the Zempoala Ambassadors were detained in a sort of an underhand Imprisonment, having in view the preserving of their Confederates; for they very well knew the Danger of this War, tho' they undertook it with little Attention, being so brave, that they depended on their own Valour for the Success, but at the same Time so cautious, that they kept in view the Accidents of a contrary Fortune.

C H A P. XVII.

The Spaniards resolve to draw near to Tlascalala, looking on the Detention of their Messengers as a bad Sign. They engage with a Body of five thousand Indians that lay in Ambush for them; and afterwards with the whole Power of the Republick.

EIGHT Days the Spaniards stay'd at Xacazingo, expecting the Return of their Messengers, whose Delay was looked on as something extraordinary; and Hernan Cortez, with the Approbation of his Captains, and the Chiefs of the Zempoalans, (for he used to shew them so much Favour and Confidence, as to hear their Opinions,) resolved

ved to continue his March, and draw nearer to Tlascala, in order to discover the Intentions of those Indians; considering, that if they were resolved on War, (as appear'd by the first Tokens, now confirmed by the Detention of their Ambassadors,) it would be better to shorten the Time of their Preparations, and seek them in their own City, before they should have the Advantage of joining their Troops, and engage drawn up in Order in the Field. The Army immediately marched in good Order, without omitting any of the Precautions which are wont to be observed by those who set their Foot into an Enemy's Country; and taking a Road between two Mountains, whose Skirts formed a very delightful Valley, at little more than the Distance of two Leagues, they came to a great Wall, which ran from the one Mountain to the other, entirely stopping up the Way: A sumptuous and strong Piece of Building, which shewed the Power and Greatness of the Owner. The Outside was of hewn Stone, united with Mortar of extraordinary Strength. It was twenty Foot thick, and a Fathom and an half high; and on the Top was a Parapet, after the Manner of our Fortifications. The Entrance was narrow and winding, the Wall in that Part dividing, and making two Walls, which circularly crossed each other, for the Space of ten Paces. They were informed by the Indians of Zocotlan, that the said Fortification was the Boundary of the Province of Tlascala, built in former Ages to defend themselves against the Invasions of their Enemies; and it was very happy that they had not possessed themselves of it against the Spaniards; which they did not, either because there wanted Room in this Work for them to march out and receive them, or that they resolved to expect them in the open Field, and invest them with their whole Force, and so deprive the Inferior in Number of the Advantage of engaging in a narrow Pass.

THE Spaniards passed to the other Side without any Disorder or Difficulty; and having again formed themselves, continu'd their March slowly, till coming out into a more spacious Country, the Scouts discovered at a large Distance twenty or thirty Indians, whose Plumes (an Ornament only used by Soldiers) denoted that there were Troops in the Field. They came with this Account to Cortez; who ordered them to return with Speed, and endeavour to call them with Signs of Peace, without giving themselves much Trouble in following them; for the Place where they were was uneven, and there seemed to be several Hollows and high Banks capable of hiding an Ambuscade. He immediately follow'd them them with eight Horfe, ordering his Captains to advance leifurely with the Infantry ; for it is never right to march Soldiers out of Breath, and enter into an Engagement with Troops that are fatigued.

THE Indians ftay'd in the fame Place till the fix Horfe of the Vanguard drew near ; and without minding their Calling, and Behaviour with which they endeavoured to perfwade them to Peace, they turned their Backs, running till they incorporated with a Party a little before them, where they fac'd about, and put themselves upon their Defence. At the fame Time the fourteen Horfe joined, and charged that Troop, rather to difcover the Country, than for any Account they made of their fmall Number. The Indians flood the Charge, lofing but little Ground, making ufe of their Arms fo valiantly, that without minding what Damage they received, they wounded two Soldiers and five Horfes. Upon that the Ambufcade which they had prepared, march'd out to the Affiftance of their Friends, and they difcovered a Body of about five thousand Men at the Time when the Infantry came up, and the Troops formed themselves in a Battalion, to fustain the Fury with which the Enemy advanced to charge. But at the firft Volley of the Fire-Arms, which made a great Slaughter of their People, they turned their Backs and retired very haftily ; which firft Confufion the Spaniards took Advantage of to clofe with them ; and did it with fuch good Order, and fo much Refolution, that in a fmall Time they quitted the Field, leaving fixty Men dead upon the Spot, and fome Prifoners. Hernan Cortez did not care to follow the Chace, becaufe the Day was declining, and he was defirous rather to terrify than deftroy them. The Spaniards immediately poffeffed themselves of fome little Houfes which were in fight, where they found Provisions, and paffed the Night chearfully, but not carelefly, fome taking their Reft, whilft others watch'd.

THE next Day they continued their March in the fame Order, and difcovered the Enemy a fecond Time in a larger Body than before, coming with much more Haste than good Order. They marched up their Troops with great Noife and Arrogance : But difcharging at too great a Diftance, their Arrows did no Execution ; and at the fame Time began to retreat, continuing to difcharge at a great Diftance, and particularly the Slingers, who were the furtheft off, feemed the moft refolute.

HERNAN CORTEZ foon perceiv'd, that their Retreat had more of Stratagem than Fear ; and gueffing that a greater Engagement would enfue, he follow'd the Enemy with his Forces in close Order, till having gained an Eminence which interposed in the Road, he discovered in the Plain, on the other side, an Army which, as it was said, consisted of above forty thousand Men. It was composed of various Nations, distinguished by the Colours of their Ensigns and Plumes. In it were the Nobles of Tlascal, and all their Confederates. Xicotencal commanded in Chief, who, as has been said, was General of the Army of the Republick; and under him the Auxiliary Troops were commanded by their own Caziques, or most considerable Soldiers.

THE Spaniards might very well have been disheartned at the Sight of such an unequal Force; but upon this Occasion, the Experience they had gained in Tabasco stood them in great Stead, and Hernan Cortez stopp'd but a very little while to persuade them to the Battle; for he saw by their Countenances and other Demonstrations, the Desire they had to engage. They began presently to march down the Hill with a chearful Security: And because it was broken uneven Land, in which they could not manage their Horses, neither had the Fire-Arms their Effect, discharged from the upper Ground, they took much Pains to beat off the Enemy from those Grounds where they endeavoured to dispute the Pass: But as soon as the Horse got into better Ground, and part of the Foot had march'd into the Plain, they disposed themselves so as to make Way for the Artillery to come down, and the Rear-Guard to form themselves. The main Body of the Enemies was at little more Distance than Musket-Shot, engaging only with Shouts and Threats; but scarce did our Troops begin to move, after the Signal given, when the Indians began to retire again, as if they had fled; being indeed a second Stratagem of Xicotencal's, to gain by the advancing of the Spaniards, his Design of surrounding and attacking them on all Sides; as appeared soon after; for as soon as ever they had them at a Distance from the Hill, which might have secured their Rear, the greatest Part of their Army opened to the Right and Left, and running furiously, possessed themselves of the Ground on both Sides; and then closing the Circle, obtained their Design of surrounding their Enemies at a Distance. They presently began to close with incredible Diligence, and draw into a less Compass; and were so united and resolute, that the Spaniards found it necessary to draw up in a Square, facing every Way, and take Care of defending themselves rather than of offending the Enemy, making Amends by Union, and a good Disposition for the Inequality of Numbers.

THE Air was filled with Arrows, and rent by their Shouts and Noise: It rained Darts and Stones upon the Spaniards; and the Indians being sensible what little Effect their missile Arms had on their Enemy, came quickly to the Pikes and Swords. Great was the Slaughter of the Indians, and greater was there Obstinacy.

HERNAN CORTEZ charged with his Horse where he found the greatest Occasion, breaking in and trampling under Foot all that were near him. The Fire-Arms did them great Damage, and at the same Time occasioned much Terror; the Artillery did not make a Shot in vain, casting Astonishment among those whom the Balls spared. As it was one of their Policies of War to conceal their Wounded, and carry off their Dead, a great many were employed that Way, and their Troops began to diminish; so that they fell back to a greater Distance, and began to fight more cautiously; but Hernan Cortez, before they could put themselves in Order to close afresh, re-resolved to attack the weakest Part of their Army, and open a Passage to seize some Post, whereby he might extend his whole Front against the Enemy. He communicated his Intentions to his Captains; and having placed his Horse on the Wings, followed by the Foot at a large Pace, he closed with the Indians, calling aloud upon St. Peter. At first they made some Resistance, plying their Weapons valiantly; but the Fierceness of the Horses (supernatural or monstrous in their Imagination) put them into Fear and Disorder, so that flying on all Sides, they wounded and trod one another under Foot, doing the same Damage to themselves which they feared from the Spaniards.

PEDRO DE MORON, who was mounted on a lusty swift Mare, had engaged himself too far; when some principal Tlascalans (who were got together for this Purpose) seeing him alone, attacked him, and having seized his Lance and Bridle-Arm, gave the Mare so many Wounds that she fell down dead, and in an Instant they cut off her Head, some say, it was at one Stroke; but that hyperbolical Way of Speaking does nothing alter the Substance of the Facts. Pedro de Moron received some slight Wounds, and was taken Prisoner; but he was soon after relieved by other Horse, who, with the Death of some Indians, freed him, and brought him back to the Army. This Accident was no way favourable to the Design they had; for it gave the Enemy Time to return and close, and form themselves again on that Side; so that the Spaniards now tired with the Engagement, (for it lasted an Hour,) began to doubt of the Success; but making a Virtue of Necessity, they were preparing to renew their Attack, when at once the Cries of the Enemy ceased, and there being a sudden Silence among that

that Multitude, they heard only their little Kettle-Drums and Horns sounding a Retreat, after their Manner, as presently appeared; for at the same Time their Troops began to move off, and marching slowly for the Road of Tlascala, they removed to the Top of a Hill, and left the Field to their Enemies.

THE Spaniards had Time to breathe upon this extraordinary Accident, which appeared to them miraculous, because they did not perceive any natural Cause, to which it might be attributed; but they understood afterwards (by Means of some Prisoners) that Xicotencal had ordered the Retreat, because the greatest Part of his Commanders being killed in the Battle, he durst not undertake to manage so many Men, without Officers to command them. Many of their Nobles likewise fell, which made the Undertaking cost them dear, and very great was the Number of their Wounded; but notwithstanding so great a Loss, and that our Troops were entire, and they the People who retreated, they entered their Lodgment triumphant, accounting it for a Victory that they were not overcome; and the Head of the Mare, being all they had to shew for their Triumph, Xicotencal carried it before him upon the Point of a Spear, and presently sent it to Tlascala, making a Present to the Senate of that formidable Spoil of War; which was greatly admired, and afterwards sacrificed in one of their Temples with extraordinary Solemnity: A proper Victim for those Altars, and less unclean than the very Gods which were honoured by it.

ON our Side about nine or ten Soldiers were wounded, and some Zempoalans, whose Assistance was of great Service upon this Occasion; for the Example of the Spaniards made them valiant, together with the Anger of seeing their Alliance despised and broken. At a little Distance they discovered a small Place, seated on an Eminence which commanded the Country; and Hernan Cortez considering the Fatigue of his People, and how much Occasion they had to be refreshed, consulted about possessing himself of that Post for their Lodgment; which was done without Difficulty; for the Inhabitants abandoned it upon the Retreat of their Army, leaving in it Abundance of Victuals, which helped to preserve their own Provisions, and refresh their Weariness. There was not sufficient Accommodation for all to be under Cover; but the Zempoalans took Care of themselves, building Huts in a very short Time; and the Situation, which was naturally strong, was secured as well as possible with some Works of Earth and Fascines, which they rais'd all the rest of the Day, with as much Heart and Cheerfulness fulness as if their very Work were Rest; not that they were insensible of the Danger in which they were, or thought the War finish'd, but because they attributed that to Providence, which they could not so much as hope for from their own Strength; and finding now that Heaven had declared in their Favour, they looked on those Things as possible, which a little before they held for miraculous.

C H A P. XVIII.

The Tlascalans recruit their Army. They engage a second Time with greater Force; and are overthrown and broke by the Valour of the Spaniards, and by another new Accident, which puts them in Disorder.

VARIOUS were the Reasonings in Tlascalala, upon the News of this ill Success. They lamented the Death of their Captains and Caziques in a publick Manner; and from this Concern of theirs sprung different Opinions. Some cried out for Peace, dignifying the Spaniards with the Name of immortal; whilst others broke out into Reproaches and Threats against them, comforting themselves with the Death of the Mare, the only Trophy of the War. Magiscatzin boasted he had foreseen the Success, repeating to his Friends what he had represented in the Senate, speaking of it as one who finds a Vanity even in the rejecting of his Advice. Xicotencal from his Camp desired that they would reinforce his Army with fresh Supplies, lessening his Loss, and making use of that to move them to Revenge. At this Time one of the Confederate Caziques arrived at Tlascalala with ten thousand Men, which Succour they looked on as a Providence of the Gods; and their Courage encreasing with their Forces, the Senate resolved to lift fresh Troops, and prosecute the War at all Hazard.

HERNAN CORTEZ (the Day after the Battle) endeavoured only to put his Fortifications in better Order, and surround his Quarters, adding new Works to help the natural Strength of the Place.

Place. He had a Mind to renew the Offers of Peace, and could find no Way to introduce his Negotiation; for the four Zempoalan Envoys (who were returned to the Army by different Ways) came terrify'd, and infected the rest. They had happily broke from a streight Confinement, (where they were put the Day Xicotencal took the Field,) being destin'd with their Blood to appease the God of War; and upon the Report they made of this Inhumanity, it did not seem convenient, nor indeed would it have been easy to make others expose themselves to the same Danger.

THE very Stillness of the Enemy gave him Concern; for there was not any Rumour of War in all the Country round about; and the Retreat of Xicotencal had all the Signs of a Dispute not yet ended. He ought in right Reason to have maintained this Post for his Retreat, in case of Necessity; but he found Inconveniencies in that Resolution; for the Indians would have interpreted the shutting himself up in his Quarters, as Want of Valour; a Consideration of great Importance, in a War supported more by Opinion than Force.

BUT taking Care of every Thing, like a diligent Commander, he resolv'd to sally out the next Day in the Morning to gain Intelligence, view the Country, and disturb the Enemy; which he executed in Person, with all his Horse, and two hundred Foot, the one Half Spaniards, and the other Zempoalans.

WE must own this Undertaking was dangerous, considering the Force of the Enemy, and in a Country so conveniently disposed for Ambushes. Hernan Cortez should have ventured his Person less, the whole Affair depending upon him; and in our Opinion, this Excess of Bravery is by no Means worthy of Imitation, by those who command Armies, whose Safety ought to be consider'd as publick, and whose Valour is to inspire others. We might excuse him by the Examples of several great Men, who have been the first in exposing themselves to the Dangers of Battles, performing a Part with their Swords, in the Execution of their own Commands; but as we are more obliged to give a just Relation of his Actions, than to clear them from all Blame, we shall leave him open to this honourable Objection, which is indeed the best Fault of a Commander.

THEY went so far as to discover some Villages in the Road to Tlascalala, where they found great Quantities of Provisions, and took several Prisoners; from whom they understood, that Xicotencal was encamped two Leagues from thence, not far from the City; and that he was raising more Forces against the Spaniards; with which Account they returned to their Quarters, having done some Damage in the neighbouring Places : For the Zempoalans, who were now anger'd upon their own Account, put every Thing to Fire and Sword they met in their Way ; an Excess which Cortez reprimanded faintly ; for he was not sorry that the Tlascalans should be made sensible how far he was from being afraid of the War, since he provoked them to it with such Hostilities.

HE presently set at Liberty all the Prisoners he had made in that Sally ; and gave them such Entertainment as appeared necessary to make them forget their Fear of the Spaniards, and to return with an Account of their Benignity. He ordered to search out (among the other Prisoners that were taken on the Day of the Battle,) those who appeared the most ingenious ; and out of those he chose two or three to carry a Message to Xicotencal. The Substance of which was, That he was very much concerned for the Loss his People had sustained in the Battle ; for which they were to blame who gave the Occasion, by receiving those with Arms who came to propose Peace ; that he did again require it of him, laying aside entirely all the Reasons he had to be displeas'd ; but that if they would not presently disarm, and accept of it, they would oblige him utterly to destroy them at once, making the Name of their Nation a Terror to their Neighbours. The Indians departed with this Message, well instructed and pleas'd, promising to return with the Answer ; and but a few Hours pass'd before they made good their Word : But they returned bloody and ill-treated ; for Xicotencal order'd them to be punish'd for their Boldness in bringing him such a Proposal ; and did not order them to be kill'd, that they might return wounded to the Sight of Cortez ; and that carrying with them this farther Proof of his Resolution, they might let him know, That at the first Rising of the Sun he should see him in the Field ; that his Intention was to carry him and all his People alive to the Altar of his Gods, and appease them with their Hearts Blood ; and that he did immediately give him Notice of his Resolution, that he might have Time to prepare himself : Giving him further to understand, that he was not accustomed to lessen the Glory of his Victories by the Carelessness of his Enemies. The Insolence of this Barbarian occasion'd more Anger than Concern in the Mind of Cortez : But he did not disregard his Advice, nor despise his Counsel ; on the contrary, at the first Break of Day, he drew out his Troops into the Field, leaving in his Quarters such a Force as he thought necessary for their Defence, and advancing little less than half a League, chose a convenient Post, where he might receive the Enemy with Advantage ; there he

form'd his Ranks as the Ground would permit, and agreeable to the Experience he already had of this War. His Flanks he secured with the Artillery, ordering them when and at what Distance to discharge. He sent his Vanguard before, and putting himself at the Head of his Horse, to take care of succouring where it was needful, he attended the Success, shewing in his Countenance the Easiness of his Mind, without having much Occasion to make use of his Eloquence to instruct and animate his Soldiers; for they all came chearful and courageous, their Custom of overcoming making them desirous to engage.

It was not long before the Scouts returned with an Account that the Enemy was upon the March with a very powerful Army; and very soon after they discovered their Vanguard. The Plain began to fill with armed Indians; the Eye could not reach the End of their Troops, which covered the whole Horizon. Their Army consisted of above fifty thousand Men, (as they themselves confess'd,) the whole Force of the Republick, and all their Allies, that they might take the Spaniards alive, and carry them bound, first offering their Blood to the Gods, and then giving their Flesh for a Banquet. They brought forth into the Field a great Eagle of Gold, raised on high, the Ensign of Tlascalala, which they only made use of in their greatest Undertakings. They drew near with incredible Diligence; and when they came within Reach of the Cannon, the Artillery began to put a Stop to their Speed, striking such a Terror into them, that they stood still some Time, divided between Fear and Anger: But Anger prevailing, they came forward in a Throng, till they were so near as to make use of their Slings and Arrows, where they were stopp'd a second Time by the Terror of the Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows.

THE Engagement continued a long Time very bloody on the Part of the Indians, and but with small Damage to the Spaniards, by reason of the Advantage of their Arms, and the Order and good Disposition with which they gave and received the Charge; but the Indians perceiving the Blood they lost, and that their own Dilatoriness was destructive to them, they moved all at once; and the Hindmost pushing on the Foremost, the whole Multitude fell upon the Spaniards and Zempoalans with so much Fury and Despair, that they broke and disordered them, quite overthrowing that Union and good Disposition in which they were formed. There was then Occasion for all the Valour of the Soldiers, all the Bravery and Diligence of the Officers, all the Strength of the Horse, and all the Want of military Skill in the Indians, to enable them to form again; which they

they did by main Force, and with the Death of all that did not immediately give Way before them.

AT this Time there happened an Accident, as before, by which it appeared a second Time that the special Providence of God defended his own Cause: A very great Disturbance was perceived in the Enemy's Army; Troops were moving to different Parts, dividing and turning their Arms against each other: Whereupon, they all retired in a tumultuous Manner; and those who engaged in the Front, turned their Backs and fled. The Spaniards pursued them with some small Execution; for Cortez did not care to expose himself to their charging him again at too great a Distance from his Quarters.

IT was known afterwards that the Cause of that Disturbance, and the Reason of this second Retreat was, that Xicotencal, who was a passionate proud Man, and founded his Authority upon the Patience of those under his Command, did, with too much Liberty, reprimand one of the principal Caziques, who served under him with ten thousand Men, calling him a Coward, and Mean-spirited, for not advancing when the rest were engaged; which he returned with so much Boldness, that it came to a Breach and a Challenge between them; and in a short Time it became the Cause of their whole Nation, who espoused the Quarrel of their Chief, and prepared for his Defence; with which Example other Caziques, who were his Friends, mutinied; and taking a Resolution of withdrawing their Troops from an Army, where their Valour was so little regarded, they put it in Execution with so much Celerity and Displeasure, that they put all the rest into Disorder; and Xicotencal being sensible of his Weakness, endeavoured only to secure himself, leaving the Field and the Victory to his Enemies.

IT is not our Intention to relate this so favourable Success, and so opportune to the Spaniards, as a Miracle; on the contrary, we confess, that it was the casual Disagreement of those Caziques, and might easily happen when a General commanded of so little Temper, and with so little Superiority over the Confederates of his Republick; but whoever will consider this powerful Army of Barbarians, overthrown and broke to Pieces a first and second Time, (an Action scarce to be supposed, seeming superior to any human Force,) must acknowledge in the very Casualties the Hand of God, whose ineffable Wisdom is wont to bring about his high Designs by those which Men call Contingencies, making use very often of that which he permits, to bring about that which he is disposing.

GREAT was the Number of the Indians killed upon this Occasion, and much greater that of the wounded, (as they themselves did afterwards relate.) On our Side only one Soldier was killed, and twenty wounded, but so slightly, that they were able to mount Guard that Night. But notwithstanding this Victory was so great, and so much more wonderful than the last, (for they engaged with a greater Army, and the Enemy retired overthrown,) yet the Novelty of having been broke and put into Disorder in the Battle, made such an Impression upon some of the Spanish Soldiers, that they returned to their Quarters melancholy and dishearten'd, like Men who had been vanquish'd. There were very many who plainly declar'd, That they would not wilfully throw themselves away for Cortez's Humour; that he should think of returning to Vera Cruz, for that it was impossible to advance any farther; or, that otherwise they would do it themselves, leaving him alone to his Ambition and Temerity. Hernan Cortez was informed of this, and retired to his Tent, without endeavouring to reduce them, till they were recovered from that Fright, and had Time to be sensible how much they were mistaken in what they propos'd: For in Distempers of this Kind, hasty Remedies rather irritate than correct; Fear in Men being a violent Passion, which Reason at the first cannot govern.

C H A P. XIX.

Hernan Cortez stills the new Disturbance among his Men. The People of Tlascala take the Spaniards for Enchanters. They consult their Magicians; and by their Advice attack them by Night in their Quarters.

THE Disturbance among the Malecontents encreased; and the Diligence of the Captains, together with the contrary Opinion of the better sort, not being sufficient to reduce them, Hernan Cortez found it necessary to shew himself, and endeavour to bring them to Reason. To which End, he order'd all the Spaniards to assemble in the Place of Arms, upon Pretence of coming to a Resolution upon the present State of Affairs ; and placing near himself the most Troublesome, (a sort of Favour necessary for their better hearing,) “ It allows, said he, of no great Dispute, what our Army is to do, having gained in a short Time two Battles, in which your Valour, and the Weakness of your Enemies, have equally appeared. It is true, overcoming an Enemy is not the finishing Stroke of a War ; for the improving a Victory has also its Difficulties : And we must avoid those Dangers that oftentimes attend good Success, as Things annexed to human Felicity. But this, my Friends, is not what gives me Trouble : I stand in need of your Advice upon a greater Doubt. They tell me, that some of our Soldiers are again desirous, and stir up one another to propose, that we should retreat. I am willing to believe they ground this Opinion upon some good Reason ; but it is not right, that a Point of so much Importance should be treated in a murmuring Manner. Tell all your Opinions freely ; do not discredit what you earnestly desire, by proposing it in a criminal Way. And that we may all reason upon that which is most convenient for us all, let us first consider the Condition in which we are, and resolve at once upon something which cannot be contradicted. This Enterprize was begun with your Approbation, I may say, with your Applause. Our Resolution was to pass on to the Court of Motezuma. We all devoted ourselves to this Undertaking for our Religion, and our King, as also for our Honour and our Hopes. These Indians of Tlascalcala, who endeavour’d to oppose our Design with all the Power of the Republick and Confederates, are now overthrown and conquer’d. It is not possible (according to the natural Course of Things) that they should delay long to request Peace, or grant us Passage. If this happens, how greatly will it add to our Reputation ? What will these Barbarians conceive of us, who already rank us with their Gods ? Motezuma, who expected us with Concern, (as has appeared by the Repetition and Artifice of his Embassies,) will behold us with greater Terror, after having vanquished the Tlascalans, who are the most valiant Men of the Country, and have by Force of Arms maintain’d their Liberty against him. It may be very possible that he will make us very advantageous Offers, fearing lest we should join with his Rebels. And very possible that this same Difficulty, we now meet with, may be the Means which God makes use of to facilitate our Undertakings, by making Tryal of our Constancy ; for he will not work Miracles for us, without making use both of “ our

“ our Hearts and Hands. But if we should turn our Backs,
 “ (and be the first that have been discouraged by Victories,) all “ our Design and Labour is lost at once. What can we hope “ for? or what is it that we ought not to fear? These very “ vanquish’d People, that are now terrify’d, and fugitive, will “ be animated at our being dishearten’d, and knowing all the “ short Cuts and difficult Passages of the Country, they will “ pursue, and break us in our March. Our Indian Friends “ (who stand by us contented and courageous) will quit us,
 “ and escape to their own Country, publishing our Disgrace.
 “ The Zempoalans and Totonaques, our Confederates, (who are “ our only Refuge in the Retreat,) will conspire against us, “ losing the great Opinion they had of our Power. I repeat it “ again, let every Thing be maturely consider’d, and by comparing “ the Hopes which we abandon, with the Dangers to which we “ expose our selves, propose and deliberate what will be most “ convenient; for I leave you to your full Liberty of Dis“ course, and have laid before you the Inconveniencies rather “ to free my Opinion from Blame, than defend it.”

SCARCELY had Hernan Cortez finish’d his Discourse, when one of the dissatisfy’d Soldiers, convinced by his Reasons, raised his Voice, telling the rest, “ Friends, our Captain asks what we “ are to do, but instructs us while he is asking: It is not pos“ sible for us to retire now, without being lost.”

THE rest were convinced, confessing their Error, and the other Part rejoiced at their being undeceiv’d; and it was resolv’d, by Acclamations, to prosecute the Enterprize. The Disturbance of those Soldiers who were desirous of finding Rest in the Isle of Cuba, being at that Time entirely pacify’d, whose Unreasonableness was one of the Difficulties which did most trouble the Mind, and exercise the Constancy of Cortez in this Enterprize.

THIS second Rout of their Army caused an unusual Trouble in Tlascalala: They all admir’d, and were confounded. The common People cried out for Peace; and the Nobles were unable to carry on the War. Some propos’d to retire to the Mountains with their Families; others said the Spaniards were Deities, inclining to pay them Obedience with Circumstances of Adoration.

THE Senate assembled to consult how to restore their Affairs: And beginning to argue from their own Fear, they all confessed that the Force of those Strangers appeared to be more than natural: But they were not fully perswaded they were Gods, esteeming it too great a Lightness to conform their Opinions to the Credulity of the Vulgar; but were rather inclin’d

to

to believe that they performed such wonderful Actions by magical Art. And coming to a Resolution, that they ought to have Recourse to the same Science, in order to overcome them, and so take off the Force of one Enchantment with another, they summoned their Magicians and Diviners for this Purpose, whose Delusions were much introduced by the Devil in that Country, and no less revered. The Opinion of the Senate was communicated to them, which they approv'd of with mysterious Consideration; giving them to understand, that they knew what Doubt they had to propose, and had beforehand studied the Case; telling them, That by the Observation of their Circles, and by their Divinations, they had fully discover'd the Secret of this Novelty; and that the Whole consisted, in that the Spaniards were the Offspring of the Sun, produced by his own active Quality in the Mother-Earth of the Oriental Regions, their greatest Enchantment being the Presence of their Father, whose warm Influence did communicate unto them a Kind of Force superior to human Nature, and made them immortal; but that upon his disappearing in the West, the Influence ceased, and they remained disheartned and wither'd, like the Herbs of the Field, reduced to the Terms of Mortality, like other Men; for which Consideration it was necessary to attack them by Night, and destroy them before the Rising Sun made them invincible.

THOSE Senators very much applauded the great Knowledge of their Magicians, being satisfy'd that they had found out the difficult Point, and discover'd the Way to obtain Victory. It was contrary to the Custom of this Country to engage by Night; but as in extraordinary Cases little Respect is had to Custom, this important News was sent to Xicotencal, with Orders to attack the Spaniards in their Quarters on the Setting of the Sun, endeavouring to destroy and make an End of them before he should return to the East. Accordingly he began to dispose every Thing for the Action, believing (with some Excuse) the Imposture of the Magicians, as coming to him authorized by the Opinion of the Senate.

DURING this Interim of Time, the Spaniards had several Rencounters of little Consequence. Some Troops of the Enemies shewed themselves on the Eminences near the Quarters, who either fled before the Spaniards could engage them, or were beat off with Loss. They made some Sallies to raise Contributions from the neighbouring Villages, where they used the Inhabitants well, and gained both their Good Wills and Provisions. Cortez took special Care to preserve Discipline, and keep his People vigilant, during this Time of Rest in their Quarters: He always had his Centinels posted at a Distance, his Guards mounted with the utmost Military Strictness; the Horses stood saddled all Night, with their Bridles upon the Pummels; the Soldiers either watch'd, or, if they rested, lay upon their Arms. An Exactness which seems superfluous to the Negligent, but then prov'd very necessary; for at the coming on of the Night, destin'd for the Attack resolv'd on by the Tlascalans, the Centinels discover'd a Body of the Enemy marching towards their Quarters with unaccustom'd Slowness and Silence. Notice was given of it without any Noise; and as the Soldiers were always prepar'd for such Accidents, they immediately mann'd the Works, and with great Readiness dispos'd every Thing that appear'd necessary for their Defence.

XICOTENCAL upon the Credit of his Magicians came on insensible of Danger, thinking to find his Enemies without Spirit or Strength, and to end the War before the Rising of the Sun; but he brought with him ten thousand Men, lest they should not be dispirited by the Absence of the Sun. The Spaniards let him draw near, without making any Motion; and he made a Disposition to attack the Quarters on three Sides: Which Order the Indians executed with Speed and Resolution; but they met with such a powerful and unlook'd-for Resistance, that many died in the Attack, and the rest were struck with the more Fear, by how much the greater had been the Security with which they came. Xicotencal was sensible (tho' late) of the Delusion of his Sorcerers, and of the Difficulty of his Undertaking; but his Anger and Courage would not let him consider, and therefore he gave Orders for another Attack to be made on all Sides, and he return'd to the Assault, pouring the whole Body of his Troops upon our Defences. We cannot but acknowledge the Valour with which the Indians try'd this Way of Fight in the Night, and against a Fortification, a Thing altogether new in their Way of making War. They helped one another with their Shoulders and Arms to gain the Wall, and receiv'd Wounds, which they made larger by their own pressing forward; and the foremost falling, did not in the least terrify those who came behind.

THE Combat lasted a long Time, their own Disorder en-damaging them no less than our Arms; till Xicotencal being convinc'd that it was not possible for him to compass what he intended, order'd the Signal to be given for drawing off, and thought of retreating. But Hernan Cortez (who had a watchful Eye over all,) as soon as he found them slackening, and saw that they return'd in Heaps from the Wall, sent out Part of his Foot, and all his Horfe, which were ready prepar'd; with Breast-Plates full of Bells, that by the Novelty of the Noise they might strike the greater Terror: Which sudden Assault put the Indians into such a Fright, that they endeavour'd only to escape, without making any Resistance. They left a considerable Number of Dead in the Field, with some Wounded, which they could not carry off; and of the Spaniards only two or three were wounded, and one Zempoalan kill'd: An Event that seem'd miraculous; considering the innumerable Multitude of Arrows, Darts, and Stones; which they found within their Intrenchments; and a Victory, which for the Easiness and small Expence wherewith it was gained, was celebrated among the Soldiers with particular Demonstrations of Joy; though at that Time they were not sensible how much it import'd them to have been valiant in the Night, nor of the Obligations they lay under to the Magicians of Tlascala, whose Folly was of Use in this Work; for it rais'd the Reputation of the Spaniards to the highest Pitch, and facilitated a Peace, which is the best Advantage of War.

C H A P. XX.

The Senate commands the General to suspend the War: He refuses to obey; but on the contrary, designs to give a fresh Assault upon the Spanish Quarters. His Spies are discovered and punish'd. A Treaty of Peace begins to be set on foot.

THE great Hopes which the City had conceived, without any other Reason, than that of trusting the Success of their Arms to the Favour of the Night, being vanish'd, the Common People again called out for Peace; the Nobles were dissatisfy'd, and came now into the same Sentiments with the Populace, though they made less Noise: The Senators were dishearten'd and silent; and the first Thing they did, was to punish their Magicians for their own Folly, not so much, because Deceit in them was a new Thing, but because they were ashamed they had believed them. Two or three of the chiefest of them were sacrificed in one of their Temples; the rest were reprimanded, and found themselves obliged to Lye with less Liberty in that Assembly.

AFTER that, the Senate met to consult about the principal Affair, and all without Exception, inclined to Peace; granting that the Judgment of Magiscatzin had foreseen what had befallen them, and the most Incredulous confessing, that those Strangers were, without Doubt, the Celestial Men mentioned in their Prophecies. Their first Resolution was to dispatch an Express immediately to Xicotencal, with Orders to suspend the War, and only keep himself upon his Guard; acquainting him, that they were treating for a Peace, which was already resolved on the Part of the Senate, and that they would immediately name Ambassadors to propose it, and to make the best Terms they could in Favour of the Republick.

HOWEVER, Xicotencal was so obstinately bent against the Spaniards, and so far blinded by his Martial Employment, that he utterly denied Obedience to this Order, and answered with Arrogance and Disrespect, That he and his Soldiers were the true Senate, and would take Care of the Credit of their Nation, since the Fathers of the Country abandoned it. He had disposed Matters so as to assault the Spaniards a second Time by Night, and within their Quarters; not that he made any Account of the past Divinations, but because he thought it better to keep them shut up, that they might come alive into his Hands. But he intended to go upon this Undertaking with a greater Force, and better Intelligence; and knowing that some Peasants of the adjacent Villages repaired to the Quarters with Provisions, to exchange them for Spanish Baubles, he made use of this Means to facilitate his Enterprize; and chose forty Soldiers in whom he confided, who, clothed after the Manner of Peasants, loaded with Fruit, Hens, and Bread made of Indian Corn, were to enter the Place, and observe the Nature and Strength of the Fortification, and where it might be assaulted with least Difficulty.

SOME say, that these Indians were sent as Ambassadors from Xicotencal himself, with feigned Proposals of Peace, (in which Case the Inadvertency of our People would be more culpable.) But whether the Pretence was this, or the other, they entered within their Quarters, and were among the Spaniards great Part of the Morning without any Notice being taken of their Stay, till a Zempoalan Soldier gave Notice, that they went slyly about, about, observing the Walls, and looking over them in a curious Manner; of which he presently gave Notice to Cortez. And as in this Kind of Suspicions, there is no Sign which is trivial, or Shadow that has not a Body, he order'd them to be seized immediately; which was easily executed. Being examin'd separately, they confessed the Truth without much Resistance, some pressed by Torture, and others by the Fear of it; all agreeing that a second Assault was to have been made on the Quarters that same Night; for which Undertaking their General was now upon the March with twenty thousand Men, and was to wait for them at a League's Distance, in order to dispose his Attacks, according to the Account they should bring him of the Weaknesses they had observed in the Works.

HERNAN CORTEZ was much concern'd at this Accident, for he was then indispos'd; and it cost him more Trouble to conceal his Sickness, than to bear it: But he never kept his Bed, or took Care of himself, but when he had nothing else to take Care of. It is reported of him, (we will not pass it by in Silence,) That just before one of the Engagements with the Tlascalans, he had taken Physick; and that he mounted his Horse, made a Disposition of the Battle, and engaged without finding the least Disorder, or thinking on the Purge, the which, by that Diversion of his Mind, was deprived of its active Quality, and had not the Effect until the next Day. Father Don Prudencio de Sandoval, in his History of the Emperor Charles V. looks upon it as a Miracle which God wrought on him: A Notion which Philosophers will dispute, to whose Profession it belongs to shew how, in this Case, the natural Faculty may be so far influenced by the Imagination, busied in greater Matters, as to cease performing its Function; or how the Spirits, gathering about the Heart and the Head, draw after them that natural Heat which should put the Medicine in Motion. Such an Accident, however, ought not to be omitted by an Historian, as serving to shew how much this Commander gave himself up to the vigilant Care of what he was to direct and order in the Battle: An Employment which, in Truth, requires the whole Man, as great as he can be; and these Considerations are sometimes permitted in History, as proposing Examples, which animate to an Imitation.

THE Designs of Xicotencal being now discovered by the Confession of his Spies, Hernan Cortez gave the necessary Orders for the Defence of his Quarters; and immediately considered on the Punishment those Delinquents deserved, being already condemned to Death by the Laws of War. But he thought, that to kill them without the Knowledge of the Enemy, would be Justice

Justice without Terror : And as he did not so much want to satisfy himself, as to terrify them, he gave Orders, that the most obstinate of them (which were fourteen or fifteen) should have some their Hands, and the rest their Thumbs cut off ; and in this Manner dismissed them, bidding them tell Xicotencal from him, that he was now waiting for him ; and that he sent them alive, that he might not lose the Informations they carry'd of his Fortifications.

THE Indian Army (that was now marching to the Enterprize) was struck with Horror at this bloody Spectacle : They stood astonish'd, as well at the Novelty, as at the Rigour of the Punishment ; and Xicotencal more than all the rest at the Discovery of his Designs ; this being the first Stroke which touch'd his Mind, and began to stagger his Resolution ; for he was perswaded that those Men could not have discovered his Spies, and penetrated his Thoughts, without the Help of some Divinity : On which Reflection he began to be troubled, and doubtful which Way he should manage ; but when he was now inclined to resolve on a Retreat, he found it necessary, by another Accident, and that which his Obstinacy resisted, was now done without his Consent : For at this Time several Ministers arrived from the Senate, who, by their Authority, informed him, that he must deliver up his Staff of General ; for that by reason of his Disobedience, and the Insolence of his Answers, they had revoked the Power, by Vertue of which he commanded the Arms of the Republick. They also ordered the Captains not to obey him, upon Pain of being declared Traytors to their Country. Now as this News came immediately on the Back of that Confusion which the dismembring of the Spies had caused in all, and in Xicotencal the Penetration of his Secret, no Man was so bold as to reply, but on the contrary, submitted themselves to the Commands of the Republick : All that Preparation for War breaking up with extraordinary Readiness ; the Caziques marched to their own Lands ; the Tlascalans took the Road to the City, without expecting farther Orders ; and Xicotencal, who was now less resolute, thought himself happy that they had taken the Command out of his Hands, and returned to the City attended only by his Friends and Relations ; where he appear'd before the Senate, ill covering his Vexation with this Shew of his Obedience.

THE Spaniards were that Night upon the Watch, and rested the next Day without being negligent ; for they were not well assured of the Intention of the Enemy, tho' the Indians that were brought under Contribution affirmed, that the Army was broke up, and a Treaty of Peace resolv'd on. They continu'd thus in Suspence till the next Day in the Morning, when the Centinels discovered a Troop of Indians, who seem'd to them to come with Burdens on their Backs along the Road of Tlascalala. Hernan Cortez order'd they should retire to the Place, and let them draw near. At the Head of this Troop came four Persons of Rank well adorned, whose Habit and white Feathers denoted Peace: Behind them came their Servants; and after them twenty or thirty Indian Tamenes loaded with Provisions. Every now and then they stopp'd, as fearful to approach, and made Signs of Respect and Humility towards the Quarters, diverting their Fear with Courtesy: They bowed their Bodies till they touch'd the Earth with their Hands, then raising themselves, and putting them to their Lips; a Respect they only shew'd to their Princes; and being come nearer, they paid a greater Submission, with the Smoak of their Censers. Then Donna Marina appeared upon the Wall, and ask'd them in their Language, from whom, and for what Purpose they came. They answer'd, from the Senate and Republick of Tlascalala, and to treat of Peace. Upon which they were permitted to enter.

HERNAN CORTEZ received them with proper State and Gravity, and they repeating their Bows and Perfumes, deliver'd their Embassy, which consist'd of several Excuses for what had pass'd, frivolous, but sufficient in the main to shew their Repentance. They said, That the Otomies and Chontales, barbarous Nations of their Confederacy, had join'd their Troops, and made War contrary to the Opinion of the Senate, whose Authority had not been able to repress the first Sallies of their Fierceness; but that they were now disarm'd, and the Republick very desirous of Peace: That they did not only bring with them the Voice of the Senate, but of the Nobles and Common People, to request that they would march presently with all their Soldiers to the City, where they might stay as long as they pleas'd with Security, and where they should be serv'd and respect'd as Children of the Sun, and Brothers of their Gods: And lastly, they concluded their Discourse without being able handsomely to cover their Artifice in what related to the past War, but with some Shew of Sincerity in their Proposition of Peace.

HERNAN CORTEZ a second Time affect'd Severity; and restraining his inward Complacency from appearing on his Countenance, only answer'd, That they should understand, and tell the Senate from him, that it was no small Demonstration of his Goodness to admit and hear them, when they might

justly fear his Indignation as Delinquents, and ought to receive Laws as vanquish'd: That the Peace they propos'd was agreeable to his Inclination; but that they fought it after too unjust and obstinate a War to obtain it easily, or at least, not without Terms and Circumspection: That he would see how they persevered in desiring it, and what they did to deserve it: And in the mean Time, he would endeavour to appease the Anger of his Captains, and put a Stop to the Justice of his Arms; suspending the Punishment with an up-lifted Arm that they might, with their Amendment, make use of what Time there was between the Threat and the Blow.

CORTEZ answer'd them in this Manner, to gain some Time to recover of his Indisposition, and to enquire the better into the Truth of their Proposal: For which End he thought it necessary that those Messengers should return with Concern, and doubtful, lest the Senate should grow proud and backward, by finding him very easy, or desirous of the Peace; for in this sort of Affairs, that which seems the farthest Way about, is often the shortest Cut; and Difficulties well managed, are better than hasty Resolutions.

C H A P. XXI.

New Ambassadors come from Motezuma to the Spanish Quarters, to obstruct the Peace with Tlascalala. The Senate perseveres in desiring it; and Xicotencal takes upon himself the Negotiation.

THE Fame of the Spaniards encreas'd with these Victories; and Motezuma, who had frequent Accounts of what pass'd in Tlascalala, by the Observation of his Ministers, and the Diligence of his Couriers, began to be more apprehensive of his Danger, when he saw that warlike Nation, which had so often resisted his Armies, subdu'd and vanquish'd by so small a Number of Men. He greatly admir'd the Actions which were reported of those Strangers; and feared, that when once the Tlascalans were reduced to their Obedience, they might make use of their Rebellion, and of their Arms, and aim at greater greater Matters to the Damage of his Empire. But it is very remarkable, that in the Midst of so many Perplexities and Suspicions, he did not bethink himself of his Power, and go about forming an Army for his Defence and Security; on the contrary, without attempting (by I know not what superior Genius that over-awed his Spirit) to assemble his People, in order to make War, he made use of political Arts, and was fluctuating among gentle Means. At that Time he had in view to break the Union of the Spaniards and Tlascalans, and he did not think amiss; for where there wants Resolution, Prudence is wont to be very watchful and careful. To this End, he resolved to send a new Embassy and Present to Cortez. The Pretence was to congratulate the good Success of his Arms, and his assisting him to chastise the Insolence of his Enemies the Tlascalans; but the principal End was, to desire, with new Instances, that he would not think of coming to his Court, laying before him greater Difficulties, which oblig'd him not to grant Permission. The Ambassadors had secret Instructions to look into the State of the Tlascalan War, and endeavour (in case there was a Talk of Peace, and the Spaniards seem'd inclinable) to divert and obstruct the Conclusion, without discovering their Prince's Concern, or quitting their Negotiation, till they had given him an Account, and waited his Orders.

FIVE Mexicans of the greatest Rank among the Nobility came with this Embassy; and travelling with some Circumspection on the Borders of Tlascalala, arriv'd at the Quarters a little after the Ministers of the Republick were departed. Hernan Cortez received them with great Kindness and Courtesy; for Motexuma's Silence had given him some Uneasiness. He heard the Embassy graciously, and received the Present with Thanks, (being worth about a thousand Pieces of Eight, in several Pieces of light Gold, besides other Curiosities of Feathers and Cotton,) but did not give them his Answer at that Time, because he was desirous they should, before their Departure, see the Tlascalans reduced, and desiring Peace; neither did they sollicite to be dispatch'd, because they also desired to stay there. But it was not long e'er they discovered the whole Secret of their Instructions; for they told what they should have conceal'd, by asking, with little Discretion, that which they came to be inform'd of; and in a short Time all Motexuma's Fear was known, as also of what Importance the Peace of Tlascalala was, in order to bring him to Reason.

THE Republick, in the mean time, desiring to convince the Spaniards of their Sincerity, sent Orders to the neighbouring Villages

Villages, to furnish the Quarters with Provisions, commanding them not to receive any Price for them; which was punctually executed, and they had Plenty of all Things; the Peasants not daring to receive the least Return. Two Days after they discovered on the Road that led to the City a considerable Troop of Indians, who drew near with the Ensigns of Peace; of which Cortez being advised, gave Orders to admit them; and to receive them, mixed among his own Attendance, the Mexican Ambassadors, making them believe, that he trusted them with that which he desired they should know. The Chief of these Tlascalans was Xicotencal himself, who undertook the Charge of treating and concluding this great Affair; whether to satisfy the Senate, by attoning with this Action for his past Rebellion, or that he was perswaded Peace was necessary, and being ambitious of Glory, did not care that the Good of the Republick should be owing to another. He was attended by fifty Gentlemen of his Party and Parentage, well-dressed after their Manner. He was of more than a middle Stature, well-made, rather Lusty than Corpulent: His Habit was a white Mantle, put on after a handsome Manner, and some Jewels in their proper Places: His Face was of no agreeable Proportion, but yet such as infused Respect, and more observable for its Boldness than Deformity. He came before Cortez with the free Air of a Soldier; and having paid his Respects, took his Seat, told who he was, and began his Speech: Confessing that he was wholly to blame for the past War, believing that the Spaniards were Favourers of Moteczuma, whose Name he abhor'd; but that now, as the first Witnesses of their gallant Actions, he came with the Merit of a Person, submitting, to put himself into the Hands of his Conqueror; hoping by this Submission and Acknowledgement, to obtain Pardon for his Republick, whose Name, Power, and Authority he had, not to propose, but with all Submission, to request Peace, and to accept it upon his own Terms: That he asked it once, and twice, and thrice, in the Name of the Senate, Nobles, and Commons of Tlascalala; entreating him with all Earnestness to honour the City immediately with his Presence, where he should find Quarters provided for all his Men, and all the Respect and Service he could expect from those who, being brave, submitted to entreat and obey: But he would only pray him (and that not as a Condition of the Peace; but as the Effect of his own Goodness) that the Inhabitants might be well used, and their Gods and Wives protected from Military Liberty.

CORTEZ was so pleased with the Discourse and Freedom of Xicotencal, that he could not forbear shewing it in his Countenance to those who stood by; suffering himself to be carried away by a Respect due to valiant Men; but he ordered Donna Marina to tell him so, that he might not think it was the Proposal with which he was so much pleased; and he again took up his Gravity, to lay before him, not without some Vehemence, how little Reason his Republick had to make such an unjust War, and for him to foment such a Piece of Injustice with so much Obstinacy. Upon which he enlarged as far as was necessary, without being tedious, and after having exaggerated the Crime, to enhance the Value of the Pardon, he concluded, granting the Peace they desired, and that he would not offer Violence to any one, or oppress them in the March of his Army. To which he added, that when he went to their City, he would give them Notice of it in Time, and make the necessary Dispositions for his Entry and Quarters.

XICOTENCAL was much concerned at this Delay, looking on it as a Pretence for the better examining into the Sincerity of the Treaty: And turning his Eyes upon the Audience, "You have Reason (said he) Great Teules (so they call'd their Gods) to chastise our Sincerity with your Distrust: But if it be not sufficient to gain your Belief, when the whole Republick of Tlascala speaks to you by me, I, who am the Captain-General of their Armies, and these Gentlemen of my Retinue, who are the principal Nobles, and greatest Captains of my Nation, will remain as Hostages for your Security, and continue in your Power, or be imprisoned during the whole Time you shall stay in our City." Hernan Cortez was much satisfy'd with this Offer: But as he always desired to appear Superior, he answer'd, That there was no Occasion for such an Argument to convince him, that they desired that which was so much for their Interest; nor did his Men stand in need of Hostages to enter their City in Security, and maintain themselves there without Fear, as they had already maintained themselves in the midst of their Armies; but that the Peace remained firm, and secured in his Word; and he would march as soon as he could dispose Matters for it. With this he broke up the Conference, and waited upon them as far as the Gate of his Quarters, where he again embraced Xicotencal; and giving him his Hand afterwards, told him at parting, That he would no longer delay the returning of his Visit, than only the short Time that was necessary to dispatch the Ambassadors of Motezuma.

zuma. Which Words gave sufficient Life to the Negotiation, tho' they seem'd to drop by Chance.

HE then stay'd with the Mexicans; and they made a Jest of the Peace, and of those who propos'd it, proceeding so far as to blame (and not without a displeasing Liberty) the Easiness with which the Spaniards suffered themselves to be perswaded; and turning to Cortez, they told him, as by way of Instruction, That they much wonder'd so wise a Man should not have found out the Tlascalans; a barbarous People, who supported themselves more by their Deceits than their Forces: That he should look well to what he was doing; for that they only endeavour'd to secure him, to take an Advantage of his Carelessness, to destroy both him and his Men; but when they saw that he stood fixed to his Word, and could not refuse Peace to them that desired it, nor be wanting to the Honour of his Arms, they stood for some Time thoughtful; the Result of which was to desire him (their Perswasion being now turned to a Request) that he would delay his March to Tlascala for six Days, in which Time the two Chiefest of their Number should go and inform their Prince of what had pass'd, and the rest would stay there to expect his Resolution; to which Hernan Cortez did agree; for he did not think it proper to break through the Respect due to Moteczuma, nor lay aside all the Hopes which this Piece of Service might do him; it being possible he might by this remove those Difficulties he made of suffering himself to be seen: And so he made his Advantage of the Inclination he found in the Tlascalans and Mexicans, and thus rais'd the Reputation of the Peace, causing it to be desired by some, and feared by others.

THE HISTORY
Of the CONQUEST of MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN.

BOOK III.

CHAP. I.

An Account of the Voyage of those sent by Cortez into Spain; with the Opposition and Impediments that retarded their Dispatches.

IT is now reasonable that we return to the Captains Alonso Hernández Porto Carrero and Francisco de Montejo, who sail'd from Vera Cruz with the Present, and Letters for the King; the first Account, and the first Tribute of New Spain. They had a prosperous Voyage, tho' they might have run a Risque by not complying literally with their Orders; the

Inter-

Interpretation of which very often ruins Affairs, and rarely hits with the Intention of the Superior.

Francisco de Montejo had a certain Farm allotted for his Share in the Island of Cuba, near the Havana; and when they came in Sight of Cape St. Anton, he proposed to his Companions and the Pilot Juan de Alaminos to put in there, and furnish themselves with some Provisions, to help them out in their Voyage: For this Dwelling being so far from the City of St. Jago, where Diego Velasquez resided, they thought they did but very little disobey the Substance of the Order Cortez had given them, to keep at a Distance from Diego Velasquez's Government. He obtained his Desire, and enjoy'd the Satisfaction of seeing his Home; and ran the Risque not only of losing the Vessel, but also the present, and the whole Business with which he was intrusted: For Diego Velasquez, whom his Jealousy of Cortez kept continually watchful, had distributed Spies among all the Habitations on the Coast, to give him an Account of whatsoever happened, suspecting that Cortez would send some of his Ships to the Island of St. Domingo, to give an Account of his Discovery, and ask Succour of the Religious Governors; which Application he was desirous to prevent and obstruct. By this Means he was presently acquainted with what passed in the Dwelling of Montejo; and in a very few Hours dispatched away two light Sailors, well manned and furnished with Artillery, with Orders to take that Ship of Cortez at all Risques. This was put in Execution with so much Celerity, that the Pilot Alaminos had Occasion for all his Skill and good Fortune to avoid the Danger which hazard-ed all the Advances made in New Spain.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo reflects with very little Reason on the Reputation of Francisco de Montejo, (worthy of better Treatment, both on Account of his Quality and Courage.) He charges him with betraying the Trust which Cortez had reposed in him; and says, he went ashore to his House, with a Design to set aside the Voyage, by giving Diego Velasquez an Opportunity of seizing the Ship; that he writ him a Letter of Advice, and sent it by a Sailor, who swam ashore; and other Circumstances without Foundation; in which he afterwards contradicts himself, by mentioning particularly with what Resolution and Activeness Francisco de Montejo opposed the Agents and Favourers Favourers of Diego Velasquez at the Court; but writes also, that the Envoys of Cortez did not find the Emperor in Spain; and affirms several other Matters, by which 'tis easily perceived with what Facility he gave Ear to every Thing: And 'tis necessary to read his Works with Caution, where he has not been informed by his own Eyes. In fine, they continued their Course by the Channel of Bahama; Anton de Alaminos being the first Pilot who threw himself into the Danger of those Currents; and at that Time there was Occasion for all the Violence with which the Waters precipitate themselves between the Lucaian Islands and Florida, to pass quickly into the open Sea, and frustrate the Designs of Velasquez.

THE Weather favoured them; and they arrived at Sevill in October, in an unlucky Conjunction; for there they found the Chaplain Benito Martin, who came to the Court (as we have said) to sollicite the Interest of Diego Velasquez, to whom he had sent his Commission of the King's Lieutenant, and was waiting for an Vessel to return to Cuba. This Accident appeared very extraordinary to the Chaplain, who employ'd all his Care and Interest, complaining of Hernan Cortez, and those who came in his Name, before the Ministers of the Contratation (as they now call it) of the Indies, that is, the Directors of the Trade, declaring, That that Ship belong'd to his Master Diego Velasquez, and all that was in her, as belonging to his Conquest: That the landing on the Provinces upon the Continent was done by Stealth, and without Authority, Cortez and those with him, having made use of that Fleet which Diego Velasquez had equipped for the same Enterprize: That the Captains Porto Carrero and Montejo ought to be severely punished, or at least the Vessel, with her Cargo, ought to be seiz'd, till such Time as they proved their Right, and by whose Authority they had a Commission.

Diego Velasquez had many Friends in Sevill; for he presented liberally, and seemed to be in the Right; at least, in doubtful Cases, People are used to interpret as they would have it. Finally, the Chaplain's Charge was admitted, and the Vessel seiz'd, the Envoys of Cortez being permitted to resort to the King upon good Security. With this Permission the two Captains, and the Pilot Alaminos, departed for Barcelona, believing they should find the Court

Court in that City; but they came just as the King was gone to Corunna, whither he had summon'd the Estates of Castile, and prepared his Navy to pass over into Flanders, having now been some Time pressed by the Germans to accept of the Imperial Crown. They did not think fit to follow the Court, to prevent being obliged to discourse in haste on a Matter of such Importance, which being lost in the Hurry of the Journey, would be little regarded for its Novelty, for want of being duly considered. Upon which Reflection they took the Road of Medellin, with a Design to visit Martin Cortez, and try if they could persuade him to go with them to the Presence of the King, and authorize by his grey Hairs and Representation the Instances of his Son. They were received by that venerable old Man with all the Tenderness they could expect from a troubled and disconsolate Father, who had already bewailed the Death of a Son, in whom now he found, together with the News of his Life, as much to admire in his Actions, as to celebrate in his Fortune.

HE determined to go presently with them; and being informed where the Emperor (for so we shall call him now) was, they believed he would make some Stay in Tordesillas to take Leave of his Mother, the Queen Donna Juana, and dispatch some Affairs relating to his Journey. There they attended the Coming of the Emperor, had their first Audience, and were favoured by an opportune Accident; for the Ministers at Sevill not daring to detain, by way of Embargo, what came on account of the Emperor, it happen'd that Cortez's Present, and the Indians of the new Conquest, arrived at the same Time; with which Accident the News they brought was better heard, reconciling to the Eyes the strange Things they had heard; for those Curiosities of Gold, valuable for the Art, as well as Matter, the curious fine Works of Feathers and Cotton, and those rational Creatures of such extraordinary Physiognomy, that they looked like Men of another Species, were so many other Testimonies to make his wonderful Account believed.

THE Emperor heard them with a very grateful Ear; and the first Motion of his Royal Mind was to turn to God, and give him humble Thanks, that new Kingdoms were discovered in his Time, where he might introduce his holy Name, and spread the Gospel. He had several Conferences with with

with them, and informed himself very carefully of the Affairs of that new World, of the Dominions and Forces of Motexuma, of the Quality and Capacity of Cortez. He asked the Pilot Alaminos some Questions concerning the Navigation. He ordered the Indians should be carried to Sevill, that they might preserve their Healths better in a more temperate Climate; and by what could be gathered at that Time of his good Disposition to encourage that Undertaking, his Resolves would have been short and favourable, if he had not been taken up with other Affairs of the utmost Importance. There came Letters every Day from the Cities, with Propositions little respectful. Castile complained that her Cortes were oblig'd to assemble in Galicia; the Kingdom was jealous that the Empire would be a Burden upon them; and their Obedience was mixed with Protestations. In short, by little and little, the Seed of the ensuing Rebellion of the Commons began to take Root among the People: They all loved the King, and all lost their Respect: They were troubled at his Absence, and lamented the Want of him. And this natural Love converted into Passion, or not properly disposed, in a short Time threaten'd the Loss of his Dominion. The Emperor resolv'd to hasten his Journey, that he might be at a Distance from their Complaints; and put it in Execution accordingly, believing he should return in a short Time, and without much Difficulty, correct those ill Humours he left in Motion; but with Respect to those high Motives which oblig'd him to take that Voyage, we cannot but acknowledge, he ran a very great Risque. And in Truth, he considers but little his Health, who runs into Excesses, upon a Supposition that he shall find Remedies in Time of Necessity.

UPON Account of these Disturbances, the Demand of Cortez was referred to Cardinal Adrian and the Assembly of Prelates and Ministers, who were of his Council in the Government, during the Absence of the Emperor, with Orders, that after a Hearing before the Council of the Indies, they should take a Medium in the Pretensions of Diego Velasquez, and encourage the Discovery and spiritual Conquest of that Land, which now was known by the Name of New Spain. The President of this Council (which was formed some few Days before) was Juan Rodriguez de Fonseca Bishop of Burgos, assisted by Hernando de Vega Lord of Grajal, Don Francisco de Zapata, Don Antonio de Padilla of the Royal Council, and Pedro de Martir of Angleria, Protonotary of Aragon. The President was very well skill'd in the Affairs of the Indies, of which he had the Management a long while, and all gave Way to his Authority and Experience. He openly favoured Diego Velasquez, either for that the Chaplain's Reasons weigh'd with him, or else for the good Opinion he had of the Governor.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo relates the Cause of this Partiality with a tedious Indecency. But as he only says what he heard, 'tis likely there is little or nothing in it. That which cannot be denied is, that the Cause of Cortez suffered much by what he urg'd against him, giving an ill Name to his Conquest, and treating it as a Crime of evil Consequence: He represented that Diego Valasquez, by Vertue of the Title given him by the Emperor, was Chief of the Undertaking, and in Justice, of the Means by which it was prosecuted: He urg'd the little Reliance there was on a Man in Rebellion against his own Superior, and how much such Principles of Sedition ought to be feared in Provinces so remote: He protested the Damages which might ensue: And lastly, he laid so great a Stress upon his Representation, that he put both the Cardinal, and those of the Assembly to a Stand.

THEY were very sensible that he appeared over zealous in the Cause of Velasquez; yet they would not presume to determine so important a Point against so able a Minister; nor did they hold it convenient to give Cortez Occasion of Distrust, when he was so employed, and when they were in Truth obliged to him for the greatest Discovery that had been made. Those Doubts and Oppositions retarded their Resolution after such a Manner, that the Emperor returned from his Journey, and other Agents arrived from Cortez, before they came to any Determination upon his Pretensions. All that Martin Cortez and his Friends could obtain, was, an Allowance of some Part of the Treasure for their Expences, out of those Effects which were seiz'd at Sevill; with which moderate Supply they were two Years in the Court, following the Councils, like unregarded Pretenders; the Interest of the Monarchy at that Time being made a particular Affair, contrary to the many Instances, where particular Interest is made that of the Publick.

C H A P. II.

Motezuma endeavours to break the Peace of Tlascala. The People of that Republick continue their Instances. Hernan Cortez pursues his March, and makes his Entry into that City.

DURING the six Days that Hernan Cortez continued in his Quarters to comply with the Mexicans, it was known by fresh Experience, with what Earnestness the People of Tlascala desired Peace; and how jealous they were of the diligent Negotiations of Motezuma. The Ambassadors, which were expected, came within the prefixed Time, and were received with the usual Civility. There came six Gentlemen of the Royal Family, with a splendid Attendance, and another Present like the former, but something greater in Value. One of them spoke, and (not without premeditated Words, and much enlarging) laid before them how much the supreme Emperor (and at the mentioning of his Name, they all humbled themselves very low) desired to be a Friend and Confederate of the Great Prince, whom the Spaniards obey'd; whose Majesty appeared with so great a Lustre in the Valour of his Subjects, that he found himself inclined to pay a yearly Tribute, dividing with him those Riches with which he abounded; for that he held him in great Veneration, considering him as the Offspring of the Sun, or, at least, Lord of all those most happy Regions, where Light is first produced. But that two Conditions were necessarily previous to this Agreement: First, that Hernan Cortez and his People should make no League with those of Tlascala; for that it would by no Means be right, after being so much obliged by the Gifts of Motezuma, to take part with his Enemies; and, secondly, that they should lay aside all Thoughts of a Design which was neither possible nor reasonable; as was their marching into Mexico; for that by the Laws of the Empire the King could could not suffer himself to be seen by Strangers, nor would his Subjects permit it: That they should seriously consider the Dangers of both those rash Undertakings; for that the Tlascalans were so inclined to Treachery and Robbery, that they would only endeavour to make sure of them, in order to be revenged, and make their Advantage of that Gold, wherewith the Emperor had enriched them: And that the Mexicans were so zealous for their Laws, and so stubborn a People, that his Authority would not be sufficient to keep them under; nor could the Spaniards have just Reason to complain of what they should suffer, after they had been so often admonished of that which they were undertaking. Thus did the Mexican deliver himself. And all the Embassies and Cares of Motexuma tended to endeavour to hinder the Spaniards from coming nearer. After the Prefages which had happened, he look'd upon them with Horror, and with a dissembled Obedience to his Gods, made that a Point of Religion which was only his Faintheartedness. Cortez at that Time suspended his Answer; and only said, 'Twas but reasonable they should rest after their Journey, and that he would dispatch them very soon. He desired they should be Witnesses of the Peace of Tlascalala; and likewise thought it of Importance to detain them, lest Motexuma should be concerned at the Account of his Resolution, and begin to put himself upon his Guard; for he knew how unprovided he was at that Time, and with what Facility he could form his Armies.

THESE Embassies, to which the Tlascalans attributed the Delay of Cortez, gave them so much Uneasiness, that the Government came to a Resolution (as the last Proof of their Affection) to go to his Quarters in the Form of a Senate, in order to conduct him to their City, determining not to return till they had convinced him of the Sincerity of their Treaty, and broke off the Negotiations of the Mexicans. The Appearance was solemn and numerous with Ornaments and Feathers of a Colour denoting Peace. The Senators were brought in Chairs upon the Shoulders of inferior Officers, and Magiscatzin (who always favoured the Spaniards) in the most honourable Place, as also the Father of Xicotencal, a venerable old Man, who had lost his Sight with Age, but without any Detriment to his Understanding; for he still preserved the Character of a wise Man among the Councillors. A little before they came to the House where

where Cortez expected them, they alighted; and the blind Man advancing foremost, desired those who led him to bring him near the Captain of the Eastern People. He embrac'd him with extraordinary Satisfaction; then touched several Parts of him, as if he were desirous to know him, and supply with his Hands the Defect of his Sight. They all feated themselves, and at the Request of Magiscatzin, the blind Man spoke after this Manner.

“ Now, valiant Captain, (whether you be of mortal Race, “ or not,) you hold in your Power the Senate of Tlascalala, the “ utmost Proof of our Submission. We come not to excuse
 “ the Errors of our Nation, but to take them upon our selves, “ depending upon our own Sincerity for your Forgiveness. We “ were the Men who resolv'd upon the War; but we are like“ wise the Men who have determin'd Peace: The first was “ haasty, and the second slow; but Resolutions well confi“ dered are not usually the worst: On the contrary, it “ requires Pains to efface that which hath been impress'd “ with Difficulty; and I can assure you, that the very “ Delay hath given us a greater Knowledge of your Valour, “ and laid a deeper Foundation of our Constancy. We “ are not ignorant, that Motexuma endeavours to dissuade
 “ you from our Confederacy: Hearken to him as you “ would to our Enemy, tho' you will not consider him as a “ Tyrant, as surely he should appear, since he perswades you “ to act unjustly. We do not desire your Assistance against “ him, for provided you are not on his Side, our own “ Forces are sufficient; and we shall only be sorry that “ you trust your Security to his Offers, because we are “ acquainted with his Artifices and Subtilties. Here in “ my Blindness some Lights offer themselves, which disco“ ver to me your Danger at a Distance. Perhaps Tlascalala “ shall be famous in the World for the Defence of your “ Cause; but let us leave your being undeceived to Time,
 “ it needs no Prophecy to explain what may be so easily “ gathered from his Tyranny, and our Fidelity. You have “ already offer'd us Peace; if Motexuma does not hinder
 “ you, what is it that does? Why do you deny our earnest “ Requests? Why do you forbear to honour our City with “ your Presence? We are come resolv'd at once to gain
 “ your good Will and Friendship, or put our Liber“ ty into your Hands; therefore chuse which of the two
 “ is the most grateful. As to our selves there is no Medium “ between “ between the two Fortunes, of being either your Friends, “ or your Prifoners.

THUS did the venerable old Man conclude his Speech, that there might not be wanting an Appius Claudius in this Council, like to the other, who made an Oration in the Senate against the Epirotes, and it must be confessed, that the Tlascalans were Men of more than ordinary Reason, as has appeared in their Government, Actions, and Discourses. Some Writers, ill affected to the Spanish Nation, treat the Indians as Brutes incapable of Reason, thereby to lessen the Glory of the Conquest. It is true, they admired with Simplicity at the Sight of Men of another Kind, Colour, and Habit; they beheld a Beard as a Thing monstrous, (an Accident which Nature had denied them;) and gave Gold for Glafs; believing the Fire-Arms to be Lightning, and Horses to be wild Beasts: But all was the Effect of Novelty, which does not lessen the Understanding; for tho' Admiration supposes Ignorance, it does not suppose Incapacity; nor can that properly be called Ignorance which proceeds from a Want of due Information. God made them rational; and notwithstanding he permitted their Blindness, he did not the less endow them with all the Capacity and Gifts of Nature, that were necessary for the Preservation of their Species, and the Perfection of his own Work. But let us return to our Narration, lest we should do honour to the Calumny, by being too long upon the Defence.

CORTEZ could not resist this Demonstration of the Senate's good Will; nor did he now hope for any Thing more, having complied with the Time offered to the Mexicans; and to that Purpose answered the Senators with much Respect, and made them some Presents, desiring by those to confirm to them the Satisfaction he received, and the Confidence he put in them. It was necessary to persuade them, with some Resolution; that they should return; which they did, Cortez having given his Word to remove his Quarters to the City immediately, without any more Delay than was necessary to join some People of the neighbouring Villages, to conduct his Artillery and Baggage. They took his Word, repeating it to him with more Affection than Suspicion, and so return'd well satisfy'd, taking upon themselves the Care of sending Cortez a sufficient Number of Indians of Burden. Scarce had the Sun begun to shine

the next Morning, when they found five hundred Tamenes at their Quarters, and so diligent, that they disputed about their Burdens, and made Pretensions to their own Labour.

THEY prepared immediately for a March; drew up their Men in a Body, with the Artillery and Baggage in its proper Place, and took the Road of Tlascalala, with all the good Order, Caution, and Care usually observed in this little Army; to which exact Discipline they owed good Part of their Success. The Fields on both Sides were filled with innumerable Indians, who came forth from their Habitations at the Novelty of this Sight; and the Outcries and Behaviour of them were such, as might have passed for the Clamours and Threatnings of War, if Donna Marina had not acquainted them that they used those Shouts of Joy upon their Festivals; and that celebrating after their Manner the Happiness they had obtained, they blest and praised them as their new-acquired Friends; with which Information the Noise was the better born, it being necessary then to suffer those Applauses with Patience.

THE Senators came a considerable Way out of the City to receive the Spaniards, with all the Ostentation and Pomp accustomed upon publick Solemnities, assisted by the Nobles, who thought it an Honour on those Occasions, to support the Ministers of the Republick. When they came up, they paid their Respects, and without stopping marched on before; signifying by this hasty Respect, how much they desired to forward the March, without detaining those they accompanied.

AT their Entrance into the City, it resounded with Shouts and Acclamations, making a much greater Noise than before, because mixed with the disagreeable Musick of their Flutes, Drums, and Horns. So great was the Concourse of People, that the Officers of the Senate had much Trouble to manage the Multitude, that the Passage of the Street might be left free. The Women threw various Sorts of Flowers on the Spaniards; those who were bolder, and less reserved, drew near, and put the Flowers into their Hands. The Priests, dragging after them their long Garments in which they sacrificed, came out with their Copper Censers, and without knowing whether they did Right or Wrong, exprest their Joy by the Smoke.

THEY

THEY all shewed in their Countenances the Sincerity of their Hearts, but variously affected; for Admiration and Satisfaction were mixed together, and Joy was tempered with Veneration. The Quarters provided, which contained all Things necessary for their Conveniency and good Entertainment, was the best House in the City, which had three or four spacious square Courts, with so many, and such large Chambers, that Cortez, without any Difficulty, kept all his People together there in one Body. He carried with him the Ambassadors of Motexuma, though they were unwilling, and lodged them near himself; because, in respect to him, their Persons were secure, and they seemed afraid of some Violence.

THE Entry into, and last Reduction of Tlascalala, was on the Twenty third of September of the same Year 1519; a Day on which the Spaniards gained a Peace, with the Circumstances of a Triumph, so durable, and of so great Consequence for the Conquest of New Spain, that to this Day they enjoy several Privileges and Exemptions in that Province, as a Reward of that first Friendship, and are an honourable Monument of their antient Fidelity.

C H A P. III.

The Description of the City of Tlascala. The Senators complain of the Spaniards going armed, being grieved at their Distrust. Cortez satisfies them; and endeavours to make them quit their Idolatry.

TLASCALA was in those Days a very populous City, founded upon four Eminences of different Largeness, little distant from each other; which ran in Length from East to West, and secure in the natural Strength of their Rocks, contain'd within them all the Buildings, forming four Commands, or distinct Wards, which were united, and had a Communication by several Streets with very thick Walls, which served as a Defence to the Town. These Wards were governed by four Caziques, who held them as Fiefs, being descended from the first Founders, but depended on the Senate, in which they commonly assisted, yet under an entire Subjection to its Orders in all State-Affairs, and Appeals made to it by their Vassals. The Houses were raised moderately high, for they had no second Story: The Building was of Stone, or Brick; and instead of cooping Roofs of Tiles, they were flat at the Top with Galleries. The Streets were narrow and crooked, as the Steepness and Ruggedness of the Mountain would allow: A very extraordinary Situation and Architecture, more for Defence than Commodiousness.

THE whole Province was about thirty Leagues in Circumference; the Length, ten from East to West; the Breadth, four from North to South. A broken Mountainous Country, but very fertile, and well cultivated in all Parts, where the Plenty of Streams enabled them to improve the Land. It was surrounded on all Sides with Provinces depending on Motexuma; only on the North,

North, the great Cordillera, or Ridge of Mountains, rather clos'd them in, than divided their Limits; by whose inaccessible Craggs they had Communication with the Otomies, Totonaques, and other barbarous Nations of their Confederacy. The Towns were many, and near to each other: The People from their Childhood inclined to Superstition, and the Use of Arms; in the Management of which they exercis'd themselves with great Emulation, whether it was the Climate or Necessity that made them valiant. They abounded in Maiz, or Indian Wheat; and this Grain so well answer'd the Labour of the Husbandman, that it gave the whole Province the Name of Tlascal, a Word which, in their Language, signifies the Land of Bread. They had great Variety of Fruit, and very delicious; Game of all Sorts; and one of their plentiful Productions, was the Cochinilla, the Use of which they understood not till they were taught it by the Spaniards. It is likely it was so called from the Coccinean, or Scarlet Grain, whence our Grana, or Scarlet-Dye likewise took its Name; but in these Parts it is a kind of Insect, like a small Worm, which is bred, and continues to the last upon the Leaves of a wild Thorny Tree, which they call'd then the wild Tuna, or the Wood-Thistle. Now they take great Care of it, as of a Fruit-Tree, as owing their greatest Commerce and Profit to the precious Dye of those Worms, nothing inferior to the Purple discovered by the Antients in the Blood of the Murex, so much celebrated for being us'd in the Robes of their Kings.

BUT the natural Felicity of this Country was not without an Allay; for the Neighbourhood of the Mountains made it subject to great Tempests, horrible Hurricans, and frequent Inundations of the River Zabual, which not contented some Years with the Destruction of their Harvest, and taking away Trees by the Roots, was wont to endanger Houses on the Tops of Eminences. 'Tis said, that Zabual, in their Language, signifies the River of the Itch; for that those who drank the Waters, or bath'd in them, were cover'd with that Distemper; a second Malignity of the River. Nor was the want of Salt the least Misfortune that Tlascal suffer'd, which made them disrelish all their Abundance; and tho' they might have brought it easily from the Lands of Motexuma, in Exchange for their Wheat, they held it less inconvenient to eat their Victuals without seasoning, than to have an open Commerce

Commerce with their Enemies. These, and other Observations of their Government, (which indeed were remarkable in that unpolish'd People,) caus'd Admiration in the Spaniards, and made them act with Caution.

CORTEZ dissembled his Concern, but continued the Guards in his Quarters; and when he went out into the City with the Indians, he took Part of his Men with him, not forgetting their Fire-Arms. The Soldiers also went together in Companies, provided after the same Manner; endeavouring to make them all believe he repos'd a Confidence in them, yet after such a Manner, that he should not seem regardless of himself. But the Indians, who desired the Friendship of the Spaniards without any Artifice or Affectation, were griev'd upon a Point of Honour, that they did not lay aside their Arms, and give entire Credit to their Fidelity; a Point which was debated in the Senate; by whose Order Magiscatzin came to signify their Opinion to Cortez; and lay'd before him, How unsuitable those warlike Precautions were to a People who were subject, obedient, and desirous to please; that the great Vigilance with which they lived in their Quarters, shew'd how little they thought themselves secure; and that the Soldiers, who pass'd thro' the City with Lightning always upon their Shoulders, tho' they did no Hurt, offended more by that Distrust, than if they really oppress'd them. He added, That Arms should be look'd upon as an useless Load where they were not necessary; and that it appear'd ill among those who were sincerely their Friends, and disarm'd: And concluded, intreating Cortez, after a most friendly Manner, in the Name of the Senate, and all the City, that he would command those Precautions and disagreeable Appearances to cease, which seem'd to preserve Signs of an unfinish'd War, or were, at least, Indications of a scrupulous Friendship.

CORTEZ answer'd him, That he was well acquainted with the good Will of their Citizens, and without the least Suspicion, that any Thing could happen in Breach of that Peace, which they had so much desired; that the Guards they us'd, and the Vigilancy they observ'd in his Quarters, was conformable to the Custom of his Country, where the Soldiers lived always after a Military Manner, and ennured themselves in Times of Peace to the Fatigues of War, by which Means they learn'd Obedience, and were accus'd to Vigilance: That their Arms were an Ornament,

Ornament, and Part of their Habit, which they wore as a Peice of Finery belonging to their Profession; for which Reason he desired them to remain assured of his Friendship, and that they should not think strange of those Things which were proper to the Soldiery, and consistent with the Peace he had made with their Nation.

HE found the Way to satisfy his Friends, without abating any Part of his Caution; and Magiscatzin, a Man of a warlike Spirit, who had in his Youth commanded the Arms of the Republick, was so well pleased with this laudable Custom, that he not only returned without Complaint, but was desirous to introduce in their own Armies this Kind of Vigilance and Discipline, which distinguished and made good Soldiers.

WITH this Account the People were quieted, and all assisted the Spaniards with a diligent Obsequiousness, and even Servitude. Every Day discovered more of their good Will. Their Presents were many; all Sorts of wild Fowl and extraordinary Fruits, with some Cloaths, and Curiosities of little Value. However, it was the best the Penury of those Mountains could afford, which debarred them the Commerce of those Regions, which produced Gold and Silver.

THE best Hall of the Quarters was reserved for a Chapel; in which, upon certain Steps, they raised an Altar, and placed some Images with all possible Decency. They celebrated every Day the holy Sacrifice of the Mass, in the Presence of the principal Indians, who were silent either out of Respect or Admiration; and tho' they were not devout themselves, they took Care not to disturb the Devotion of others. They remarked all that passed; and all was a Novelty to them, and caused greater Esteem of the Spaniards, whose Virtues they were sensible of and revered, rather for that they procure Love, than for that the Indians either knew the Names, or exercised any of them.

ONE Day Magiscatzin asked Cortez, whether he was mortal; because his Actions, and those of his People, seemed more than natural, and contained that sort of Goodness and Greatness which they considered in their Gods: But he did not understand those Ceremonies, with which it appeared they acknowledged a superior Deity; for they made Preparations for a Sacrifice, but he did not perceive any Victim or Offering, with which to appease the Gods, nor did he understand they could have any Sacrifice, unless some one died died for the Sake of the rest. Cortez took hold of this Opportunity; and satisfying his Questions, ingeniously confessed, That his Condition, and that of his People, was mortal; for he durst not temporize with the Deceit of those People, when the infallible Truth of his Religion was in Question. But he added, That as they were born in a better Climate; they had more Understanding, and were of greater Strength than the rest of Men; and without admitting the Attribute of Immortal, he remained with the Reputation of Invincible. Cortez told him likewise, That he not only acknowledged a Superior in Heaven, where Men adored the only Lord of the Universe, but besides, they were Subjects and Vassals to the greatest Prince upon Earth, under whose Dominion, they also of Tlascala then were, and that being Brothers to the Spaniards, they could do no other than obey the same Prince. He immediately from that went on to discourse of the Point most essential; and tho' he spoke most fervently against Idolatry, finding in his own good Sense, sufficient Foundation to oppose and destroy the Multiplicity of their Gods, and the abominable Horror of their Sacrifices; yet when he came to touch upon the Mysteries of Faith, he thought they deserved a better Expositor; and as he knew when to be silent, he then gave an Opportunity to Father Bartolome de Olmedo to speak. That Religious Person endeavoured to bring them by Degrees to the Knowledge of the Truth, explaining like a learned and prudent Man the principal Points of the Christian Religion, after such a Manner, that he might gain their Wills, without overcharging the Understanding; for 'tis by no Means convenient to strike with a Blaze of Light upon the Eyes of those who are just come out of Darkness. Magiscarzin, and the rest who attended him, gave at that Time but very small Hopes of their being reduced; saying, That the God whom the Spaniards adored, was very great, and must be greater than theirs; but that each of them was powerful in his own Dominion: For that in one Place there was Occasion for a God against Lightning and Tempests; in another, for Water and Harvests; and again, another for War; and so on for all other human Necessities: For that it was impossible for any one to take Care of the Whole. They admitted the Proposition of their Temporal Lord with more Ease; for they immediately consented to be his Subjects, and asked if he would defend them from Motexuma, placing in that the Foundation of their Obedience ; but at the same Time desired him, with Humility and Earnestness, that there might be no mention of changing their Religion : For should it come to the Knowledge of their Gods, they would call down their Tempests, and stop the Waters to annihilate them. In such Manner did Error possess them, and the Devil keep them in Fear.

ALL that could be obtained of them at that Time, was, to lay aside Sacrifices of human Blood ; for they were convinced they acted against the Law of Nature : And immediately they set at Liberty those miserable Captives which were to die on their Festivals, and broke up several Prisons and Cages where they were kept, and well fed, to prepare them ; not so much that they should come decent to the Sacrifice as that they should not come in bad Order to the Table. Hernan Cortez was not satisfied with this Demonstration ; but on the contrary he proposed to his People, that they should destroy all their Idols ; forming a Consequence from the Action and good Success at Zempoala, as if it had been the same Thing to undertake such an Affair in a Town that was so much larger. His Zeal deceived him, and not his Reason. But Father Bartolome de Olmedo convinced him, by laying before him with a Religious Concern, That he was not without some Scruples concerning the Force which was used to the People of Zempoala ; that Persecution and the Gospel did ill agree ; and, that in Effect, it would only overturn their Altars, and leave the Idols in their Hearts : To which he added, that the Design to reduce those Infidels required more Time, and gentle Usage ; that it was by no Means a good Method of bringing them to the Knowledge of their Errors, by vexing them after that Manner, which would only serve to make them dislike the Truth ; and that before they introduced God, they ought to banish the Devil, a War of another Kind, and different Arms. To whose Perswasion and Authority Cortez submitted his Opinoin, and moderated his Zeal ; and from that Time forwards they only endeavoured to gain and dispose the Minds of the Indians, by making Religion appear aimable in her Works, that upon the View of them, they might be sensible of the Difference, and Abomination of their own Customs, and in them see the Deformity and Filthiness of their Gods.

C H A P. IV.

Hernan Cortez dispatches the Ambassadors of Motezuma. Diego de Ordaz views the Burning Mountain of Popocatepec; it is resolved to march to Cholula.

H R E E or four Days being passed in these first Affairs of Tlascal, Cortez began to think of dispatching Motezuma's Ambassadors. He had detained them purposely, that they might see those People entirely reduced, whom they accounted untameable, and the Answer he gave them was short and artful. He desired them to inform Motezuma of what they had heard, and what had passed in their Presence; the Earnestness and Methods by which the People of Tlascal had solicited Peace, and deserved it; together with the Affection and good Correspondence with which they maintained it: That now they were so much at his Disposal, and he had such an entire Command over them, that he hoped he should reduce them to the Obedience of Motezuma: This being one of the good Consequences which would attend the Embassy, among others of greater Importance, obliged him again to sollicite his Permission to continue his Journey, that he might afterwards deserve his Acknowledgements. With this Dispatch, and the necessary Guard, the Ambassadors immediately departed, more convinced of the Truth than satisfied with the Answer.

HERNAN CORTEZ found himself engaged to stay some Days in Tlascal, to receive the Obedience of the principal Towns of the Republick and their Confederates; which Act was made valid by a publick Instrument, and authorized with the Name of the King Don Carlos, already known and revered among the Indians, with such Sincerity in their Subjection, as appeared in the Respect of the Subjects.

AT this Time there happened an Accident which surprized the Spaniards, and struck a Terror among the Indians. The Burning Mountain of Popocatepec is to be seen from the highest Part of the City of Tlascala on the Top of a Mountain, which, at the Distance of eight Leagues, rises considerably above all the rest of the Hills. At that Time the said Burning Mountain began to darken the Day, with great and frightful Flights of Smoke, so rapid and violent, that it went up a great Way into the Air direct, without giving Way to the Force of the Wind, until having spent its Fury in the Height, it scatter'd and dispers'd it self all round, forming a Cloud, more or less obscure, according to the Quantity of Ashes it carried along with it. Every now and then it shot forth Flames, or Globes of Fire, which seem'd to divide themselves into Sparks, and probably were the burnt Stones which the Mountain threw out, or some other Pieces of combustible Matter, which lasted as long as it was fed. The Indians were not frighted at the Sight of the Smoke, because 'twas frequent, and an ordinary Thing in that Place: But the Fire (which rarely appeared) made them sorrowful, and put them in Fear, as Prefages of future Ills; for they apprehended that those Sparks which were scatter'd through the Air, and did not fall down again into the Burning Mouth, were the Souls of Tyrants that came abroad to chastise the Earth; and that their Gods, when they were angry, made use of them as Instruments, in Proportion to the Punishments they designed.

MAGISCATZIN, and some of the chief Men, who generally attended him, were entertaining Hernan Cortez with those wild Fancies of theirs; and he (observing the rude Notion they had of the Immortality, Rewards, and Punishments of the Soul,) endeavour'd to make them sensible of the Errors with which they disfigured the Truth. At that Time Diego de Ordaz came to ask his Leave to go to take a nearer View of the Burning Mountain, offering to go up to the Top of the Hills, and observed that great Secret of Nature. The Indians were amaz'd to hear such a Proposal, and endeavour'd to dissuade him from his Intention, by informing him of the Danger, saying, That the most valiant of their Nation, had only the Boldness once to visit some Hermitages of their Gods about the Middle of the Eminence; but that above that he would not find the Mark of a human

human Foot; nor were the Trembling to be endur'd or the Roarings, which forbid all Approach to the Top of the Mountain. The Account of these Difficulties did but make Diego de Ordaz the more eager; and tho' Hernan Cortez thought it a Piece of Rashness, yet he gave him Leave to try, that the Indians might see what they thought impossible was not so, to the Courage of the Spaniards. So zealous was he at all Times for his own Reputation, and that of his People.

Diego de Ordaz upon this Occasion was accompanied by two Soldiers of his Company, and some of the principal Indians, that offer'd to go with him as far as the Hermitage, very much lamenting that they were going to be Witnesses of his Death. The Beginning of the Mountain is very delightful, being beautified on all Sides with Trees full of Leaves, which, for a considerable Way, cover'd the Side of the Hill, and make the Ascent appear the less tedious, seeming, in a deceitful Manner, to allure Men with Pleasure into them. When that is pass'd, the Earth grows barren by Degrees, partly by Reason of the Snow, which lies all the Year in those Places, where either the Sun or the Fire do not come, and partly by Reason of the Ashes, which looks white at a Distance, because of the Thickness of the Smoke. The Indians stopp'd at the Habitation of the Hermits; and Diego de Ordaz, with his two Soldiers, went on, climbing courageously up the Rocks, very often making use of Hands as well as Feet. But when they came within a small Distance of the Top, they felt the Earth move under them with Violence and repeated Rockings, and heard the violent Roaring of the Burning Mouth, which in a short Time discharged, with a much greater Noise, a vast Quantity of Fire, wrapped up in Smoke and Ashes; and tho' it went directly upwards, without heating the Air about it, it afterwards spread when it was at the Height, and came down upon the three Spaniards in such Showers of Ashes, so thick and hot, that they were oblig'd to seek for Shelter in the Hollow of the Rock, where they were almost stifled, and desired to return. But Diego de Ordaz perceiving the Earthquake was over, that the Noise lessened, and the Smoke came out less thick, encouraged them by his Example; for going on before them, he passed with Intrepidity to the very Mouth of the Mountain, at the Bottom whereof he observed a great Mass of Fire, which seemed to boil like something liquid, and shining. He also took Notice of the Largeness of the Mouth, which took up all the Top of the Mountain, and might be about a Quarter of a League in Circumference. They returned with this Account; and received a Welcome back from their bold Undertaking, with great Astonishment of the Indians, and Encrease of their Esteem for the Spaniards.

THE Gallantry of Diego de Ordaz was at that Time no other than a rash Curiosity; but Time made it of Importance and serviceable to this Undertaking; for the Army being in Want of Powder, (the second Time they marched to Mexico by Force of Arms,) Cortez remember'd the Boilings of liquid Fire which were discovered in this Mountain, and in it found a sufficient Quantity of very fine Sulphur, for the making of Gun-Powder. On which Account this Action of Diego de Ordaz recommended it self, and became necessary; and his Discovery was so useful in the Conquest, that the Emperor afterwards rewarded him with some Favours, and enobled the Action by giving him the Burning Mountain for his Arms.

TWENTY Days the Spaniards continu'd in Tlascalala, partly on Account of Visits paid them by the neighbouring Nations, and partly to satisfy the Inhabitants themselves; who agreed so well with the Spaniards, that they endeavoured to put off the Time appointed for removing, with various Festivals and publick entertainments, Dances after their Manner, and Acts of Agility.

THE Day being fixed for the March, there arose a Dispute about the Choice of the Road: Cortez inclined for Cholula, a City (as we have said) very large, in whose Districts the Veterane Troops of Motexuma used to quarter.

THE Tlascalans opposed this Resolution, advising them to take their March by Guajozingo, a Country plentiful and secure; for the People of Cholula, besides their their natural Cunning and Treachery; obeyed Motēzuma with a fervile Fear, being the Vassals in whom he most confided for their known Fidelity. To which they added, That City had the Reputation amongst all the Districts thereabouts, of being a Country sacred and religious, containing above four hundred Temples, with such ill-conditioned Gods, that they astonished all the World with their Prodigies; for which Reason it was by no Means secure to enter their Territories, without having some Assurances of their good Disposition. The Zempoalans less superstitious now by their Acquaintance with the Spaniards, despised those Prodigies; but were of the same Opinion, remembring and repeating the Reasons they had given at Zocothlan, for the Army's avoiding that City.

BUT before they came to any Resolution on this Point, new Ambassadors arrived from Motēzuma, with another Present, and Advice that their Emperor would now suffer himself to be visited by the Spaniards, and vouchsafe to receive their Embassy after a favourable Manner; and among other Things they discoursed of relating to the March, they acquainted him they had provided Quarters at Cholula. So that now it was become necessary to march by that City; not that they plac'd any Confidence in this unlooked for and sudden Change of Motēzuma, or that such Facility, after so much Resistance, did not appear unseasonable and suspicious: But Hernan Cortez took great Care that these Mexicans should not perceive him concerned; for in their Fear he placed his greatest Security. As soon as the Chiefs of the Tlascalans understood the Proposal of Motēzuma, they took it for granted, that Treachery was designed at Cholula, and renewed their Instances, being sincerely concerned for the Danger of their Friends. And Magiscatzin, who had the greatest Regard for the Spaniards, and a passionate Inclination in particular for Cortez, pressed him very much that he should not march to that City. Cortez, who was desirous to give him all the Satisfaction he could, as being much obliged for the Care he took of him, and esteeming very much his Advice, immediately assembled his Captains, and in his Presence proposed the Question, weighing the Reasons that offered both on the one Side, and on the other; and the Resolution was, That now they could not possibly avoid marching to those Quarters proposed by the Mexicans, unless they would discover that they were suspicious before; and tho' their Suspicions were certain, they were still obliged to proceed into the greater Danger, and not to leave the Traytors behind them: Therefore it was necessary for them to go to Cholula, to discover the Intentions of Motezuma, and give a new Reputation to their Arms by the Chastisement of his Perfidy. Magiscatzin acquiesced in that Opinion, reverencing (with great Docility) the superior Judgment of the Spaniards; but never quitting his Jealousy, which obliged him to judge the contrary. He desired Leave to call together the Troops of his Republick, and assist his Friends in such evident Danger; for that it was not reasonable, tho' the Spaniards were invincible, to deprive the Tlascalans of the Honour of performing their Duty. Hernan Cortez (notwithstanding he was sensible of the Danger, and well pleased with the Offer) refused to admit them; for it was disagreeable to him to begin so soon to receive Succour from a Nation so lately reduced; and therefore he answered him, by making great Acknowledgements for his Care; and lastly told him, That at the present the Offer was not necessary; yet he refused it so faintly, as if he desired they should do it, without his being obliged to let them know it; a Kind of Refusal, which is little better than asking.

C H A P. V.

They discover new Signs of Treachery in Cholula. The Army marches for that City, being reinforced with some Companies of Tlascalans.

IT was most certain, that Motexuma, without coming to any Resolution of taking up Arms against the Spaniards, contriv'd to destroy them, rather by Subtilty than Force. The Answers of his Oracles had frighted him anew; and the Devil, (who was much disturbed by the Neighbourhood of the Christians) pressed him with horrible Threats to keep them at a Distance from him. Sometimes he enrag'd the Priests and Magicians, that they might provoke and incense the King, and make him furious; at other Times he appeared to him, assuming the Figure of his Idol, and spoke to him, the more to inspire him with the Spirit of Anger: But he always left him inclined to Treason and Deceit, without ever proposing to him to make use of his mighty Power and Force. Whether he had no Permission to use Violence, or that he never uses to advise the best, he took him off from Ways that were generous, and discouraged him by the same Means with which he thought to animate him. On the one Side, he had not Courage to shew himself to those prodigious People; and on the other, he thought their Army too contemptible, and too small in Number, for him to engage publickly with his Arms; and finding it agreeable to his own Notion of Honour to deceive them, he endeavoured wholly to draw them from Tlascalala, where he could not lay his Plots, and bring them to Cholula, where they were already contriv'd, and ready to be executed. Hernan Cortez took notice, that those of the Government did not come to visit him; and he communicated his Observations to the Mexican Ambassadors, very much wondering at the Disrespect of those Caziques who had the Charge of providing his Quarters ; who could not be ignorant that he had been visited by all the Towns of the Country round, that were under less Obligations. The Ambassadors endeavoured to excuse the People of Cholula, but confessed their Inadvertency, and seemingly endeavoured to have the Fault mended, by giving Notice of it ; for it was not long before there came from that City four Indians ill clothed, People of very small Consideration for Ambassadors, considering the Custom of those Nations : A Disrespect which the Tlascalans urged, as a new Sign of their evil Intentions, upon which Hernan Cortez refused to admit them, ordering them immediately back ; saying, (in the Presence of the Mexicans,) That the Caziques of Cholula understood very little Civility, for instead of making Amends for a Neglect, they added one Discourtesy to another. The Day for the March came ; and tho' the Spaniards took the Morning to draw up their own Men, and those of Zempoala, they found already in the Field an Army of Tlascalans, provided by the Senate, at the Instance of Magiscatzin, whose Captains acquainted Cortez, That they had received Orders from the Republick, to serve under his Command, and follow his Banner in the Journey, not only to Cholula, but as far as Mexico, where they supposed was the greatest Danger of his Undertaking.

THEY were all drawn up in Order ; and notwithstanding they were very close, (according to their Discipline,) they took up a great Space of Ground ; for they had joined all the Nations which were confederate with them, and got together an extraordinary Force for the Defence of their Friends, believing it would happen so, that they should be obliged to face the Armies of Moteczuma. Their several Commands were distinguished by the Colour of their Feathers, and the Difference of their Ensigns,

Ensigns, Eagles, Lyons, and other fierce Animals raised on high, which, as Hieroglyphicks and Devices, had a Signification, and put the Soldiers in Mind of the Military Honour of their Nation. Some of our Writers enlarge so far, as to say, that the whole Gros of their Army consisted of an hundred thousand armed Men; others are more reserved in the Account; but with the least Number the Action was great in the Tlascalans, and is truly worthy of Remembrance, both for the Thing it self, and the Manner of doing it. Cortez thanked them, and acknowledged this Proof of their Affections with very endearing Expressions, and was forced to take some Pains to convince them it was inconvenient he should carry so great a Number, when he went in Peace; but at last he gained his Point, leaving them satisfied, by permitting some Companies, with their Captains, to follow him, reserving the Gros to march to his Succour when Necessity required.

OUR Bernal Diaz writes, that he took with him two thousand Tlascalans; Antonio de Herrera says, three thousand: But Hernan Cortez himself confesses, in his own Relation, that he took six thousand; and he was not so lavish of his own Honour, as to make the Number greater than it was, which of Course would have made his Resolution the less admired.

BUT we must not pass over in Silence, an Accident which deserves Consideration, and belongs properly to this Place. There remained in Tlascalala, when the Spaniards left that City, a Cross of Wood fixed by the Spaniards, the Day of their Entrance, on a Place both high and open to the View; and Hernan Cortez was unwilling they should destroy it, on the contrary, he left the Veneration of it in Charge with the Caziques: But it was necessary there should be a more powerful Recommendation, to make that remain with Security among the Infidels; For scarce were the Christians out of the City, when (in

(in sight of all the Indians) a prodigious Cloud descended from Heaven to take Care of its Defence. It was of a pleasing and exquisite Whiteness, and descended through the Region of the Air, till being dilated in Form of a Pillar, it settled perpendicularly upon the same Cross, where it continued more or less distinct, (a marvelous Providence,) for three or four Years, until by various Accidents Christianity spread through that Province. There proceeded from the Cloud a moderate Splendor, which infused Veneration, and never mixed with the Darkness of the Night. The Indians at first were much afraid, being sensible of the Prodigy, without conceiving the Mystery: But after they had better considered the Novelty, they laid aside their Fear, without lessening their Admiration. They said publicly, that that holy Sign contained within it some Deity, and that 'twas not in vain their Friends the Spaniards so much worshipped it. They endeavoured to imitate them, bending the Knee before it, and repairing thither in their Necessities, without thinking on their Idols, and frequenting their Temples much less than they were wont. Which Devotion (if we may call that so, which was indeed the Influence of an unknown Cause) increased with so much Fervour, both among Nobles and Plebeians, that the Priests and Magicians, began to be jealous of their Religion, and endeavoured several Times to pluck up the Cross, and break it in Pieces: But they always returned frightened, without daring to tell what had happened to them, lest they should loose their Reputation with the People. Thus do Authors of Credit report it; and after this Manner did Heaven take Care to dispose the Minds of those People, that they might afterwards, with less Resistance, receive the Gospel, as the Husbandman, before he sows his Seed, prepares the Earth to facilitate the Production.

NOTHING extraordinary happened the first Day's March ; for now that ennumerable Concourse of Indians that appeared on the Roads, and those Shouts which passed for Acclamations, were no Novelty. They marched four Leagues of the five Cholula was then distant from old Tlascala; and it was thought fit to halt near the Bank of a pleasant River, to avoid entering by Night into so populous a Town. Soon after they were fixed in their Quarters, and had distributed such Orders as were necessary for their Defence and Security, there arrived second Ambassadors from the City, People of greater Rank, and better dressed. They brought a Present of several Sorts of Provisions, and delivered their Embassy with much Ceremony and Respect. The Effect was to excuse the Backwardness of their Caziques, for not waiting on the General at Tlascala, those People being their Enemies, to offer the Quarters provided by their City, and withal, to acquaint them how much the Citizens rejoiced at their good Fortune, in deserving to entertain such Guests, so much applauded for their noble Actions, and so deserving to be belov'd for their Goodness. These Words were delivered with a seeming Sincerity, such as very well covered the Artifice. Hernan Cortez graciously admitted of the Excuse, and the Present, taking Care at the same Time to appear without the least Distrust ; and the next Day (by the Rising of the Sun) he continued his March with the same Order, but not without some Concern, which obliged him to greater Vigilance ; for the City was slow in coming out to receive them, and this Remark, among others, made some Noise. But as the Army drew near the City, with their Arms in Readiness for a Combat, the Caziques and Priests appeared, with a numerous Attendance of unarmed People. Cortez gave Orders to halt, to receive them, and they performed their Parts, with so much Reverence and Joy, that they left no room for Jealousy, at that present, of any Thing which had been before observed of their Actions and Management : But as soon as they perceived the Body of Tlascalans that marched in the Rear, they changed their Countenances ; and among the Principal of those who came to receive them, there arose a disagreeable Rumour which did again awaken the Jealousy of the Spaniards. Donna Marina was ordered to enquire into the Cause of that Novelty ; and the Answer they gave by her was, That the Tlascalans could not enter into their City with their Arms, being Enemies to their Nation, and Rebels to their King ; and they were very earnest with Cortez that they should halt, and immediately return to their Country, as Impediments to the Peace which was going to be published ; and represented the Inconveniencies, without receding, or being decompos'd, being positive that it was not to be allowed ; but that Resolution was confin'd within the Limits of a Request.

CORTEZ was somewhat uneasy at this Demand, which seem'd reasonable, but was not consistent with his Security : He endeavoured to quiet them, by the Hopes of finding some Way to compose their Differences ; and communicating the Matter briefly to his Captains, it was judged adviseable to propose to the Tlascalans to take their Quarters without the City, till such Time as they could penetrate into the Designs of the Caziques, or proceed on their March. This Proposition (which seemed to have something of Hardship in it) was carried by the Captains Pedro de Alvarado and Christoval de Olid, who made use both of Perswasion, and Authority, as being an Order which was to be obeyed, and acquainted them with the Reason. They were so very complying, that they cut him short, saying, They did not come to dispute, but obey ; and that they would presently make their Barracks without the Town, in a Place where they might quickly come to the Defence of their Friends, seeing they resolved to adventure contrary to all Reason, confiding confiding in Traytors. The People of Cholula were immediately acquainted with this, which they readily agreed to, both Nations remaining not only satisfied, but with some Vanity from their Opposition; the one, partly because they perswaded themselves they had got the better, by leaving their Enemies discontented, and ill accommodated; the other Party, because they looked upon their refusing to admit them within their City as a manifest Acknowledgement that they stood in fear of them. Thus does the Imagination of Men vary the Nature and Appearance of Things, which are generally valued as they are taken, and they are taken as we would have them.

C H A P. VI.

The Spaniards make their Entry into Cholula; where the People endeavour to deceive them by their outward good Entertainment. Their Treason is discovered; and the Spaniards make a Disposition to chastise them.

THE Entry of the Spaniards into Cholula was like to that of Tlascalala: A Concourse of enumerable People, which they passed through with Difficulty; tumultuous Acclamations; Women that flung and bestowed Nofegays of Flowers; Caziques and Priests, with repeated Respects and Perfumes; Variety of Instruments, which made more Noise than Musick, dispersed about the Streets; and their Joy so well counterfeited, that the Spaniards, who came thither full of Jealousy, began to think them sincere.

THE

THE City was so beautiful to behold, that it was compared to our Valladolid; situate in a Plain, the Horizon on all Sides open, and very delightful. They say it contained within the Walls twenty thousand Inhabitants, and that the Number was greater of those who lived in the Suburbs. 'Twas generally frequented by many Strangers; partly as a Sanctuary of their Gods, and partly as the great Emporium of Merchandize. The Streets were wide, and well laid out; the Buildings greater, and of better Architecture than those of Tlascala; and their Wealth, made it appear more noble, with the Towers, which shewed the Multitude of their Temples. The Inhabitants were more cunning than warlike, Merchants and Mechanicks, abundance of People, and but few of Distinction.

THE Quarters provided for the Spaniards were three or four large Houses contiguous to each other, which contained the Spaniards and Zempoalans; where they could both fortify themselves, as Occasion required; and their Custom so to do, made it not seem strange. The Tlascalans chose a Place for their Quarters a little distant from the Town, securing it with some Works; they formed their Guards, and placed their Centinels, being now improved in Military Affairs by the Imitation of their Friends. The first three or four Days were all quiet, and good Usage. The Caziques were punctual in paying their Respects to Cortez, and endeavoured to be acquainted with his Captains. Provisions were given liberally, and in abundance; all outward Appearances were favourable, insomuch that the Spaniards began to think what they heard was false, and that they had upon too slight Foundations believed the former Rumours; so readily disposed is the Mind always to make it self easy. But it was not long before the Truth appeared; nor could those People continue in their Artifice till they had compassed what they intended: Deceitful ful both by Nature and Custom, but not so watchful and cunning as their Dissimulation and Malice requir'd.

PROVISIONS by little and little grew scarce, the Entertainments and Attendance of the Caziques ceased at once. Moteczuma's Ambassadors held private Conferences with the Priests, and the People discover'd a false Joy in their Countenances. All Things gave Signs of some Novelty, and awaken'd the ill-lull'd Jealousy of the Spaniards. Cortez contriv'd to find out some Means to be inform'd of the Intentions of those People; and at the same Time the Truth discover'd it self; the Providence of God, so often known by Experience in this Conquest, anticipating all the Contrivances of Men.

AN antient Indian Woman of Note, who had great Relations in Cholula, had contracted a Friendship with Donna Marina: She often visited her with Familiarity; and Donna Marina very well deserv'd it from her, for her natural Courtesy and Discretion. She came that Day earlier, and seem'd to be fuller of Thought and Trouble than usual. She drew her aside privately from the Spaniards, and charging her with Secrecy, even by the manner of her Delivery, began to bemoan her Captivity, and to perswade her to forsake those abominable Strangers, and come to her House, where she offer'd her Entertainment and Protection from the Spaniards. Donna Marina, who was ingenious enough, compar'd this Offer with the other Signs, and pretending that she was under Oppression, and came against her Will with those People, seem'd to facilitate the Escape, and accepted of her Entertainment with so many grateful Acknowledgments, that the Indian, believing her sincere, discover'd her whole Heart; telling her, “ It was absolutely necessary she should go immediately, for that the Time appointed among their People for the Destruction of the Spaniards drew near; and that 'twas unreasonable so valuable a Woman should perish with them: That “ Motexuma had provided twenty thousand Men at a “ small Distance, to make sure of the Design : That “ six thousand chosen Men of that Number had already “ enter’d the City in small Parcels : That Abundance of “ Arms had been distributed among the People, Quanti“ ties of Stones carried up to the Tops of the Houses, and “ deep Trenches were cut a-cross the Streets, with sharp “ Stakes fix’d in the Bottom, covering the same at Top “ with Earth on slight Supporters, that the Horses “ might fall in, and be wounded : That Motexuma did “ design to make an End of all the Spaniards ; but had “ commanded some of them to be brought alive, to “ satisfy his Curiosity, and his Regard for his Gods :

 “ And that he had presented the City with a Drum “ made of Gold, curiously hollow’d, to excite their “ Minds with this military Favour.” In short, Donna Marina (expressing how much she rejoiced at the good Disposition of their Undertaking, and asking some Questions as one that was pleas’d with what she enquir’d after) found her self fully inform’d of the whole Conspiracy. She pretended she would immediately go with her ; and under Colour of getting together her Jewels, with some other valuable Things, she found the Means of leaving her without Suspicion, and immediately gave an Account to Cortez. He order’d the Indian to be seiz’d ; who, after a few Threats, between Confusion and Conviction, discover’d the whole.

SOON after came some Tlascalan Soldiers, dress’d like Peasants, and told Cortez from their Commanders, “ That he should take care of himself, for that from “ their Quarters they had seen the People of Cholula “ carry their Women and Goods to the neighbouring “ Villages : ” A sure Sign they were hatching some Treason. They understood likewise that they had celebrated that Morning, in the great Temple of their City, a Sacrifice of ten Children of both Sexes ; a Ceremony they used

used when they designed to undertake any military Action. At the same time arriv'd two or three Zempoalans, who going about the City, by Accident had discover'd the Deceit of their Trenches, and had seen in the Streets, on the Sides, some Works and Palifades, which they had made to guide the Horses to the Precipices:

THERE was no occasion for any greater Confirmation of the Intentions of those People: But Hernan Cortez was resolv'd to make the Matter appear clearer, and so to justify his Proceedings, that none should be able to blemish them; by procuring some principal Witnesses of the same Nation, who should confess the Crime. To which End he order'd the Chief Priest to be called, on whom the rest depended, and two or three more of the same Profession; Men who were of great Authority with the Caziques, and the Generality of the People. He examined them separately, not as one who doubted their Intention, but as one who was sorry for their Treason, acquainting them with all the Circumstances he knew; but concealing the Manner how he came by that Knowledge, to make them admire, and the Matter seem more mysterious, leaving them puzzled in their Notion of his Knowledge. They believ'd they were talking to a Deity, that penetrated the Secrets of Mens Hearts, and durst not carry on the Deceit, but immediately confessed the Treason with all the Circumstances; blaming Motexuma, by whose Order every Thing was dispos'd and provided.

CORTAZ order'd them to be secretly imprison'd, to avoid raising any Disturbance in the City. He likewise order'd Care to be taken of Motexuma's Ambassadors, without suffering them to go out, or have any Communication with those of the City; and calling his Captains together, he acquainted them with the whole Affair, and how much it concern'd them not to let this Treachery go unpunish'd; making it appear easy, and weighing the Consequences with so much Energy and Resolution,

Resolution, that they all resolv'd to obey, leaving the Direction and Success to his Prudence.

THIS being done, he sent for the Caziques who govern'd the City, and publish'd his March for the next Day; not that he design'd it, or that it was possible; but only to frighten them in Time for what they were about to do. He demanded Provisions for the March, Indians of Burden for his Baggage, and two thousand Men armed to accompany him, as the Zempoalans and Tlascalans had done. They offer'd the Provisions and Tamenes faintly, but the armed Men which he demanded with greater Readiness; in which their Designs ran counter; for Cortez desir'd them to disunite their Forces, and to have in his Power a Part of the Traytors who were to be chastiz'd; and the Caziques offer'd them, that they might introduce among the Troops of Cortez those conceal'd Enemies, and make use of them when Occasion offer'd. Both Policies of War, and both supported by military Reasons, if those Kinds of Deceit may be allow'd for Reason which War has made lawful, and Example has dignify'd.

NOTICE was given to the Tlascalans of all that happen'd, with Orders to be in a Readiness; and that at the first Dawning of the Day they should draw near the City, as if they were moving to follow the March; and that at the first Discharge of the Fire-Arms they should advance with all Speed into the City to join the Army, bringing with them all the People they found armed. He took care also that the Spaniards and Zempoalans should have their Arms in Order, and be acquainted with the Business they were to be employ'd in. As soon as it was Night (the Quarters being secur'd by Guards, and such Centinels as the present Occasion requir'd) Cortez sent for Motexuma's Ambassadors, and with much Shew of great Intimacy, as one that imparted to them what they did not know, told them,
 “ That

“ That he had discover’d, and had Proofs of a very “ great Conspiracy, form’d against him by the Caziques “ and Citizens of Cholula: He acquainted them with “ what Measures they had taken against his Person and “ Army: He laid before them how much they had “ been wanting to the Laws of Hospitality, the Esta“ blishment of the Peace, and the Word of their Prince.”
 And added, “ That he had not only come to the Know“ ledge of this, by his own Speculation and Vigilance;
 “ but that the principal Conspirators had likewise con“ fessed it, and excused their Treachery by a greater “ Crime; for they had the Boldness to say they had re“ ceiv’d Orders and Assistance from Motexuma to destroy “ his Army after so infamous a manner; which was not “ likely, nor could he entertain so mean a Thought of “ so great a Prince; for which Reason he had resolv’d
 “ to take Satisfaction for the Offence with the utmost “ Rigour of his Arms: That he communicated this to “ them, that they might be appriz’d of his Reasons,
 “ and understand that he was not so angry with them “ for the Crime committed against himself, as for the “ Circumstance those seditious People made use of, by “ authorizing their Treason with the Name of the “ King.”

THE Ambassadors pretended, as well as they could, that they knew nothing of the Conspiracy, and endeavour’d to save the Credit of their Prince, following the Path which Cortez had purposely chalk’d them out to lessen the Force of his Complaint.

IT was not convenient at that Time publicly to seem to distrust Motexuma, and make a powerful Prince, who was resolv’d to dissemble, a powerful open Enemy: Upon which Consideration it was resolv’d to overthrow his Designs, without giving him Reason to believe they knew them; punishing only his Actions in the Persons of those he employ’d, and contenting themselves to avoid the Blow, without any regard to the Arm that guided it. Cortez thought it a Matter of small Difficulty to break that Body of Men provided to support the Seditious, as one accustom'd to greater Deeds with a smaller Force; and he was so far from doubting the Success, that he esteem'd it a Happiness (or, at least, he said so among his own People) to find this Opportunity of raising the Reputation of his Arms among the Mexicans; and, in Truth, he was not displeas'd to find Motezuma so much at a Loss in Stratagems; believing that he would scarce raise his Thoughts to very great Matters, who durst not attack him openly, and discover'd in his very Deceits the Weakness of his Resolution.

C H A P. VII.

Cortez chastises the Traytors of Cholula; reduces and pacifies the City; and establishes a Friendship betwixt them and the Tlafcalans.

AS soon as it was Day the Indians of Burden came, as had been demanded, and some Provisions; but the former fewer in Number, and the other less in Quantity, than was expected. Afterwards came the armed Indians, in broken Troops, who, under Pretence of accompanying them in the March, had their Counter-Orders to fall upon the Rear, when Occasion requir'd; of whose Numbers the Caziques had been no Niggards, but gave another Signal of their evil Intention, by sending more than were desired. Hernan Cortez distributed them into the several veral Courts of the Quarters, where he very artfully secured them; telling them that he was obliged to separate them, in order to form his Squadrons as he was accustomed. He presently put his Men in Order, well instructed in what they were to do; and mounting his Horse, with those that were to follow him in the Action, caused the Caziques to be called, to justify to them his Resolutions; of whom some came, and others excused themselves. He told them with a loud Voice, (and Donna Marina explain'd it with the same Vehemence,) That now their Conspiracy was discover'd, and their Punishment resolv'd on; by the Rigour of which they should know how much it imported them to maintain that Peace which they intended so treacherously to break. Scarce had he begun to protest the Damage they should receive, when they retir'd to join their own Forces, flying with more than ordinary Diligence, and beginning the War with some Injuries and Threats, which were heard at a good Distance. Then Hernan Cortez commanded that the Foot should fall upon those Indians he kept divided in the Squares; and tho' they were all provided with Arms to execute their Treachery, and endeavoured to join, in order to defend themselves, they were all destroy'd with small Difficulty, none escaping with Life, but such as could hide, or fling themselves from the Walls, making use of their Agility and Lances to leap to the other Side.

HAVING secur'd all at his Back with the Slaughter of his concealed Enemies, he gave the Signal for the Tlascalans to move, and the Army advanced leisurely to the principal Street, leaving in the Quarters such a Guard as was necessary. He detached some Zempoalans before to discover the Trenches, that the Horse might not be endanger'd. The Cholulans at the same Time were not idle, for finding themselves now engaged in open War, they call'd in the rest of the Mexicans; and joining ing in a great Square, where they had three or four Temples, they placed a Part of their People on the Top of their Towers, and in the Porches ; the rest they divided into several Bodies, to engage the Spaniards. But at the same Time that Cortez's Troops enter'd the Square, and the Charge was given on both Sides, the Body of Tlascalans clos'd with the Enemies Rear ; which unexpected Accident put them in so much Dread and Disorder, that they could not fly, and knew not how to defend themselves ; so that the Spaniards were rather encumber'd than oppos'd by their Enemies, who ran from one Danger to another with little or no Choice ; People void of Counsel, who only advanc'd in Hopes to escape, and very often presented their Breasts to the Points of their Enemies Weapons, without remembring to make the least Use of their Hands. Many were killed in this sort of Engagement ; but the greatest Part escaped to the Temples, on whose Steps and Terraces the Spaniards discover'd a Multitude of armed Men, but such as rather filled than defended the Eminences of those great Buildings. The Mexicans took upon them the Defence of those Places, but found themselves so encumber'd and oppress'd by the Crowd of the Inhabitants, that they could hardly turn themselves, and had scarce Room to discharge their Arrows. Cortez approached the greatest of the Temples with his Troops, and commanded his Interpreters with a loud Voice, to offer free Passage to all such as would voluntarily come down and surrender ; which was perform'd the second and third Time ; and then perceiving that no one moved, he order'd the Tower of the Temples to be fired, which, 'tis agreed, was executed, and that a great many perish'd in the Fire and Ruins. It did not appear an easy Matter for them to have fired those high Buildings, without first opening the Passage of the Stairs, if Cortez himself had not hit upon it, by making use of the flaming Arrows, with which the Indians at a great Distance threw their artificial Fires; but nothing was sufficient to dislodge the Enemy, till they shorten'd the Attack by making way with the Artillery, and it was worthy of Remark, that only one, out of so many as were destroy'd in this Temple, surrender'd voluntarily to the Courtesy of the Spaniards: A notable Token of their Obstinacy.

THE same Method was used at the other Temples, and afterwards they rang'd thro' the whole City, which was left entirely dispeopled, and War ceased for want of Enemies. The Tlascalans were disorderly to Excess in the Pillage, and it cost some Difficulty to make them retire. They made a great many Prisoners, loaded themselves with Clothes, and Merchandizes of Value; and particularly they fell upon the Salt-Houses, of which they immediately sent some Loads to their City, considering the Necessities of their Country in the very midst of their Plunder. Above six thousand Men were left dead in the Streets, Temples, and strong Houses, between Natives and Mexicans; an Action well-dispos'd, and perform'd without any Loss on our Side; and, in Truth, it was rather a Chastisement than a Victory.

HERNAN CORTEZ retir'd immediately to his Quarters with the Spaniards and Zempoalans; and, assigning Quarters for the Tlascalans within the City, order'd the Prisoners of both Nations to be set at Liberty; which were indeed the principal People, whom the Tlascalans had preserved as their most valuable Prize. Cortez first order'd them to be brought into his Presence, and then commanded that the Priests should come forth from their Retirements, with the Indian who discover'd their Designs, and the Ambassadors of Motexuma: Then he made them a short Discourse, complaining, That the People of that City had obliged him to so severe a Punishment; and after laying before them the Crime, and assuring all that he had laid aside his Displeasure, and satisfy'd his just Revenge, he commanded a general Pardon to be published, without any Exception ; and made it his Request to the Caziques, That they would endeavour to repeople the City, by calling back the Fugitives, and encouraging those to come forth who were conceal'd.

THE Indians could scarce believe they were at Liberty, knowing with what Rigour they used to treat their own Prisoners ; but kissing the Earth in token of their great Acknowledgment, they offer'd, with the most humble Submission, to execute the Orders given them. The Ambassadors endeavour'd to conceal their Confusion, applauding the Success of that Day ; and Hernan Cortez congratulated them on the same, suffering Diffimulation to take Place for the present, that he might keep them free from Suspicion, and oblige Motexuma, by this outward Shew, to interest himself in the Chastisement of his own Artifice.

THE City was in a little Time re-peopled ; for this Demonstration of setting at Liberty the Caziques and Priests so soon, with the Impression this great Clemency of the Spaniards made on them, after so just a Provocation, was sufficient Assurance to the People who were scatter'd among the neighbouring Villages. The Citizens return'd immediately to their Houses with their Families, open'd their Shops, shewed their Wares, and the Tumult was at once converted into Obedience and Security : An Action which did not so much shew the natural Facility with which those Indians ran from one Extreme to another, as the great Opinion they had of the Spaniards ; for they found in the very Justification of their Punishment sufficient Reason be secure, on their Amendment.

THE Day after the Action Xicotencal arriv'd with an Army of twenty thousand Men, which, upon the first Notice from their People, the Republick sent to the Succour of the Spaniards. They had kept their Forces on Foot, doubting the Success ; and upon all Occasions the Spaniards experimented the Diligence of that Nation. They halted without the City, where Hernan Cortez visited and entertain'd them with the greatest Acknowledgments for their Care and Zeal to serve him ; but at the same Time prevail'd on them to return, telling Xicotencal and his Captains, " That now their Assistance was " not necessary for the Reduction of the City ; and that " having resolv'd shortly to march for Mexico, it was " not convenient to awaken the Power of Motexuma, " and provoke him to War, by bringing into his Domi- " nions so numerous a Body of Tlascalans, declared Enc- " mies of the Mexicans." They made no Objections to these Reasons ; on the contrary, they ingenuously confessed and acknowledg'd that they were just, offering to have Troops in Readiness, and to come to his Assistance whensoever Occasion required.
same

CORTEZ endeavour'd, before they returned, to reconcile the two Nations of Tlascalá and Cholula. He set on foot a Treaty, removed the Difficulties, and, as his Authority was now well confirm'd with both Parties, he effected it in a few Days ; and the Act of Confederacy and Alliance between the two Cities and their Districts, were celebrated with the Assistance of their Magistrates, and the accustomed Solemnities and Ceremonies. This was a wise Mediation ; to which he was obliged, for the sake of the Conveniency of opening a Way for the Tlascalans to supply him the more easily with such Succours as he should have Occasion for, and likewise not to leave this Impediment to his Retreat, in case the Success should not be answerable to his Hopes.

THUS happen'd the Chastisement of Cholula, so much talked of in the Books of Strangers, and in one of our own People, who by this Means obtain'd the miserable Applause of seeing himself quoted against his Country. They place this Action among the barbarous Cruelties related of the Spaniards in the Indies, and enlarge very much upon it, to discredit and reflect on the Conquest. They would give up all the Glory of our Arms to a covetous Impulse and Thirst of Gold, without remembering we open'd the Way to Religion, with the concurrent special Assistance of the Arm of God throughout the whole Undertaking. They very much lament the Indians, treating them as a defenceless and simple People, that their Sufferings might appear the greater, and by a wicked Compassion shew their Hatred and Envy.

THE Case of Cholula needs no other Defence than the bare Narration. That sufficiently shews the Malice of those Barbarians, and how well they knew to make use both of Force and Fraud, and with how much Justice their Treachery was punish'd; from whence may be gather'd how passionately they relate other Cases of horrible Inhumanity, which they consider with the same Partiality. We are not ignorant that in some Part of the Indies Actions have been seen worthy of Reprehension, indeed contrary both to Piety and Reason; but in what just and holy Undertaking have they not passed by some Inconveniences? From what well disciplin'd Army could they ever entirely banish those Abuses and Disorders which the World calls military Liberty? And what Proportion do these lesser Inconveniences bear with the principal Point of the Conquest? Those who are envious of the Spanish Glory, must confess, that from this Beginning resulted, and with these Instruments was perfected, the Conversion of this Body of Gentiles, and so great a Part of the World at this Day restored to their Creator. But to think that this Conquest of the Indies should not be agreeable to God, and his most high Decree, for this or that Crime of the Conquerors, is to confound the Substance with Accidents; which even in the ineffable Work of our Redemption, presupposes (as necessary for universal Salvation) the Malice of those permitted Sinners, who were the Instruments of working the greatest Remedy with the greatest Iniquity. The Ends of God may be known in some of his Dispositions, which carry along with them the Signals of his Providence; but the Proposition and Agreement of the Means by which they are directed, is a Point reserv'd to his eternal Wisdom, and so conceal'd from human Knowledge, that all such prejudiced Opinions, whose Subtleties would pass on the World for Strength of Understanding, ought to be heard with Contempt, as being, in Truth, no more than a daring Ignorance.

C H A P. VIII.

The Spaniards march from Cholula; they meet with new Difficulties on the Mountain of Chalco: MOTEZUMA endeavours to stop them by means of his Magicians.

THE Day prefix'd for the March was now drawing near, when some Zempoallans who serv'd in the Army (whether they fear'd the Danger of marching to the Court of Motezuma, or that the Love of their Country weigh'd more with them than Reputation) desired Leave to return Home; which Cortes granted without Difficulty; thanking them for the good Services they had done him: And by this Opportunity sent some Presents to the Cacique of Zempoalla; recommending again to his Care, those Spaniards he had left in his District, upon the Confidence repos'd in his Friendship and Alliance. He wrote at the same Time to Juan de Escalante, with particular Earnestness, to send him some Meal for the Host, and Wine for the Mass; which began to grow scarce, and the want of which would very much distress him and his Troops. He gave him a short Account of his Progress, that he might thereby encourage him to strengthen the Fortrefs of Vera Cruz, by additional Fortifications; not so much on account of the Indians, as of what they might suspect from Diego Velasquez, whose restless Spirit added to the General's Anxiety.

At this Time arriv'd new Embassadors from Motezuma, who having been inform'd of what pass'd at Cholula, began to think of treating with the Spaniards: Accordingly, these Embassadors return'd Thanks to Cortes for chastizing the Seditious; they trifled so far, as to enlarge upon the Indignation of their King, and to brand those with the Name of Traitors, who had merited it no otherwise than by Obedience to his Commands. This Message was accompanied with a Present of equal Value and Pomp; and by what happen'd afterwards, it appears, that the Design of it was to make Cortes think himself secure of their good Intentions, that he might be the less circumspect in his March, and fall into another Ambush, prepared for him. In fine, after fourteen Days Stay, during which Time they were employed in the Manner we have related, they began their March; and the first Night the Army quartered in a Village in the Jurisdiction of Guacocingo, to which the Chiefs of that Government, and of other neighbouring Towns, immediately repaired with sufficient Quantity of Provisions, and some Presents of small Value, but enough to shew the Affection with which they expected the Spaniards. Among these People Cortes found the same Complaints of Motezuma as in Provinces more remote; nor was he sorry to see those Humours extend so near the Heart, perswading himself, that a Prince could not be very powerful with so many Marks of a Tyrant, who by losing the Love of his Vassals, is destitute of the surest Defence of a King.

The next Day they prosecuted their March over a very craggy Mountain, which join'd to the Voleano. Cortes marched with Caution, having been advised by one of the Caciques of Guacocingo at parting, not to confide in the Mexicans, who had placed a great Ambuscade on the other Side of the Mountain, and stopp'd up the Royal Road, which goes down from the Top to the Province of Chalco, with great Stones, and Trees, opening another more impracticable Passage, and smoothing it at the Top of the Hill; where they had augmented the natural Precipices of the Place, with some they had cut, that the Army by degrees might be entangled in Difficulties, and be charged on a sudden, when their Horses could not turn themselves, nor the Foot stand firm. They had reach'd the Top of the Mountain, (not without Fatigue, for it snowed and blew hard) and in the very highest Part, at a little Distance from each other, they found the two Roads, with the Marks that had been related, one stopp'd up, and covered; the other inviting to the View, and newly made.

Although Hernan Cortes was highly incens'd to find the Intelligence of this Piece of Treachery prove true, he was so much Master of himself, that without shewing Resentment, or making any Disturbance in the Army; he asked Motezuma's Embassadors, who marched near his Person, what those two Roads meant? They answered, That the best was levelled for him to march: The other stopp'd up, as more craggy and difficult. Cortez replied, without changing either Voice or Countenance; You are but little acquainted; said he, with those of my Nation; they will march in this Road that you have stopp'd up, for no other Reason, than its Difficulty: For the Spaniards, whensoever they have it in their Choice, incline to that which is the least easy. Then, without making any Stop, he commanded his Indian Friends to march foremost, and clear the Way, by removing to each Side those Obstacles to his Passage, the Artifice whereof they had discover'd to him: This was presently put in Execution, to the great Surprize of the Embassadors; who not suspecting the Stratagem of their Prince to be discovered, believed it a Piece of Divination, and found Matter both of Admiration and Fear in the Gallantry of his Resolution. Cortes made this artful Use of the Notice he had received, to avoid the Danger, without losing his Reputation: Nor did he care to have them think that he distrusted Motezuma; but dextrously disappointed his Stratagem, without seeming to know it.

So soon as the Indians in Ambuscade perceived the Spaniards to march wide, and follow the Royal Road, they took it for granted that they were discovered, and began to retire in as much Consternation and Disorder, as if they had been overcome in Battel: So that our Army descended into the Plain, without Opposition: They quartered that Night in some Houses on the Skirts of the Mountain, built for the Entertainment of Mexican Merchants, who frequented the Fairs of Cholula; there they secured themselves with doubled Guards, and such other Precautions as were necessary in a Country where they marched in so little Security. Motezuma, in the mean Time, dispirited by the Disappointments he had met, lost his Resolution, and durst not make use of Force. This want of Courage made him devout: He was more conversant with his Gods, frequented their Temples, and redoubled his Sacrifices, till he had stain'd all their Altars with human Blood: His Cruelty increased with his Afflictions; and the contradictory Answers of his Idols, added to his Confusion, and made him entirely disconsolate: Those unclean Spirits disagreeing in their Advice; some bad him open the Gates of the City to the Spaniards, that he might secure them all for Sacrifice, without their being able either to defend themselves or to escape: Others advised, that he should keep them at a distance, without suffering himself to be seen, and endeavour to destroy them; and to this Opinion he most inclined: For he was extremely offended, that they were so bold as to enter into his Court against his Will: He regarded this Obstinacy of theirs, in Contradiction to his Orders, as an Invasion of his Power, disguising his Pride under a pretended Concern for the Preservation of his Authority.

But

But when he understood that the Spaniards were already arrived in the Province of Chalco, and that his last Ambush in the Mountain had no manner of Effect, he grew uneasy, and impatient to the last Degree, not knowing what Measures to take: And his Counsellors left him in the same Uncertainty into which his Oracles had led him. At last he summoned all his Magicians and Sorcerers, whose Profession was much esteemed in that Country, and of whom many had Communication with the Devil; the want of Knowledge of the true God giving a Reputation of Wise to those Men who were the most deceived. He acquainted them what Occasion he had for all their Skill, to check the Progress of these Strangers, of whose Designs he was so justly jealous. He commanded them to take the Field, and put the Spaniards to flight, or stupify them by the Force of their Enchantments, and work some extraordinary Effect, as they had been accustomed to do on Occasions less important: If they accomplished this, he promised them great Rewards; and threaten'd them with Death, if they returned into his Presence without Success. This Order was put in Execution with so much Zeal, that several numerous Companies of Negromancers were assembled and set out against the Spaniards, confiding in the Force of their Conjurations, and the Power which they believed they had over all Nature. Father Joseph de Acosta, and other creditable Authors report, That when they came to the Road of Chalco, by which the Army was marching, and there began their Invocations, and drew Circles, the Devil appeared to them, in the Form of one of their Idols, called Telcatlepuca, a God malignant and terrible; from whom they supposed Plagues, Sterility, and other Chastisements of Heaven to proceed. He came like one despighted and enraged; and with his lowring angry Look, outdid the very Fierceness express'd in the Countenance of the Idol. His Garments were girt with a Rope of Wicker, which bound his Breast in different Rounds, either for the better Expression of his Anguish, or to show, that he was dragg'd by an invisible Hand. They prostrated themselves to adore him; and he, without shewing the least Regard to their Humiliations, imitated the Voice as well as he had done the Figure of the Idol; and spoke to them after this Manner: Unhappy Mexicans, the Time is come wherein your Conjurations have lost their Force, and our League is entirely dissolved. Tell Motezuma, that for his Tyranny and Cruelty, Heaven hath decreed his Ruin: And that you may after a more lively Manner represent to him the Desolation of his Empire, turn your Eyes upon that miserable City, already forsaken by your Gods. Having said this, he disappeared; and they they beheld the whole City in a dreadful Flame, which lessening by Degrees, at length vanish'd, and left the Buildings untouched.

The Magicians returned to Motezuma with this Account, which they thought sufficient to acquit them; notwithstanding their Apprehensions of his Cruelty. But he was so astonished with the Menaces of this unfortunate and calamitous God, that he remained speechless for a while, like a Man in deep Thought, and summoning all his Spirits to his Support; and from that Instant laying aside his native Fierceness, he cast his Eyes on the Magicians, and the rest who were present: What can we do, said he, if our Gods forsake us? Let the Strangers come, and the Heavens fall upon us: To abscond, or turn our Backs upon Misfortune, would be dishonourable. (And a little after he added) I only lament the old Men, Women, and Children, who cannot defend themselves. And in making this Reflection it was with Difficulty that he with-held his Tears. It cannot be denied, but that there was something very Noble in his Resolution to meet that Calamity which he now regarded as inevitable; nor was it a Tenderness unbecoming a Royal Mind, which he express'd in reflecting on the Oppression of his Vassals: Such Sentiments are worthy of a King, among whose Virtues, Humanity and Compassion are no less heroical than Fortitude. They began from this Moment to think of the Entertainment which Motezuma was to give the Spaniards, of the Solemnity and Preparations for their Reception: And from thence took Occasion to discourse on the great Actions they had done, and the Prodigies with which Heaven had prepared their Way, the Marks they bore of those Oriental Men, promised to their Ancestors, and the Dispondency of their own Gods, who seemed to confess themselves vanquish'd, and to abandon the Dominion of these Countries, as Divinities of an inferiour Hierarchy. And there was sufficient need of all this Prepossession, to make it possible for such a handful of Men to penetrate (against such obstinate Resistance) to the very Court of a Prince so potent and absolute; whose Vassals were bred up in a Dread of him, and reverenc'd him even to Adoration.

C H A P. IX.

MOTEZUMA sends his Nephew the Lord of Tezeuco to visit CORTEZ in his Quarters : He continues his March, and halts at Quitlavaca, within the Lake of Mexico.

FROM the Houses where the Army quartered on the other Side of the Mountain, they passed the Day following to a small Village in the Jurisdiction of Chalco, situate on the Royal Road, somewhat more than two Leagues from their former Encampment ; where the principal Cacique of the Province, and others of the Neighbourhood immediately arriv'd : They brought Presents with some Provisions : Cortes entertained them with great Humanity, and made them Presents in Return for theirs : But he quickly discovered by their Conversation, that they were very circumspect, and cautious of speaking before the Mexican Embassadors : For they stopped out of Season, and seemed embarassed ; and even in what they said, explained what they would conceal. Hernan Cortes took them aside, and by the Help of his Interpreters, discovered all the Venom of their Hearts. They complained immoderately of the Cruelties and Tyrannies of Motezuma : They represented the intolerable Load of his Imposts, extended even to their Persons ; for he obliged them to labour without Wages, in his Gardens, and other Works of Vanity : They added with Tears, That they were forced to give up their Women as a Tribute to his Lust, and that of his Ministers ; who chose and rejected them at Pleasure ; nor were the Mother's Arms a Security to her Daughter, or the Bed of a Husband any Protection to his Wife. They represented this to Cortes, as to the Person who was to apply a Remedy ; beholding him as a Deity descended from Heaven, to exercise Jurisdiction over Tyrants. He hearkened to them with Compassion, and endeavoured to support them with the Hopes of Relief ; permitting the Opinion they had entertained of him, to pass at that Time without undeceiving their Ignorance. He did not willingly suffer his Politics to carry him beyond the Bounds of Modesty ; and as little did he care to lessen the advantagious Notion

Notion these People had of him, which he consider'd as a Point of the utmost Importance.

He pursued his March the next Day for four Leagues, thro' a more temperate and pleasant Country, which discovered its Beauty in Groves and Gardens. He made a Halt in Ame-meca, where he quartered his Army in a Village tolerably well inhabited, built on a Creek of the great Lake, one Half in the Water, and the other on firm Land, at the Foot of a little Mountain, rugged and barren: To this Place resorted a great many Mexicans, with their Arms and military Ornaments: And tho' it was believed at first, that Curiosity only brought them thither, their Numbers increased to such a Degree, as to give Umbrage; nor wanted there some Reasons to create a Jealousy of their Designs. Cortes had recourse to such Impressions on their Senses as he thought proper to stop and affright them; making a Discharge of some Fire-Arms, and Pieces of Artillery in the Air, and provoking the Fury of the Horses; and the Interpreters represented those strange Sounds, as the Forerunners of some sinister Event: By which Means he obliged them to retire to a greater Distance from his Quarters before Night came on. We cannot affirm that they approach'd with any hostile Intentions; nor doth it seem likely, that they should undertake any new Conspiracy, when Motezuma was reduced to expose himself to View; tho' the Centinels kill'd some Indians for advancing too near, under an Appearance of reconnoitring the Quarters: And it is possible, that some Chief of the Mexicans might lead his Troops thither, with a Design to surprize the Spaniards; as believing it might not be disagreeable to their King, who, they thought, was making a Peace repugnant to his Temper and Interest: But this is no more than Conjecture; for in the Morning they only discovered some Troops of People without Arms, who had placed themselves in the Road to see the Strangers pass.

Orders were now giving for the Army to march, when four Mexican Cavaliers arrived at the Quarters, with Notice, that Prince Cacumatzin, Nephew to Motezuma, and Lord of Tezcuco was coming to visit Cortes on the Part of his Uncle; nor was it long e'er he arrived: He was accompany'd by a great many Nobles, richly adorned, with all the Marks of Peace, and carried on the Shoulders of some Indians of his Family, in a Chair covered with various Feathers, whose Colours were diversify'd with Design and Proportion. He was a young Man of about 25 Years of Age, of an agreeable Presence. So soon as he alighted, some of his Servants went before to sweep the Ground

where he was to tread, putting back the People on each Side with much Civility ; Ceremonies, which, howsoever ridiculous, carried a Shew of Authority. Cortes went to receive him as far as the Door of his Apartment, having adorned himself as usual on such Occasions ; and at his Approach, made a profound Reverence : Which the Prince returned, touching the Earth, and afterwards his Lips with his right Hand : He took his Place with a free easy Air, and spoke with the Composure of a Man, who knew how to look on Novelties without Surprise. The Substance of his Discourse was, in proper Expressions to welcome Cortes, and all the Captains of his Army ; and to inform him of the amicable Disposition with which the great Motezuma expected them, how much he desired to establish a firm Correspondence and Friendship with the Puissant Eastern Prince who sent him ; whose Power he was obliged to acknowledge, for some Reasons, which they should understand from his own Mouth : And then, by Way of private Discourse, entertain'd him (as the other Embassadors had done before) with the Difficulties that oppos'd his coming to Mexico, pretending that the People were much distress'd by that Year's Barrenness all over the Country ; and telling him (as a Point that gave the King much Concern) how ill the Spaniards must be accommodated, where the Inhabitants themselves wanted necessary Subsistence. To this Cortes reply'd in that mysterious Manner, by which he constantly maintain'd the Respect and Awe he had imprinted on the People ; That the King his Master, being a Monarch without Equal in the other World where the Sun rises, had likewise some Reasons of high Import to offer his Friendship to Motezuma, and communicate several Affairs which essentially regarded his Person and Dignity, and such as would not be undeserving of his Acknowledgment : And that for his own Part, he did with a most particular Respect receive the Liberty he gave him, to deliver his Embassy, without being the least in Pain for the present Scarcity of the Country : That the Spaniards required but little Nourishment to support their Vigour, and were inured to suffer, and even dispise those Inconveniencies and Fatigues, which distress'd Men of an inferiour Species. Cacumatzin said no more to divert his Resolution ; but received some small Jewels of an extraordinary Glass, which Cortez presented him, with abundance of Joy and Acknowledgment ; accompanying the Army as far as Tezeuco, the Capital of his Dominion ; from whence he proceeded to Mexico, with the Answer to his Embassy.

Tezeuco was in those Days one of the greatest Cities of that Empire: Some say 'twas as big as Sevil, and others, that it vied with Mexico itself for Grandeur, and pretended (not without Reason) to be superior to it in Point of Antiquity. The principal Front of the Buildings was extended on the Border of a spacious Lake, in a delightful Scituation, where the Causey of Mexico began: And by that Cortes pursued his March, without stopping at Tezeuco; for his Intention was to advance to Iztacpalapa three Leagues forward; from whence he could with Ease the next Day enter Mexico in good Time. In this Part the Causey was about twenty Foot broad, made of Stone and Lime, with some Works on the Surface: In the Middle of the Way upon the same Causey, there was another Town of about two thousand Houses, called Quitlavaca; and because it was founded in the Waters, they called it Venezuela, or little Venice. The Cacique went out with a great Retinue to receive Cortes, and desired he would honour his City that Night with his Presence; this he did so earnestly, and with such an Appearance of Affection, that Cortes judged it necessary to yield to his Entreaties, for fear of disobliging him: Besides that he found his Stay would be of Advantage in order to the making his Observations, more particularly with regard to any Difficulties, which might happen in his Way; for he was jealous of their breaking the Causey, or taking away the Bridges to obstruct his March. From this Place he discovered the largest Part of the Lake, and various Towns and Causeys; the Towers adorn'd by Pinacles, seem'd to swim upon the Waters, with Trees and Gardens out of their proper Element; besides a Multitude of Indians, who were approaching in their Canoes to behold the Spaniards: And much greater was the Number of those, who shew'd themselves on the Battlements of the Houses, and in the most distant Galleries; a Sight extremely beautiful, and a Novelty surprizing beyond Imagination.

The Army was sufficiently accommodated in these Quarters; for here the People entertained their Guests with Civility, and a cheerful Aspect; and their Politeness was a Proof that they liv'd in the Neighbourhood of Motezuma's Court: But the Cacique was not able to refrain from manifesting the little Affection he bore that Emperor, and the same Desire with the rest, to free himself from the intolerable Yoke of his Government: For he encouraged the Soldiers to the Enterprize, which he represented as very easy; and told the Interpreters (as desiring that all should know it) that the Causey from thence to Mexico, was more capacious, and better, then what they had pass'd; that they had nothing to apprehend on the Way, nor from the Towns on both Sides ; that the City of Iztacpalapa (thro' which they were to pass) was peaceably inclin'd, and had Orders to receive, and entertain the Spaniards as Friends : And notwithstanding the Lord of that City was a Relation of Motezuma's, they had no Occasion for Fear on that Score ; for the Prodigies from Heaven, the Answers of his Oracles, and the Accounts he had received of the Spanish Army's Exploits, had render'd him humble and dispirited ; for which Reason they would find him desirous of Peace, and rather disposed to suffer, than provoke. The Cacique spoke Truth, but with some mixture of Passion, and Flattery : And tho' Cortes was sensible of that Defect in his Discourse, yet he published and enlarged it among the Soldiers ; and it must be confessed it came in Season, that those who were not over forward in the Pursuit of this Enterprize, might not be discouraged at the great Variety of wonderful Objects, which they had in View, from whence they might form Apprehensions of the Grandeur of that Court, and the formidable Power of the King : But the Cacique's Intelligence, with the Reflections they made on Motezuma's Perplexity, and his want of Spirit, had such an Effect at this Juncture, that all the Soldiers were transported with Joy where they found Cause of Astonishment ; and their Hopes of Success were rais'd in Proportion to their Admiration of what they saw.

C H A P. X.

The Army marches to Iztacpalapa ; they make a Disposition for their Entry into Mexico. A Description of the Pomp in which MOTEZUMA went to receive the Spaniards.

THE next Morning, a little after Break of Day, they formed themselves upon the same Causey, as well as it would allow, being in that Part wide enough for Eight Horses to march in Front. The Army consisted then of about Four Hundred and Fifty Spaniards, and Six Thousand Indians, Tlascallans, Zempoallans, and other Confederates. They continued their March (without any remarkable Adventure) to the City of Iztacpalapa, where they intended to Halt ; a Place far exceeding the rest, in the Height of its Towers and

Manner of Building: The City consisted of near Ten Thousand Houses, of two and three Story high, Part of which were built upon the Lake, and stretched along the Shore, in a delicious and fruitful Soil. The Lord of this Place went out with a numerous Train to receive the Army; and was assisted on this Occasion by the Princes of Magiscatzingo and Cuyoacan, which were Towns bordering upon the same Lake: They brought their three separate Presents of various Fruits, Fowls, and other Provisions, with some Pieces of Gold, worth near Two Thousand Peso's: They presented themselves together, and made themselves known, by telling each his Name and Dignity, relying on the different Value of their Presents, to explain what could not be so well apprehended from their Discourse. The Entry of the Spaniards into this City was welcom'd with loud Acclamations of the People, whose unruly Joy, on that Occasion, assur'd the most jealous Spirits of their Sincerity: The Lodging of the Spaniards was prepared in the Prince's own Palace, where they were all under Cover; the rest in the Courts and Porches were sufficiently accommodated for one Night, which they had Reason to pass without any Apprehension of Danger. The Palace was large, and well built, with distinct Apartments both above and below; among which were many Chambers, whose Roofs were flat, and of Cedar, and not without Furniture; for some had Cotton Hangings, of various coloured Painting, well proportion'd. There were in Iztacpalapa many Fountains of sweet and wholesome Water, convey'd by several Aqueducts from neighbouring Mountains, thro' a great Number of Gardens, large and well cultivated: Among which there was one far more spacious and beautiful than the rest, which the Cacique had for his own Diversion: To this he carry'd Cortes that Evening, with some of his Captains, and Soldiers; as desirous to omit nothing that might entertain his Guests, and at the same Time gratify his own Pride and Vanity. There he had Fruit-Trees disposed into very large Walks, leaving Room for smaller Plants, and a Parterre with Divisions made of Canes interwoven, and covered with odoriferous Herbs; besides several Squares cultivated with great Industry, and adorned with Variety of Flowers: In the Middle of the Garden was a Pond of fresh Water, encompass'd with a Wall of quadrangular Form, made of Stone and Lime, with Stairs on all Sides to the Bottom: It was so large, that each Side contained Four Hundred Paces; and here Fish of the nicest Relish were bred, and several Sorts of Water-Fowl resorted hither, some known in Europe, and others of beautiful Figure, and extraordinary Feathers: A Work well well worthy of a Prince, and which belonging to a Vassal of Motezuma's, afforded an Idea of the greater Magnificence of his Sovereign. The Night passed very quietly, and the People returned with Pleasure, and a frank open Behaviour to the Entertainment of the Spaniards; but it was observed, they spoke here after another Manner concerning the Affairs of Motezuma, than the rest of his Subjects: For they all praised his Government, and extolled his Grandeur; whether the Honour the Cacique had of belonging to him, had imprinted that Idea on their Minds, or that they were intimidated by the Neighbourhood of the Tyrant.

They had two Leagues of Causey from hence to Mexico, and took the Morning before them: For Cortes was desirous to make his Entry, and pay his Compliments to Motezuma, and to have some Part of the Day left to reconnoitre and fortify his Quarters. He continued his March in the accustomed Order, and leaving on the one Side the City of Magiscatzingo, scituate on the Water, and on the other, that of Cuyocan, upon the Causey, besides a great many Towns, which they saw at a Distance upon the Lake; they discovered as they drew somewhat nearer (and not without Admiration) the great City of Mexico, elevated to a vast Degree above all the rest, and carrying an Air of Dominion in the Pride of her Buildings. They had marched little less than half way, when they were met by more than Four Thousand Nobles and Officers of the City, who came to receive them; and whose Compliments delayed their March a considerable Time, tho' they only paid their Obeysance, and then advanc'd before the Troops towards Mexico. In the March, a little before the City, was a Bulwark of Stone, with two small Castles on the sides, which took up all the Causey; the Gates opened on another Part of the Causey, terminated by a Draw-Bridge, which defended the Entrance of the City with a second Fortification.

As soon as the Nobles who accompanied them had passed to the other side of the Bridge, they made a Lane for the Army to march, falling back on each Side; and then there appeared a very large and spacious Street, with great Houses uniformly built; the Windows and Battlements were full of Spectators, but the Street entirely empty. And they informed Cortes, that it was so order'd, because Motezuma resolv'd to receive him in Person, in order to distinguish him by a particular Mark of Favour: A little after which Cortes saw the first Troop of the Royal Retinue, which consisted of about Two Hundred Noble-men of Motezuma's Family, cloathed in one Livery, with great

Plumes of Feathers, alike in Fashion and Colour. They came in two Files, with remarkable Silence and Composure, bare-footed, without lifting their Eyes from the Ground, in Manner of a Procession. So soon as they approached the Spaniards, they fell back on each Side, in the same Order with the rest; and then there appeared a far off, a larger Company, better dressed, and of greater Dignity; in the midst of which was Motezuma, carried upon the Shoulders of his Favourites, in a Chair of burnish'd Gold, which glittered thro' the various Works of Feathers, placed in handsome Proportion about it; the nice Distribution of which in some measure seem'd to outvie the Cost of the Metal. Four Persons of great Distinction followed his Chair, holding over him a Canopy, made of interwoven green Feathers, so put together, that they form'd a kind of Web, with some Ornaments of Silver: A little before him went three Officers, with golden Rods in their Hands, which they lifted up on high from Time to Time, as a Signal of the King's Approach; that all might prostrate themselves before him, and not presume to look up, which was an Irreverence punished as Sacrilege. Cortes dismounted before he came up with him, and Motezuma at the same Time alighted from his Chair: Some Indians went before spreading Carpets, that his Feet might not touch the Ground, which in their Opinion was unworthy of the Honour. He came forward to the Ceremony with a slow solemn Pace; leaning with his Hands on the Arms of the Princes of Iztacpalapa and Tezeuco, his Cousins, and advanced some Steps to receive Cortes. He was of a good Presence, about Forty Years of Age, of a middle Stature, and a Constitution rather delicate than strong; his Nose was aquiline, and he had a fairer Complexion than the generality of the Indians; his Hair came just below his Ears, his Eyes were lively, his Look majestic and thoughtful. For his Apparel, he wore a Mantle of the finest Cotton, tyed carelessly on his Shoulders, covering the greatest Part of his Body, with the End trailing on the Ground, adorned with different Jewels of Gold, Pearls, and Precious Stones, in such Number that they seem'd rather a Weight than an Ornament. His Crown was a Mitre of light Gold, ending in a Point before; the hinder Part was made rounder: On his Feet he wore Shoes of hammered Gold, whose Straps, studded with the same, bound them to his Feet, and came round part of his Leg, like the Roman military Sandals. Cortes advanc'd with all becoming Hastē; and made a profound Reverence; which Motezuma answer'd, by laying his Hand upon the Ground, and raising it afterwards to his Lips: A new and unheard of Condescension among those Princes, but much more so in Motezuma, who would scarcely bend his Neck to his Gods, and affected an Excess of Pride, which it may be he knew not how to distinguish it from Majesty. These Demonstrations of Respect, and his going out in Person to receive Cortes, occasion'd great Admiration among the Indians, and added to their Esteem of the Spaniards; for they could not be perswaded, but that the King had well considered what he did, submitting their own Reason to his, with an implicit Resignation. Cortes had put upon his Coat of Maile, a Chain of Glass, curiously set together, in imitation of Diamonds and Emeralds, which he had reserved as a Present for the first Audience; and being close to Motezuma, he put it on his Shoulder: But the two Princes who supported him, would have stopped Cortes, with some Concern letting him understand, that it was not lawful to approach so near the Person of the King: But he reprimanded them, and was so well pleased with the Present, that he placed it among his Jewels, as a Thing of inestimable Value; and to return his Acknowledgment in a Manner remarkably generous, while the rest of the Officers came up to be presented, he ordered a Collar to be brought, the richest Piece he had among his Jewels; it was of Crimson Shells, extremely valued in that Country, set together with such Art, that at every one of them hung four Crabs of Gold, very much to the Life; and he himself put it on Cortes's Neck; a Favour which occasioned a second Wonder among the Mexicans. The Speech of Cortes was short, and fitted to the Occasion: Motezuma's Answer was likewise in few Words, discreet and decent: He immediately commanded one of the two Princes who went by his Side, to conduct and accompany Hernan Cortes to his Lodging; and leaning on the other, went to his Chair, and returned to his Palace with the same Pomp and Gravity.

The Entry of the Spaniards into Mexico was on the Eighth of Nov. in the Year 1519. the Day of the four Crowned Martyrs. The Lodging provided for them was one of the Royal Houses, built by Axayaca the Father of Motezuma: In Largeness it vied with the principal Palaces of Emperors, and had the Appearance of a Fortrefs, thick Stone Walls, and some Towers upon the Flanks, which made the Defence of it easy: It contained all the Army, and the first Care of Cortes was to view every Part of it for the better Distribution of his Guards, and Lodgment of his Artillery, and to secure his Quarters: Some Chambers designed for the superior Officers were furnish'd with Cotton Hangings of various Colours, which was the chief Part of their Manufacture,

facture, more or less fine: The Chairs were of Wood, all of one Piece: The Bedsteads had Curtains like Pavilions; but the Bottoms of the Beds were of Palm-Mats, and the Bolsters of the same rolled up. The greatest Princes there had no better Beds, neither did the People much consult their Ease; for living according to the Rules of Nature, they were content with what was necessary: And we know not whether Ignorance of Superfluity in those Barbarians may not be esteem'd a Happiness.

C H A P. XI.

MOTEZUMA comes the same Day in the Evening to visit CORTES at his Lodging; the Speech he made before he heard the Embassy: And the Answer of CORTES.

IT was but little past Mid-day when the Spaniards enter'd the House appointed for their Lodging, where they found a splendid Banquet prepar'd for Cortes, and the Captains of his Army; and great Abundance of Provisions less delicate for the Soldiers, with many Indian Servants, who serv'd them with Meat and Drink, in profound Silence and exact Order. In the Evening came Motezuma with the same Pomp and Attendance as before; to visit Cortes; of which being advertis'd, he went out to receive him in the principal Square of the House, with all the Respect due for such a Favour. He accompanied him as far as the Door of his Appartment, where he made him a profound Reverence: Motezuma pass'd by him, and took his Seat with an Air of Negligence and Majesty: He presently commanded a Chair to be brought for Cortes; and made a Signal to the Cavaliers who attended him, to retire to the Wall. Cortes did the same to his Officers: The Interpreters came, and when Cortes was preparing to begin his Speech, Motezuma stop'd him, and signified, that he had somewhat to say before he gave him Audience; and Authors report, that he spoke in the following Manner.

Motezuma's

Motezuma's Discourse to Hernan Cortes.

' BEfore you deliver the Embassy of the Great Prince who ' sent you, illustrious Captain, and valiant Stranger,
 ' both You and I must pass by, and bury in Oblivion,
 ' what Fame hath published of our Persons and Conduct; a' busing our Ears with idle Rumours, which prepossessus against
 ' Truth, and render her obscure by the Impressions of Flat' tery, or Reproach. In some Places you have been informed,
 ' That I am one of the immortal Gods; my Power and my
 ' Person, are exalted to the Heavens: In others they tell you, ' that the Business of Fortune is to enrich me; that the Walls and
 ' Coverings of my Palace are all Gold, and that the Earth
 ' groans beneath the Weight of my Treasure: You have heard,
 ' that I am a Tyrant, Cruel, and Proud; abhorring Justice, and ' a Stranger to Mercy; but both the one and the other have ' equally impos'd upon you by their Exaggerations: And ' that you may not imagine me a God, but be sensible of the ' Folly of those who suppose me to be so, this Part of my ' Body (said he, uncovering his Arm) will undeceive you;
 ' and prove that you talk to a Mortal, of the same Species
 ' with the rest of Men; but more noble, and more powerful.
 ' My Riches, I deny not, are great; but the Account of my ' Vassals makes them much greater than they are. This ' House, wherein you lodge, is one of my Palaces: Behold
 ' the Walls made of Stone and Lime, ordinary Materials,
 ' which owe their Value to Art: Now from both these Ac' counts, imagine how likely it is that my Tyrannies have been
 ' magnified in the same Manner. Suspend your Judgment
 ' at least, till you enter into my Reasons; and lay no Stress
 ' on the Accusations brought against me by my rebellious Sub' jects, till you have first inform'd your self, whether that which ' they call Oppression be not Chastisement; and if they can
 ' censure my Severity without having deserv'd it.

' After the same Manner have we received Information of ' your Nature and Actions: Some have told me, you are ' Gods; that the wild Beasts obey you; that you grasp the ' Thunder in your Hands, and command the Elements:
 ' Others have reported that you are wicked, revengeful, proud,
 ' Slaves to your Vices, and transported with an insatiable
 ' Thirst of the Gold which our Country produces. But now
 ' I see you are of the same Composition and Form with the ' rest of Men; tho' you are distinguished from us by some ' Accidents, which the Difference of Countries occasions among ' Mortals. These Beasts which obey you, I find are large

 ' Deer, which you have tamed, and bred up in such imperfect
 ' Knowledge, as may be attain'd to by the Instinct of ' Animals. Your Arms, which resemble Lightning, I ' conceive to be Barrels of unknown Metal; whose Effect
 ' like that of our Sarbacans, proceeds from Air compress'd,
 ' which strives for a Vent, and forces its Way thro' all
 ' Impediments; The Fire, which your Barrels discharge
 ' with greater Noise, is some Secret more than natural of ' that Science, which our Magicians understand. For the ' rest, which has been related of your Proceedings, I find like' wise, according to the Observation of my Embassadors and ' Servants, that you are Courteous, and Religious; that your ' Resentments are founded on Reason: Hardships you bear
 ' chearfully; and among your other Virtues, discover Libera' lity, which rarely accompanies a covetous Mind. So that we ' must on both Sides forget all past Reports, and be thankful
 ' to our Eyes for undeceiving our Imaginations: Which taking for ' granted, I would have you understand, before you begin ' your Discourse, that we are not ignorant, or stand in need of ' your Persuasions, to believe, that the Great Prince you obey,
 ' is descended from our ancient Quezalcoal, Lord of the Seven
 ' Caves of the Navatlaques, and lawful King of those Seven Na' tions, which gave Beginning to the Mexican Empire. By ' one of his Prophecies, which we reverence as an infallible
 ' Truth, and by a Tradition of many Ages, preserved in our ' Annals, we know, that he departed from these Countries to ' conquer new Regions in the East; leaving a Promise, that ' in Process of Time, his Descendants should return to model
 ' our Laws, and amend our Government. And, because the ' Marks you carry agree with this Prophecy, and the Prince of ' the East; who sends you, manifests in your very Actions, the ' Greatness of so illustrious a Progenitor; we have already de' termined, that all Things shall be done for his Honour,
 ' to the utmost of our Ability; of which I have thought fit to ' advertise you, that without any Constraint you may declare
 ' what you have to propose, and attribute to so noble a Cause, this
 ' Excess of my Goodness.' Motezuma in this manner ended the Discourse, which he had calculated to prepossess the Spa- niards with an Opinion of his Integrity, and which he deliver'd in a Style of Majesty: The Substance of it gave sufficient

sufficient Ground to Cortes (without disputing the Illusions which he found so universally establish'd in the Minds of the Indians) to answer in these or the like Terms.

S I R,

‘ After rendering Thanks for the extream Goodness with ‘ which you condescend to hearken to our Embassy,
 ‘ and the superiour Knowledge which you employ in our Fa‘ vour, by contemning (to our great Advantage) the Misre‘ presentations of common Fame, I must likewise acquaint ‘ you, that your Embassadors have been received by us with ‘ that Respect and Veneration which is agreeable to your ‘ Greatness. Much we have heard concerning you in these ‘ Countries, under your own Dominion ; some vilifying your ‘ Actions, others placing you among the Gods : But this Way ‘ of enlarging is prejudicial to the Truth ; for as the Voice of ‘ Man is the Trumpet of Fame, so is it influenc’d by his Pas‘ sions ; and these either do not understand Things as they ‘ are, or do not relate them as they are understood. The Spa- ‘ niards, Sir, have that penetrating View, which discovers the ‘ different Colours of Discourse, and in them the Deceit of the ‘ Heart. We have given no Credit either to your Rebels, or ‘ Flatterers : We are come into your Presence, with certain As‘ surance of your being a great Prince, and a Friend to Reason, ‘ without any necessity of being convinc’d by our Senses that ‘ you are mortal. We Spaniards also are Mortal, but more Va‘ liant, and of greater Understanding than your Vassals, born in ‘ a Climate of more powerful Influences than yours : The Beasts
 ‘ which obey us, are not like your Deer, but of a Kind more ‘ fierce and generous ; Brutes inclined to War, and which know ‘ how to aspire with a sort of Ambition, to the Glory of their ‘ Masters. Our Fire-Arms are the Effect of humane Industry, ‘ without owing any Part of their Production to the Skill ‘ of Magicians ; a Science abominable among us, and ‘ more contemned, than Ignorance itself. I thought it my ‘ Duty to establish these Principles, that I might the better com‘ ply with the Commands you have laid upon me. I am now
 ‘ to acquaint you, with all due Reverence to your Majesty, ‘ that I come as Embassador from the most powerful Mo‘ narch the Sun shines on from his first Rising : He desires to ‘ be your Friend, and Confederate, not by Virtue of those ‘ ancient Rights, which you have declared, nor for any other ‘ Reason,

Reason, than to open a Communication between the two Monarchies, that by this Means he may have the Pleasure to free you from your Errors. And tho' he might (according to the Tradition of your own Histories) pretend to be more absolute in these Dominions, he only desires to make use of his Authority, to gain your Credit of Things entirely to your own Advantage; and to inform you, Sir, and you Mexicans, who hear me, that you live in Error, with Regard to the Religion you profess; adoring insensible Pieces of Wood, the Work of your own Hands and Fancies: Forasmuch as there is but one true God, the eternal Cause of all Things, without Beginning or Ending; whose infinite Power created out of Nothing the wonderful Fabrick of the Heavens, the Sun which enlightens us, the Earth which sustains us, and the first Man from whom we all proceed, and whom we are therefore all under equal Obligation to acknowledge and adore. This very Obligation is imprinted in your Souls, of whose Immortality you are not ignorant; but which nevertheless you debase and destroy, by paying Adoration to Devils, unclean Spirits, Creatures of the same God, who for Ingratitude and Rebellion are cast into Subterranean Fires, of which you have some imperfect Image in your Volcanos.
 These, who thro' their Envy and Wickedness, are mortal Enemies to Mankind, endeavour your Perdition, by causing themselves to be adored in your abominable Idols: Theirs is the Voice you sometimes hear in the Answers of your Oracles; theirs the Illusions which impose on your Reason the Errors of Imagination. I am sensible, Sir, that such high Misteries are not to be explain'd at this present Juncture:
 But the King, whose ancient Superiority you acknowledge, exhorts you to hear me on this Subject with an unprejudiced Mind, that you may taste of that Repose which your Spirit will find in Truth, and be sensible how often you have resisted natural Reason, which has afforded you Light sufficient to discover your Errors. This is the first Thing which the King my Master desires of your Majesty, and the chief Proposal I have to make to you, as the most effectual Means to establish by a lasting Amity the Confederacy of both Crowns on the solid Foundation of Religion, which uniting us in Principles, may introduce and fix a voluntary Friendship in our Minds.' Thus did Hernan Cortes endeavour to maintain, in Motezuma's Belief, the Reputation of his Forces, without departing from the Truth; making a dext'rous Use of the Original they had bestow'd on his King; and not contradicting

dicting what they imagin'd, that he might give the greater Authority to his Embassy. But Motezuma heard the Point of Religion without any Mark of Conviction; continuing superstitiously obstinate in his Pagan Errors: And rising from his Seat, 'I do accept, (said he) with all Acknowledgment, the Confederacy and Friendship you propose from the great Descendant of Quezalcoal; but all Gods are good, and yours may be what you say, without Offence to mine. Repose your selves now, you are in your own House, where you shall be serv'd with all the Regard that is due to your Valour, and to the great Prince who sends you.' He then immediately gave Orders for some Indians attending without to enter, and before he went away, presented Hernan Cortes with several Pieces of Gold, a Quantity of Cotton Cloaths, and several Curiosities of Feathers; a considerable Gift both for the Value and Fashion: He distributed at the same Time some Jewels and Things of the like Kind among the Spaniards, who were present, without seeming to think he laid them under any Obligation, and doing all with a cheerful Generosity: He regarded Cortes and his Soldiers with a sort of Satisfaction, in which one might perceive, the Disquiet he had lain under before; in the same manner as a Man shews how far his Fears have prevail'd over him, by the Joy he discovers in being deliver'd from them.

C H A P. XII.

CORTES visits MOTEZUMA in his Palace; the Greatness and Furniture of it are described: An Account of what passed in that Conference, and in others which they had afterwards upon the Subject of Religion.

THE following Day Hernan Cortes desired an Audience, which was granted with such readiness, that the same Persons who were to accompany him, returned with the Answer: These were particularly appointed to attend Embassadors, as Masters of the Ceremonies of that Country. The General put on a gay Habit, without quitting his Arms (for he had a mind to be introduced in his Military Dress)

Dress) and carried with him the Captains Pedro de Alvarado, Gonzalo de Sandoval, Juan Velasquez de Leon, and Diego de Ordaz; with six or seven favourite Soldiers; among whom was Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who had already begun to make Observations, in order to compile a History.

The Streets were all filled with an innumerable Concourse of People, who crowded to behold the Spaniards, but yet without hindering their Passage; and among their Compliments and Acclamations, the Word Tenle was often distinguished, which in their Language signifies a God: A Word, the Importance whereof was understood; and which had no ill Sound in the Ears of those who founded part of their Courage on the Respect that was paid them.

At a considerable Distance appeared the Palace of Moteczuma, which sufficiently shewed the great Magnificence of their Kings: The Pile was so very large, that it opened with Thirty Gates, to as many different Streets: The principal Front took up one whole Side of a very spacious Parade, and was of Jasper, black, red, and white, well polished and skilfully placed: Over the Gate, in a large Shield, were seen the Arms of Moteczuma, a Griffin, half Eagle, and half Lion, with the Wings extended for Flight, and a Tyger in his Talons. Some maintain, that this Griffin was an Eagle, because there were no Griffins in that Country, as if there were Reason to believe, that other Parts of the World produc'd them; whereas Naturalists place them in the Number of fabulous Birds; and we shall rather choose to suppose these sort of Monsters, the Production of Fancy, by a Liberty allowed to Poets and Painters. As they approached the principal Gate, the Officers of Moteczuma, who accompanied Cortes, walked up to one Side of it; and then retiring with a Shew of some Mystery in their Motions, formed a Semi-circle, that they might enter the Gate by two and two: This Ceremony argued Respect; for they thought it an Irreverence to enter the Royal Palace in a Crowd; and by their stepping back, they showed how much they feared to tread so sacred a Place. After having passed three Squares, built and adorn'd in the same manner as the Front of the Palace, they came to Moteczuma's Apartment, where they equally admired the Largeness of the Rooms, and the Furniture: The Floors were covered with Mats of different Work; the Walls with Hangings of Cotton Cloth, and Furrs of Rabbits interwoven; and the innermost Room with Hangings of Feathers, both the one and the other beautified with lively Colours and various Figures. The Roofs were of Cypress, Cedar, and other odoriferous Woods, with different different Foliages and Relievos ; and in this Building it was remarkable, that without having found the Use of Nails, they form'd large Ceilings, fixing the Timber-Work and Planks in such manner, as to make them sustain one another. In each of these spacious Rooms, there was a great Number of Officers of different Rank, who kept the Entrance according to their Quality and Office : And at the Door of the Anti-Chamber waited the Nobility and Magistrates, who received Cortes with much Civility ; but made him stop till they had taken off their Shoes, and the costly Cloaths with which they were adorned, and put on others of less Finery : For it was thought a great Indecency among these People, to appear in their richest Habits before the King. These Fashions were observed by the Spaniards. All they saw appeared new to them ; the Greatness of the Palace, the Ceremonies, the Attendance, and even the profound Silence of so numerous a Train of Domesticks, concurr'd to imprint a Respect. Motezuma was standing with all his Ensigns of Royalty about him, and advanced some Steps to receive Cortes ; who approaching with a low Bow, he laid his Arms upon his Shoulders, and saluted the rest of the Spaniards who waited on him with an obliging Look : Then seating himself, he commanded Cortes to sit, and all those who came with him, without suffering any Reply. The Visit was long, and the Conversation familiar. The Emperor asked Cortes several Questions concerning the Nature and Politics of the Eastern Countries : Sometimes approving what he thought right ; and letting him see, that where he doubted he knew how to support his Objections by proper Arguments. Then he touched upon the Dependancy and Obligations of the Mexicans to the Descendant of their first King : And expressed his particular Satisfaction, that the Prophecy concerning the Strangers, who had been promised to his Ancestors so many Ages past, was compleated in his Time : And if he spoke not with Sincerity, he understood very well how to hide his Thoughts. And tho' this was a Notion, vain and despicable in its Original and Circumstances, yet it was of great Importance to the Spaniards upon this Occasion ; for by the help of it they found the Way open for their Entrance. And thus, many times from Things trivial in their Beginning, proceed Consequences of the greatest Importance. Then Hernán Cortes dextrously led him to the Topic of Religion ; enlarging (among other Things he told him of his Country) upon the Rites and Customs of the Christians, to the end that the Vices and Abominations of his Idolatry might appear the more detestable by such a Contrast. He made use of this Opportunity, to exclaim against Sacrifices of humane Blood, and to shew how horrible and contrary to Nature it was, to eat the Men they sacrificed: A brutish Custom prevailing in this Court, proportionably to the vast Number of Sacrifices which aggravated the Crime of these infamous Repasts!

This Conference was not altogether useless, for Moteczuma yielding in some degree to the Force of Reason, banished from his Table all Dishes of Humane Flesh; but did not dare all at once to forbid his Subjects the use of it: Nor was he convinced as to the Point of Sacrifices: Saying, It was no Cruelty to offer to his Gods, Prisoners of War, already condemn'd to dye; nor did he think it reasonable to extend the Denomination of Neighbour to our very Enemies. He gave but small Hopes of his Conversion; tho' Hernan Cortes, and Father Bartholomè de Olmedo, endeavour'd several Times to lead him into the Way of Truth. He had Capacity enough to comprehend some Advantages of the Catholick Religion, and not entirely to overlook the Abuses of his own; but he presently returned to his old Theme, That his Gods were good in that Country, as the Christian God was in theirs: And he was oblig'd to put a Force on himself to conceal his Anger, when the Argument was press'd too hard against him. He was much disturbed within himself at these Conferences; for on the one hand he endeavour'd to oblige the Spaniards, by a Complaisance which hardly became his Dignity; and on the other was press'd by a necessary Affectation of Religion, which had acquired, and, as he believed, preserv'd his Crown: This made him apprehend the Contempt of his Vassals, in case they should find him less zealous than formerly for the Worship of his Gods: A miserable Policy, and proper to Tyrants; to command with Pride, and reflect with a slavish Fear!

He made such an Ostentation of his Obstinacy, that in very few Days, as he took Hernan Cortes and Father Bartholomè, with some Captains and particular Soldiers along with him, to see the Grandeur of his Court, he resolv'd, upon a Principle of Vanity, to shew them the greater Magnificence of his Temples. He commanded them to stop a little at the Entrance, and went forward himself to consult the Priests, whether it were lawful for him to bring into the Presence of his Gods, those who refus'd to adore them? It was concluded, that they might enter; but that he should first admonish them, to behave themselves with Respect: And two or three of the most ancient Priests went out with the Permission and the Request. Immediately all the Gates of this spacious Edifice were opened; and Motezuma took upon himself to explain all the secret Places of Worship, the Use of the Vessels, and other Instruments and Images of the Temple, with so much Ceremony and Reverence, that the Spaniards could not refrain from Laughter, which he did not seem to take Notice of; but turned and looked upon them, as desiring to keep them within Bounds. Here Hernan Cortes suffering himself to be transported with the Zeal which burnt within his Breast, addressed himself to Motezuma, and said, Permit me, Sir, to fix the Cross of Christ before these Images of the Devil, and you shall see whether they deserve Adoration or Contempt. At the hearing of this Proposition, the Priests grew enraged, and Motezuma found himself in the greatest Confusion and Perplexity; wanting Patience to bear it, and Resolution to shew his Displeasure: But recollecting himself, and endeavouring to hide his Resentments; You might at least (said he to the Spaniards) have shewed this Place the Respect you owe to my Person. On which he immediately went out of the Temple, that they might do the same; but stop'd on the Threshold, and added, with somewhat more of Calmness, You may return to your House, my Friends, for I shall remain here to ask Pardon of my Gods, for having suffered you to proceed thus far. In this Manner he disengag'd himself from the Perplexity he was in, with few Words, but worthy of Regard; as informing them of his Resolution, and how hard a Task he found it to command his Temper.

From this, and other Experiments of the same Kind, Cortes took a Resolution (with the Advice of Father Bartholomè de Olmedo, and the Licentiate Juan Diaz) not to talk any more then on the Subject of Religion, which only seemed to provoke and harden the Heart of Motezuma; but at the same Time, they obtained his Leave, to worship God in Public; and he himself sent his Master-Builders to erect a Chapel at his own Expence, according to the Direction of Cortes. So much did he desire to be left in the quiet Possession of his Errors! The Spaniards presently cleared one of the principal Rooms of the Palace: they white-wash'd it, and raised an Altar; and in the Front, upon Steps richly adorned, they placed the Image of our Lady; and fixing a large Cross near the Gate, formed a very decent Chappel, where they celebrated Mass every Day, and recited their Rosary, with other Acts of Piety and Devotion: Motezuma with his Princes and Ministers were often present; and praised the Humanity of the Christian Sacrifice, without discovering the Barbarity and Abomination of their own. A People blind, and superstitious; who tho' sensible of their Errors, yet suffered Custom to get the better of their Reason!

But

But before we relate what happened to the Spaniards in this Court, 'tis proper to give a Description of Mexico, the Magnificence of its Buildings, its Form of Government and Policy, and make some other Observations requisite for the right conceiving and understanding the Events themselves. For tho' such Descriptions interrupt the Narration, they are necessary to the History, as not being foreign to the Argument, nor having any of those Blemishes which make a Digression vicious.

C H A P. XIII.

A Description of the City of Mexico ; the Temperateness of its Climate ; its Scituation ; the Market of Tlatelulco, and the great Temple dedicated to the God of War.

THE great City of Mexico, which was anciently known by the Name of Tenuchtitlan, or some other of a like Sound (a Question canvas'd by Authors to very little Purpose) at this Time contained Sixty thousand Families, and was divided into two Parts; of which one was called Tlatelulco, the Habitation of the meaner Sort of People: The other Mexico, the Residence of the Court and Nobility, and which therefore gave its Name to the whole.

It was scituated in a spacious Plain, surrounded with very high Rocks and Mountains; by whose Streams and Rivulets, rowling into the Valley, were formed several Lakes, and two of a larger Size in the deepest Part, where the Mexicans had above fifty Towns. This little Sea was about thirty Leagues in Circumference: And the two Lakes which composed it, had a Communication thro' a Wall of Stone which divided them; some Openings being left, with Wooden Bridges over them, and Sluices on each Side to supply the lower Lake, when there was Occasion to make good the want of Water in one with the Redundance of the other. The uppermost was clear sweet Water, where they had some sorts of Fish, of very agreeable Taste: The lower Lake was salt like the Sea; not that the Rivulets that fed it were of different Quality, but it proceeded from the natural Quality of the Soil which receiv'd them, and which in this Part is fat and nitrous, but very useful for the making of Salt, all along the Borders of the Lake, where the Sun purified and refined the Scum that was left by the beating of the Waves.

. proceeded

In the middle almost of this salt Water Lake stood the City of Mexico, in 19 Deg. and 13 Min. North Lat. within the Torrid Zone, by the ancient Philosophers imagined uninhabitable, which may instruct us by Experience, how little we can rely on humane Wisdom when the Reasonings of the Understanding are not supported by the Evidence of the Senses. The Climate was mild and healthy, with seasonable Vicissitudes of Heat and Cold: And the Moisture, which might have prov'd unwholsome by the natural Scituation of the Place, was corrected by the Favour of the Winds, and qualified by the Benefit of the Sun.

This great City had most beautiful Prospects in the midst of the Waters, and was joyned to the Land by its Dykes, or principal Causeys; a sumptuous Work, of no less Ornament than Use: One was to the South two Leagues long (by which the Spaniards made their Entrance) another one League long, looking to the North, and the Third somewhat less, to the West. The Streets were all large and straight, as if they were drawn by a Line: Some were of Water, with Bridges, for the Communication of the Inhabitants: Others were of Earth alone, rais'd by Art; and others again were compos'd of Earth and Water, the Earth on each Side for the People to pass on Foot, and Canals in the Middle for the Canoes and Barks of different Bulk, which served for Commerce, and other Conveniencies about the City, and the Number whereof was almost incredible: Some said above Fifty thousand, without counting little Vessels, which were called Acales, made of the Trunk of a Tree, and capable of holding but one Man.

The publick Buildings and Houses of the Nobility, which made up the greatest Part of the City, were of Stone, and well built: The Houses of the common Sort, low, and unequal; but both the one and the other so laid out, that they formed several Parades, where they expos'd their Merchandize.

Among the rest, that of Tlatelulco was of prodigious Extent and Resort, on the account of its Fairs, held there some certain Days of the Year, and frequented by all the Merchants and Traders of the whole Kingdom, with their most valuable Fruits and Manufactures: And they flock'd hither in such mighty Numbers, that tho' this Square was (according to Antonio de de Herera) one of the largest in the World, it was nevertheless filled with Tents, placed in Ranks, and so near together, that there was scarce Room left for the Buyers to pass. All knew their Posts, and secured their Shops with portable Frames, covered with coarse Cotton Cloth, which were Proof both against the Sun and Rain. The Spanish Writers make no End of reflecting on the Order, Variety, and Riches of those Fairs: There were Rows of Silversmiths, who sold Jewels, and Chains of extraordinary Fashion; several Figures of Beasts, in Gold and Silver, wrought with so much Art, as rais'd the Wonder of our Artificers: And particularly, some Skillets with moving Handles that were so cast, and other Pieces of the same Kind, with Moldings and Relievos, without any Signs of a Hammer or Graver. There were also Rows of Painters, with fine Figures and Landskips made of Feathers, so curiously placed, as to give both Colour and Life to the Piece; and in this Kind there were extraordinary Proofs, both of the Patience and Skill of the Workman. They brought to this Fair all the different Sorts of Cloths made throughout this vast Empire, of Cotton and Rabbit Furr, which the Women of this Country (Enemies to Idleness) spun extremely fine, being very dextrous in this Manufacture. They had Drinking-Cups exquisitely made of the finest Earth, different in Colour, and even in Smell: And of this Kind they had all Sorts of Vessels necessary, either for the Service or Ornament of a House: For they us'd no Vessels either of Silver or Gold, which were only seen at the Royal Table, and that on extraordinary Days. This Fair likewise afforded in the same Order and Plenty, all Sorts of Fruit, Flesh, and Fish; and in a Word every Thing which could contribute to the Pleasures or supply the Necessities of Life.

The Way of Buying and Selling was by bartering one Thing for another: And every one parted with what he had too much of, for what he wanted; and Maiz or Coco, served as Money for Things of small Value. They did not know what belonged to Weight; but they had different Measures, with which they distinguished Quantity: And they had their Numbers and Characters, by which they adjusted the Prices of Goods, according to the Taxes laid upon them.

They had a House appointed for the Judges of Commerce, before whose Tribunal were decided all Differences between the Merchants: There were other inferior Officers who went about the Fair, to prevent Frauds in Contracts; and made their Report to the principal Tribunal, of all Irregularities of that Sort, which deserv'd any kind of Punishment. The Spaniards were amazed (and with Reason) upon the first Sight of this Fair, at its Abundance, and Variety, with the good Order, and Peace that was preserv'd in so vast a Multitude. A Spectacle worthy of Admiration; as it discovered at one View, the Grandeur and good Government of this Empire.

The Temples (if it be lawful to give them that Name) raised their stately Heads above the rest of their Buildings: And the largest where the chief of those unclean Priests resided, was dedicated to the Idol Vitzliputzli, which signified the God of War, and was held to be the supreme of all their Deities: By the Supremacy of this God, it may be judged, how much they esteem'd the Military Art. The Spanish Soldiers called this Idol, Huchilobos by a corrupt Pronunciation: And so Bernal Diaz del Castillo writes it; making the same Slip with his Pen, as they did with their Tongues. Our Authors very much vary in the Description of this magnificent Edifice. Antonio de Herrera follows too closely Francisco Lopez de Gomara: Those who saw it at this Time had other Things to mind; and the rest drew the Plan of it according to their Fancies. We shall follow Father Joseph de Aosta, and other Authors, who were more exact and better inform'd.

The first Part of the Building was a great Square, with a Wall of hewn Stone, wrought on the outside with various Knots of Serpents inter-twisted, which gave a Horror to the Portico, and were not improperly plac'd there. At a little Distance from the principal Gate was a Place of Worship, not less terrible: It was built of Stone with thirty Steps of the same, which went up to the Top, where was a kind of long flat Roof, and a great many Trunks of well grown Trees, fixed in it, in a Row, with Holes bored in them at equal Distances; and thro' which, from one Tree to another, passed several Bars run thro' the Heads of Men who had been sacrificed; of whose Number (which cannot be repeated without Horrour) the Priests of the Temple took exact Account, placing others in the Room of those which had been wasted by Time. A lamentable Trophy, in which the Enemy of Mankind display'd his Raucour; and which these Barbarians always had in View, without the least Remorse! For Inhumanity put on the Mask of Devotion, and Custom had render'd Death in all its Terrors familiar to their Eyes.

The four Sides of the Square had as many Gates opening to the four Winds. Over each of these Gates were four Statues of Stone, which seem'd to point the Way, as if they were defirous to send back such as approach'd with an ill Disposition of Mind. These were presum'd to be Threshold-Gods, because they had some Reverences paid them at the Entrance. Close to the Inside of the Wall, were the Habitations of the Priests, and of those who, under them, attended the Service of the Temple, with some Offices, which all together took up the whole Circumference, without retrenching so much from that vast Square, but that Eight or Ten Thousand Persons had sufficient Room to dance in upon their solemn Festivals.

In the Centre of this Square stood a Pile of Stone, which in the open Air exalted its lofty Head, overlooking all the Towers of the City, gradually diminishing till it form'd a half Pyramid; Three of its Sides were smooth, the Fourth had Stairs wrought in the Stone; a sumptuous Building, and extremely well proportioned: It was so high that the Stair-Case contain'd a Hundred and Twenty Steps, and of so large a Compass, that on the Top it terminated in a Flat, Forty Foot square: The Pavement was beautifully laid with Jasper Stones of all Colours: The Rails which went round in nature of a Balustrade, were of a Serpentine Form, and both Sides cover'd with Stones resembling Jett, plac'd in good Order, and join'd with white and red Cement, which was a very great Ornament to the Building.

Upon the two Sides of the Rails, where the Stairs ended, were two Marble Statues, which supported, in a Manner which admirably well express'd the straining of the Arms, Two huge Candlesticks of an extraordinary Make. A little farther was a green Stone, Five Spans high from the Ground, which terminated in an Angle, and whereon they extended on his Back the miserable Victim they were about to Sacrifice, and open'd his Breast to take out his Heart. Above this Stone, fronting the Stair-Case, stood a Chappel of excellent Workmanship and Materials, cover'd with a Roof of precious Timber. Here the Idol was plac'd on a high Altar, behind Curtains: It was of Humane Figure, sitting in a Chair which had some Resemblance of a Throne, sustain'd by a blue Globe, which they call'd Heaven, from the Sides whereof came four Rods, with their Ends resembling the Heads of Serpents, which the Priests plac'd upon their Shoulders when they expos'd their Idol to publick View. It had on its Head a Helm compos'd of Plumes of various Colours, in Form of a Bird, with a Bill and Crest of burnish'd Gold: Its Countenance was severe and horrible, and still more deform'd with Two blue Bands, which bound its Forehead and its Nose. In the right Hand it held a curling Serpent, which serv'd for a Staff, and in the Left Four Arrows, which they venerated as a Present from Heaven ; and a Shield with Five white Plumes plac'd in the Form of a Cross: And concerning these Ornaments, these Ensigns and Colours, they related many remarkable Extravagances, with a Seriousness deserving to be pitied.

On the left Hand of this Chappel was another of the same Make and Bigness, with an Idol called Tlaloch, in every Respect resembling his Companion. They were esteem'd Brothers, and Friends to such a Degree, that they divided between them the Patronage of War, equal in Power, and unanimous in Inclination : For which Reason they address'd them both with the same Prayers, the same Sacrifices, and the same Thanksgivings.

The Ornaments of both Chappels were of inestimable Value ; the Walls were hung, and the Altars cover'd with Jewels and Precious Stones, plac'd on Feathers of various Colours : And they had Eight Temples in the City of almost the same Architecture, and of equal Wealth : Those of a smaller Size amounted to Two Thousand, and were dedicated to as many Idols, of different Names, Forms, and Attributes. There was scarce a Street without its Tutelar Deity ; nor was there any Calamity incident to Nature without its Altar, to which they might have Recourse for a Remedy. In a Word, their Gods were deriv'd from their Fears ; nor did they reflect how they lessen'd the Power of some, by what they attributed to others. Thus did the Devil continually enlarge his Dominion, and exercise a most deplorable Tyranny over Rational Creatures, in the Possession of which he remain'd for so many Ages, by the incomprehensible Permission of the most High.

C H A P. XIV.

Of the different Pleasure-Houses which MOTEZUMA had for his Recreation: His Armouries, Gardens, and Country Retirements; with other remarkable Buildings, both within and without the City.

BESIDES the principal Palace, before describ'd, where Motezuma kept his Court, and where, as we have already observ'd, the Spaniards were entertain'd, this Emperor had several Houses of Pleasure which adorn'd the City, and display'd his Grandeur. In one of them, a magnificent Structure, with great Galleries, supported by Pillars of Jasper, he had all sorts of Birds which New-Spain produc'd of any Value, either for their Feathers, or Singing; in which Diversity there were some very extraordinary, and till then unknown to Europeans. The Sea-Fowl were preserv'd in Salt Water Pools, and those which were bred in Rivers and Lakes, in others of Fresh Water. It is said they had Birds of Five or Six Colours, which they stripp'd of their Feathers in the proper Season, letting them live, that their Owners might again reap the Advantage of the new ones when grown. These were a Merchandize of great Value among the Mexicans; for they work'd them in their Cloaths, in Pictures, and in all their Ornaments. These Birds were in such Numbers, and the Care of preserving them was so great, that it gave Employment to above Three Hundred Men, skilful in the Knowledge of their Diseases, and oblig'd to supply them with such Food as they us'd to eat when they were at Liberty.

At a little Distance from this House, Motezuma had another of greater Extent and Variety, with Apartments capable of receiving himself and his whole Court. There his Huntsmen resided, and there the Birds of Prey were kept; some in Cages neat and well made; and these were only to please the Eye: He had others on Perches, that were obedient to the Jesses, and tam'd for the Diversion of Hawking, for which Sport they have Birds of an excellent Kind in that Country, like our Hawks, and no way inferior to them for their Docility in returning to their Lure, or for the Vigour with which they house upon their Prey. Among their Birds in Cages were some so extremely fierce and large, that they appeared to be Monsters; and particularly the Royal Eagles, of an extraordinary Size, and prodigious Voracity. An Author reports, that one of these Eagles would devour a Sheep at a Meal: He is oblig'd to me, that I do not vouch him by Name for a Story which in my Opinion he swallow'd with too little Difficulty.

In the second Square of the same House were the Wild Beasts, which were either Presents to Motezuma, or taken by his Hunters, in very strong Cages of Timber, rang'd in good Order and under Cover: Lions, Tygers, Bears, and all others of the savage Kind which New-Spain produc'd; among which, the greatest Rarity was the Mexican Bull; a wonderful Composition of divers Animals: It has crooked Shoulders, with a Bunch on its Back like a Camel; its Flanks dry, its Tail large, and its Neck cover'd with Hair like a Lion: It is cloven footed, its Head armed like that of a Bull, which it resembles in Fierceness, with no less Strength and Agility. This Amphitheatre seem'd to the Spaniards worthy of a great Prince; it being a Custom establish'd from all Antiquity, by the Number of Wild Beasts any Prince had in his Possession, to make an Estimate of the Grandeur of the Possessor.

In another Part of this Palace, say some of our Spanish Writers, they daily fed a horrible Multitude of venomous Animals, preserv'd in different Vessels and Caverns, as Vipers, Rattle-Snakes, Scorpions, and even Crocodiles: But they add, that the Spaniards were not Eye-Witnesses of this poisonous Article of Magnificence, but only saw the Places where these Creatures were reported to be bred; which is sufficient Reason for me to regard this Part of the Story as improbable; believing rather, that it had no other Foundation than the Opinion of the Indians, and that this was a Sort of a Bugbear, invented by the Vulgar, to represent the savage Disposition of a Tyrant; particularly, when he is obey'd by Constraint, and cannot be mention'd without Fear.

Over the Place where the Beasts were kept, was a very large Apartment for the Residence of Buffoons, and other Vermin of the Court, who serv'd for the Diversion of the King: Even Monsters had a Place in this Set of Men; such as Dwarfs, Crooked, or Hump-back'd, and other Errors of Nature: Every Kind had their separate Habitations, and Masters apart to instruct them; and Persons employ'd to provide their Meals and to attend them: And they were so punctually serv'd, that some Fathers, among the poorer Sort, would disfigure their Children for the sake of that Conveniency, their Deformity being a sufficient Recommendation to introduce them.

Nor was the Grandeur of Motezuma less conspicuous in Two Houses for his Arms; one where they were made, and the other where they were laid up in Store. In the first, the several Masters liv'd and work'd, distributed into different Shops, according to their Employments: In one Part they made the Sticks for the Arrows; in another they worked Flint Stones for the Points: And all Sorts of Arms, offensive and defensive, had Workmen, and distinct Shops, with Overseers, who kept Account, according to their Manner, of the Quantity and Price of the Arms. The other House, which made a better Appearance, serv'd for a Magazine to hold the Arms that were finish'd; every Kind apart: And from thence they were given out to the Armies, and Frontier Towns, as Occasion requir'd. In the highest Part they plac'd the Arms belonging to the King, which were hung round the Walls in excellent Order: On one Side the Bows, Arrows, and Quivers, with various emboss'd Work of Gold and precious Stones: On another, Two-Handed Swords, and others of extraordinary Wood, with flint Edges, and most curious and costly Handles. In another Place the Darts, and missive Weapons were so well rang'd and so neatly kept, not excepting even the Slings, that the Exactness of their Disposition was admirable. There were Head-Pieces and Breast-Pieces, plated over with curious Leaf-Work of Gold; great Number of Quilted Jackets which were Arrow proof; beautiful Inventions of Shields or Bucklers made of impenetrable Skins, which cover'd the whole Body, and which they carry'd roll'd up upon their Left Shoulders till they were ready to engage. The Spaniards greatly wonder'd to behold such a prodigious Quantity of Arms, which appear'd to be the Furniture not only of a Prince but of a Martial Prince, and made an honourable Discovery as well of his Opulency as of his Genius.

To all these Houses he had spacious Gardens, most nicely cultivated. He was no Admirer of Fruit-Trees, nor Kitchen Plants in his Gardens of Pleasure: For he us'd to say, That such kind of Gardens were for the inferior Rank of People; it being his Opinion, That Princes should have Regard to their Pleasure without any Mixture of Profit. There was nothing to be seen but Flowers of delightful Variety and Fragrancy, with Medicinal Herbs, set in Squares, and Summer-Houses where he us'd to sup. He took a particular Care to transplant into his Gardens all the choice Simples that benign Climate produc'd, where the only Study of the Physicians was to attain to the Knowledge of their Names and Properties. They had Herbs for all Kinds of Pains and Infirmities; and in the Juices and Application of those Herbs consisted all their Remedies, and with which they effected surprizing Cures, having by long Experience found out their Virtues, which, without distinguishing the Cause of the Distemper, they apply'd to the Patient's great Benefit and Recovery.

The King freely distributed to all who had Occasion for them such of his Simples as were prescrib'd by the Physicians, or desir'd by the Sick; and was wont to inquire if the Patient had receiv'd any Benefit therefrom, either gratifying a sort of Vanity he had in the successful Operation of his Medicines, or believing that he fulfill'd the Obligation of a Sovereign, in taking such Care of the Health of his Vassals.

In all these Gardens and Pleasure-Houses, he had many Fountains of sweet and wholesome Water, convey'd from the neighbouring Mountains by different Canals as far as the Causeys, whence in cover'd Pipes it was introduc'd into the City, for the Use whereof there were some publick Fountains; and he permitted some of the meaner Sort of the People, tho' not without paying a considerable Tribute, to sell about the Streets what Water they brought from other Springs. The Conveniency of Fountains was very much increas'd in the Time of Motezuma; for the great Conduit, which conveys a Current of fresh Water to Mexico from the Mountain of Chapultepec, about a League distant from the City, was a Work of his; and by his Order and Contrivance a vast Cistern of Stone was made for a Reservatory; raising the same to such a Height as the Declivity for the Current requir'd: After this he gave Orders for a very thick Wall, with two open Canals made of Stone and Lime, of which one was always in Use, whenever the other requir'd cleaning: A Building extremely useful; and Motezuma valued himself so much upon the Invention, that he order'd his own Effigies and that of his Father, which bore a pretty near Resemblance to his, to be engrav'd on Two Stones, with an Ambition to perpetuate his Memory by so signal a Benefaction done to the City.

Amongst all the Works of Motezuma, what surpriz'd the Spaniards most, was that call'd the House of Sorrow, to which he was wont to retire on the Death of his Relations, or in Case of any Calamity, or ill Success, which requir'd publick Demonstration of Grief. The Building inspir'd a kind of Horror; the the Walls, Roofs, and Ornaments were all black, and had certain Slits in the Wall, or little Windows, which scarce gave any Light, or at least no more than was sufficient to discover the Obscurity. In this dismal Habitation he us'd to continue till the Time of Mourning was over, and often here the Devil appear'd to him; whether it be that the Prince of Darkness took Delight in this Abode of Horror, or for the Sympathy there is between that malignant Spirit and a melancholy Humour.

Without the City he had divers Country Retirements and Houses of Pleasure, with many and large Fountains, which supplied the Bagnios and Fish-ponds with Water, and near them several Woods for different Kinds of Game: A Diversion he frequently us'd, and understood well, being very dextrous at his Bow and Arrow; and indeed Hunting was what principally delighted him, for he was accustomed to go with his Nobles to a very spacious and pleasant Park, fenc'd round with a Canal of Water, where they brought and inclos'd the Game of the neighbouring Mountains; among which generally came some Lions and Tygers. He had a great Number of Men in Mexico and the Villages round about, whose Business it was to go before, and by forming a great Ring and contracting it by Degrees, to drive the Game into the appointed Place, not much unlike the Manner of our Huntsmen. These Mexican Indians were extremely bold and active in pursuing and overcoming the fiercest Animals, and Motexuma took great Delight in beholding the Combats of his Huntsmen with those Creatures, and sometimes he would let fly an Arrow, which was always applauded as a very great Action. But he never quitted his Chair unless he was upon some commodious Eminence, with good Store of Darts and Arrows by him for the Security of his Person; not that he wanted personal Courage, or was any Thing inferior in Strength or Dexterity to the best of his Subjects; but because he look'd upon those voluntary Hazards as unbecoming his Majesty, believing, and not without a true Sense of his own Dignity, that no Dangers but those of War were worthy of a King.

C H A P. XV.

An Account of the Pomp, Ceremony and Exactness with which MOTEZUMA was serv'd in his Palace: Of the Expences of his Table, of his Audiences and other Particulars relating to his Oeconomy, and Diversions.

A GREEABLE to the Stateliness, Pride and Magnificence of the Buildings, was the Oeconomy of his House, and the Apparel, wherewith he us'd to adorn his Person, for the better maintaining the Reverence and Dread of his Vassals; to which he invented new and excessive Ceremonies; laying aside, as a Fault, the great Humanity and Indulgence with which the Mexican Kings were wont to treat their Subjects. He augmented, as we have said in the Beginning of his Reign, the Number, Quality and Splendor of the Royal Family; composing it wholly of the Nobility, of greater or lesser Distinction, according to their several Employments: A Point which was at first much opposed by his Council, who represented to him, That it was by no means proper to dissatisfy the Common People by intirely excluding them from his Service; notwithstanding which, he executed what his Vanity suggested: And it was one of his Maxims, That Princes ought to favour at a Distance those who either had no Sense of a Benefit, or wanted the Power to return it; and that Plebeian Minds were not fit to enter into the Confidence of a Sovereign.

He had Two Sorts of Guards, the One of Soldiers, so numerous that they fill'd the Courrs of the Palace, and were posted in Bodies at the principal Gates: The other of Noblemen, introduc'd also in his Time, consisting of Two Hundred Men, of distinguish'd Quality, who were oblig'd to be every Day at the Palace, both to guard his Royal Person, and to make up the Number of his Courtiers. This Attendance of the Nobility was divided into Tours, and every Division had their set Days for entring upon Duty; and the Disposition was such, that it comprehended not only the Nobility of the City,

City, but of the whole Kingdom: And when it was their Turns, they came to Court to discharge this Obligation from the most remote Parts of the Realm. Their Attendance was in the Anti-chambers, and they eat what was left at the King's Table. He us'd to permit some of them to enter into his Chamber, commanding them to be call'd, not so much for any particular Mark of his Favour to them as to be satisfy'd if they attended, and to keep them all on their Duty. He valu'd himself upon having introduc'd that kind of Guard, and seem'd to have done it with Views of no ordinary Policy: For he us'd to tell his Ministers, that it serv'd to exercise the Obedience of the Nobility, and to keep them in a greater Dependency; besides, it gave him an Opportunity of knowing his Subjects, and employing them according to their several Capacities.

The Mexican Emperors marry'd with Daughters of other Kings their Tributaries: And Motezuma had Two Wives of this Quality, who bore the Title of Queens, lodg'd in separate Apartments with equal Splendor and Magnificence. The Number of his Concubines was exorbitant and scandalous; for we find it written that there were more than Three Thousand Women in the Palace, including the Servants; and every Female of more than ordinary Beauty, that was to be met with throughout his whole Dominions, was brought thither, in order to gratify his lustful Appetite; for his Ministers and Tax-gatherers forc'd them from their Friends by Way of Tribute, and Vassalage, treating the Debauchery of their Prince as a Point of Importance to the State.

These Women he, without any Difficulty, got rid of, and provided for them in such Manner that others might supply his Place. They found Husbands among those of the best Quality; for they left the Court very rich, and, in the common Opinion, highly honour'd: So far was Chastity and Decency from being counted Virtues in a Religion which did not only permit, but even command the utmost Violence to natural Reason. He affected very much to have his Concubines lead a retir'd Life, and keep a strict Decorum in his House; and for that Purpose he had ancient Matrons, who narrowly observ'd the Behaviour of his Mistresses, without permitting the least Indecency to be acted amongst them; not that he set any Value upon Modesty, but because Jealousy was his predominant Passion. And this Care with which he endeavour'd to maintain a strict Decorum in his Family, (in it self so reasonable and praise worthy) was in him a Weakness without any Mixture of true Honour or Generosity, but purely the Effect of his other darling Passion.

His Audiences were neither easily obtain'd, nor very frequent, but they lasted long; and upon these Occasions he appear'd with great Splendor and Solemnity. The Great Men who had Admission into the Royal Apartment, assisted at them, with Six or Seven Counsellors of State to advise him in Case any Point of Difficulty was started. And there were several Secretaries, who marked in Characters, which serv'd them instead of Letters, the Resolutions and Decrees, every one according to his respective Employment. The Person who obtain'd Audience enter'd barefoot, and made three Reverences, without lifting his Eyes from the Ground: Saying at the first, Lord! at the second, My Lord! and at the third, Great Lord! He spoke in the most humble and submissive Terms, and retir'd in the same Manner he advanc'd; repeating his Reverences; never turning his Back, and keeping his Eyes fix'd on the Ground; for there were certain Officers by who severely punish'd the least Omission, and Motezuma was extremely rigorous in exacting those Ceremonies: A Care by no means blameable in Princes, for therein consists one of those Prerogatives which distinguish them from other Men; and the Delicacies of Royalty infuse into the Subject an awful Dread, very essential in its Effects. He listen'd with Attention, and answer'd with Severity; seeming to proportion his Voice to his Look. If any one was at a Loss in his Delivery, he endeavour'd to recover him, or order'd one of his Ministers to assist him, that he might speak with more Assurance. And to such a Man he would give a more favourable Dispatch, as finding in that respectful Fear, a Sort of an agreeable Discretion which flatter'd his Vanity. He valued himself much for the Gentleness and Humanity with which he suffer'd the Impertinencies of Petitioners, and the unaccountable Difference of their several Pretensions: The Truth is, upon these Occasions, he endeavour'd to correct the Impetuosity of his Temper; but it was not always that he could gain that Point: For the Violence he us'd would often give Way to his natural Bent, and indeed Pride under a Restraint but ill resembles Goodness.

He eat alone, and very often in publick; but always with equal State and Solemnity. His Table was ordinarily cover'd with above Two Hundred Dishes, of different Meats adapted to his Palate, and some of those so savoury and exquisitely well season'd, that they not only pleas'd the Spaniards then, but have since been imitated in Spain; for there is no Nation so barbarous, barous, but that it can boast of some Ingenuity, and has some Invention or other to gratify an inordinate Appetite.

Before he sat down to Meat, he look'd over all the Dishes, to examine the different Dainties they contain'd, and having satisfy'd the Gluttony of his Eyes, he made Choice of those which pleas'd him most, and order'd the rest to be divided amongst the Nobles of his Guard. And this daily Profusion, was but a small Part of the ordinary Expence of his Kitchen, for he kept Tables for all who liv'd in his Palace, and for as many others as were oblig'd to resort thither, by Virtue of their Employments. His Table was large, but low, and he sat on a little Stool proportionable to the Table. The Cloths were of fine white Cotton, and the Napkins of the same, nothing near so broad as long. The Room where he eat was divided in the Middle by a Rail, which, without obstructing the Sight, kept the Crowd and his Domesticks at Distance.

Within the Rails, and near the Table waited Three or Four ancient Servants, of those he most favour'd: And near the Rails, one of his principal Officers receiv'd the Dishes, which were brought by about Twenty Women magnificently apparel'd, who serv'd his Meat and gave him the Cup, with the same Reverence us'd to their Idols in the Temples. The Dishes were of exceeding fine Earthen Ware, and were only us'd once, as were likewise the Table-Cloths, and Napkins, which were immediately divided amongst the Servants. He had Cups of Gold, and Salvers of the same; and sometimes he drank out of Cocons, and natural Shells, very richly set with Jewels.

They had continually ready at Hand different Sorts of Liquors, which he call'd for as he fancy'd; some were finely perfum'd with the richest Odours, others mix'd with the Juices of salutiferous Herbs, nor did he ever want Confections of a less honest Quality; I mean Provocatives to Venery. He made Use of those Wines, or rather more properly speaking Beer, a Liquor which the Indians make by infusing Maiz in boiling Water, and which disturbs the Brain as much as the strongest bodied Wines: These he drank with Moderation. When he had done eating, he usually took a Kind of Chocolate, made after the Manner of the Country, that is the Substance of the Nut beat up with the Mill 'till the Cup was fill'd more with Froth than with Liquor; after which he us'd to smok Tobacco perfum'd with liquid Amber. And this vicious Habit pass'd for a Medecine with the Indians, which withal had somewhat in it of Superstition; for the Juice of this Herb was one of the Ingredients with which the Priests were work'd up into Madness and Fury, as often as they were oblig'd to prepare themselves, by losing their Understanding, to receive the Devil's Oracles.

He had generally attending at his Table, Three or Four select Buffoons, who among that Sort of Vermin, were most remarkable for their Pranks; and these endeavour'd to divert him in a Manner agreeable to Persons of their Character, who centre their whole Felicity in having the Faculty to make others laugh; but too often cover their Want of Respect to their Company under Pretence of entertaining them. Motezuma us'd to say, That he suffer'd them near his Person only because they sometimes told him Truth: But he who seeks Truth among them discovers but little Relish of it, except he confounds it with Flattery. However this was a Sentence taken Notice of among the rest of his good Sayings: And it is so far remarkable, that even a barbarous Prince was sensible of his Fault in admitting them, since he endeavour'd at a Reason to justify his so doing.

After some little Repose his Musicians were wont to come in to divert him; and with a Sort of Flutes and Sea-Shells, notwithstanding the Difference of their Sounds, they form'd a Kind of Concert. They sung several Compositions, in various Sorts of Metre, which tho' unequal in their Measures, had somewhat like Cadence, varying the Tones, not without some Method, into a Musick adapted to their Ear. The ordinary Themes of the Songs were the Exploits of their Ancestors, and the memorable Actions of their Kings; and these were sung in their Temples, and the Children learn'd them by Heart, to preserve the Achievements of the Nation from Oblivion, these Songs serving as a History to those who did not understand the Pictures and Hieroglyphicks of their Annals. They had likewise their merry Songs us'd in Dances, and accompanied with a strange confus'd Sort of Musick. They were so much addicted to this Kind of Diversion, and other Spectacles and Entertainments in which they succeeded very well, that they had almost every Night publick Festivals in some Quarter or other of the City, as well of the Nobility, as of the Common People; and now they were more frequent, and celebrated with greater Solemnity, to complement the Spaniards; Motezuma himself not only encouraging, but even assisting at them in Person, contrary to his accusom'd Austerity; as being ambitious, that these idle Diversions should, among the rest of his Ostentation, contribute to display his Grandeur, and the Magnificence of his Court.

The

The most remarkable of their Sports was a Dance they call'd Mitotes, compos'd of a prodigious Multitude of People, some of whom were most gorgeously attir'd, and others disguis'd under very extraordinary Figures. In this Dance the Nobles enter'd without any Distinction, mingling with the meauer Sort, to honour that Festival; nor were Examples wanting of their King's having done the like. Their Musick consisted of Two little Drums, made of a hollow Piece of Wood, different in Bigness and Sound; Base and Treble, and not without some Kind of Harmony. They enter'd Two and Two, and after certain Movements and Figures they form'd a Ring, all beating the Earth at once with their Feet, and keeping Time with their Hands, without ever being out; and when one Chorus was tir'd, another succeeded, with different Steps and Motions, like the Tripudia and Chorus celebrated by Antiquity; and in Conclusion they mingled altogethier with confus'd Shouts of Joy, until by drinking to each others Healths, they were intoxicated with their heady Liquor, in which they indulg'd themselves; for they thought it an Honour to drink plentifully upon that Occasion, and then the Feast either was at an End, or converted to some other more extravagant Folly.

At other Times the People assembled in the principal Squares, or in the Porches of their Temples, for the Diversion of several Shews and Games. There were Challenges to shoot at a Mark, or to give other Proofs of their surprizing Dexterity in managing the Bow and Arrow. They us'd running at Races, and Wrestling for Wagers, and publick Rewards were likewise given to the Conqueror. Some of them were extremely active, and would dance on the Rope without a Pole; and others again who would dance after a most amazing Manner, with another of these Rope-dancers upon their Shoulders. They play'd likewise at Ball, divided into equal Numbers against each other, with a Kind of Bandy, which rais'd very high the Ball, which now and then was a long while in the Air to and fro, 'till some one of the Parties struck it to the Mark and thereby carry'd the Prize, which was disputed with so much Solemnity, that the Priests, with a ridiculous Superstition, produc'd the God of the Ball, and placing him in Sight, conjur'd the Puppet, with certain Ceremonies to correct the Hazards of the Play according to their fond Imagination, and to render Fortune impartial to both Sides. There were very few Days in which they had not some Sort or other of these Diversions in the City, and Motexuma was pleas'd with amusing the People in this Manner; not that he was so very fond of these Pastimes himself; or that he was ignorant of the Inconveniencies, which ought to be forgiven or overlook'd in a disorderly Multitude ; but he judg'd it necessary to divert those turbulent, unquiet Spirits whose Fidelity he suspected. A miserable Capitulation for a Tyrant to make with his Subjects, to indulge them in those Incitements to Vice that they may not reflect on their Misery. But a much greater Slave, is that Tyrant, who has Recourse to such Disorders that he may introduce Slavery under the Mask of Liberty.

C H A P. XVI.

An Account of MOTEZUMA's immense Riches ; the Manner of his managing the Royal Revenues, and of his administering Justice ; with other Particulars of the Mexican Government, both Civil and Military.

SO great was the Wealth of Motézuma, that he was not only able to support the ordinary Expences and Diversions of his Court, but besides maintain'd constantly Two or Three Armies in the Field, either to subdue his rebellious Subjects, or cover his Frontiers ; over and above all which, there remain'd a sufficient Fund for a most plentiful Reserve. Exceeding great Profit did the Crown receive from the Mines of Gold and Silver, the Salt-Works, and other Rights establish'd from Time immemorial : But the largest Fund of the Royal Revenue, was from the Contributions of the Subject, which were most exorbitantly increas'd in the Reign of Motézuma. All the Husbandmen of this vast and populous Empire gave to the King one Third of the Produce of their Land and Stocks : The Tradesmen one Third of their Manufactures, and the poor People were oblig'd to work for the Court without Wages, or to acknowledge their Vassalage by some other personal Service.

Several Officers took their Circuits round the Kingdom, who, being assisted by the ordinary Magistrates, receiv'd and remitted the Tributes. These Officers depended on the Tribunal of the Royal Revenue residing in the Court, and were oblig'd to give an exact Account of the minutest Matter which their Districts produc'd; and the least Fraud or Neglect was punished with loss of Life; from whence ensu'd abundance of Rigour in exacting the Dues of the Crown; for Favour or Compassion in a Collector was deem'd a Crime of as heinous a Nature as Theft itself.

Great were the Clamours of the People, nor was Moteczuma ignorant of their Discontent; but the Oppression of his Vassals was one of the chief Maxims of his Government. And he would frequently say, That he was no Stranger to their evil Disposition, and was oblig'd to load them for his own Quiet; and that he should not be able to govern them, if he suffer'd them to grow rich; being still very ready at inventing Pretences and Colours which carry'd a Shew of Reason. All the Towns near the City furnish'd Men for the King's Works, provided Fuel for the Royal Palace, or contributed otherways at the Expence of their Communities. The Tribute of the Nobility was to guard the Emperor's Person, or serve in his Armies with a certain number of their Vassals; besides which, they were continually making him Presents, which, tho' he receiv'd them as Gifts, it was still without quitting his Pretences to them as Dues. He had different Treasurers, according to the several Kinds of Contributions: And the Tribunal of the Crown Revenue, issued out all that was necessary for the Expence of the Royal Houses, and Provisions of War, and took Care to make the best Advantage of the Overplus, by reducing it into something that would not decay, in order to preserve it in the principal Treasury, and particularly into Ingots of Gold, whose Value they well understood and esteem'd, without suffering the Plenty of it to make it less valuable: On the contrary, the Great Men sought after it, and hoarded it, either for the Excellency and Beauty of the Metal, or because it was design'd by Destiny rather to satisfy the covetous Desires, than relieve the Necessities of Mankind. The Mexican Government discover'd a remarkable Harmony between the Parts that compos'd it. Besides the Council of the Revenue, which took Care, as we have said, of the Royal Patrimony, they had a Council of Justice which receiv'd Appeals from inferior Tribunals; a Council of War for the forming of Armies and Military Provisions; and a Council of State, which was generally held in the Presence of the King, and treated Matters of the greatest Importance. They likewise had a sufficient Number of Judges of Commerce, and other different Officers; as Provosts of the King's Court, who went their Rounds about the City to take up Delinquents. These Officers, as did likewise the Alguaziles, or Lieutenants, carry'd a Staff in their Hands as a Mark of Distinction, that their Office might be known. They held their Tribunal in a certain Part of the Town, where they heard the Parties, and immediately determin'd the Cause. Their Judgments were summary and verbal; both Sides appear'd with their Claims and Witnesses, and the Cause was presently decided, except it happen'd to be a Case of Appeal to a superior Tribunal. They had no Written Laws, but were govern'd according to the Institutions of their Ancestors; Custom upon all Occasions supplying the want of Laws, where the Pleasure of the Prince did not interpose to make Innovations. All these Councils were compos'd of Men experienced both in War and Peace; and the Council of State, which was superior to all the rest, was form'd of the Electors of the Empire, which was a Dignity conferr'd upon the ancient Princes of the Royal Blood: And when Matters of great Consequence were discuss'd, they summon'd to the Council the Kings of Tezcuco and Tacuba, who were principal Electors, and had this Prerogative by Succession. The Four chief Counsellors always resided in the Palace, and attended near the King's Person, to declare their Opinions when occasion offer'd, which Motezuma did, to give his Decrees the greater Authority among the People.

Rewards and Punishments were dispens'd with equal Care. Murther, Theft, Adultery, or any light Disrespect towards the King, or their Religion, were Capital Crimes. All other Misdemeanours were easily pardon'd; for their very Religion itself disarm'd Justice by tolerating Vice. Corruption in the Ministers was also punish'd with Loss of Life, and no Crime was look'd upon as Venial in those who serv'd in publick Employments: This Custom Motezuma observ'd with the utmost Rigour, having People of special Trust to examine into their Conduct, and even to offer them Bribes; and he who was found deficient in any Part of his Duty was infallibly punish'd with Death: A Severity worthy of a less barbarous Prince, and a better moral'd Common-wealth. However, it cannot be deny'd, but that the Mexicans had some Moral Virtues, and particularly that they administer'd, with great Integrity, that Kind of Justice with which they were acquainted, and which was sufficient to redress Injuries, and maintain Society among Fellow Citizens: For, notwithstanding their Abuses and Beastialities, they preserv'd some Knowledge of that primitive Equity which Nature bestow'd on Men, when as yet they had no Laws, because they were ignorant of Crimes.

One of the most laudable Articles of their Policy was the Education of Children, and the great Application with which they examin'd and form'd their Inclinations. They had publick Schools for the Instruction of the Plebeians, and Colleges, and other considerable Seminaries, well endow'd, where the Sons of the Nobility were educated from their very Infancy, and where they continu'd till they were in a Capacity to make their Fortunes, or follow their Inclinations. They had their respective Masters for Infants, Children, and Youths, who had the Authority of the King's Ministers, and were reputed as such; and not without Reason, as they took care of those Rudiments and Exercises which afterward fitted Men for the Service of the Common-wealth. They taught them to decypher those Characters and Figures of which they compos'd their Writings; and they made them learn by Heart their historical Songs which contain'd the Actions of their Ancestors, and the Praises of their Gods. From hence they went to another Class, where they were taught Modesty, Civility, and even a gentle Behaviour, according to some Authors. These second Masters, or Tutors, were of greater Reputation and Abilities than the first; for it lay upon them to contend with the Inclinations of Youth, which loves not to be corrected, nor to have its Passions broke. Being arriv'd to some Degree of Knowledge, and brought up in this Sort of Subjection, they pass'd on to the Third Class, where they employ'd themselves in more robust Exercises: They try'd their Strength in carrying Weights, and in Wrestling: They vied with each other in Leaping and Running: They were taught how to manage their Arms, use the Two-handed Sword, throw the Dart, and, with Force and Exactness, to shoot the Arrow. Then they made them suffer Hunger and Thirst, and resist the Inclemencies of the Weather, till they return'd to their Father's Houses well instructed and inur'd to Hardships, to be engag'd, according to the Information the Masters gave of their Inclinations and Capacities, either in the Employments of Peace, War, or Religion; Three Paths which Noblemen have to chuse, almost equal in Reputation, tho' that of War has the Precedence, as it raises Men to a higher Degree of Honour. They had also other Colleges of Matrons dedicated to the Worship of their Gods, in which they bred young Women of Quality; where they were plac'd from their Childhood under the Direction of these Women, and confin'd very strictly, till they went out to be settled in the World, with the Approbation of their Parents, and Licence of the Emperor; having arriv'd at a Perfection in every Occupation suitable to their Sex. The Sons of Nobles, at parting from those Seminaries, who were inclin'd to War, pass'd another Trial worthy of Consideration ; for their Fathers sent them to the Armies that they might become acquainted with the Hardships of a Campaign, and know what it was that they undertook before they enroll'd themselves in the Service: And they us'd to place them among the common Baggage-Men, with a Load of Provision on their Shoulders, to mortify their Vanity, and to inure them to Fatigue.

They admitted none to this Profession who changed Countenance at the Sight of an Enemy, or who did not give some Proofs of his Valour ; so that these Novices did great Service in the Time of their Probation: For every one was desirous to signalize himself by some particular Action, throwing himself headlong into the greatest Dangers ; being persuaded, that in order to their being rank'd with valiant Men, some Temerity was necessary for laying the Foundation of Fame.

In nothing did the Mexicans place their Felicity so much, as in Military Exploits ; for their Kings regarded the Profession of War as the principal Foundation of their Power, and the Subjects, as a Virtue peculiar to their Nation: By that Plebeians rose to the Degree of Nobles, and Nobles to the greatest Employments of the Empire ; which animated all to the Service, at least, all those aspir'd to Military Virtue who were born with Ambition, or had Spirit enough to push themselves above others. Every Town had a regulated Militia, with certain Privileges and Immunities which distinguish'd the Soldiers from the rest of the Inhabitants. Their Armies were form'd with Ease, for the Princes of the Empire, and Caziques, or Governors of Provinces, were oblig'd to repair to the Place of Arms appointed them, with their Quota of Men: And it is esteem'd a mighty Instance of the Grandeur of the Mexican Empire, that Motezuma had Thirty Vassals, so powerful, that each could bring into the Field a Hundred Thousand armed Men. They commanded their respective Armies in Person, under the Authority of a Captain-General, whose Orders they obey'd, as representing the Person of the Emperor, when he was not himself in the Field, which rarely happen'd: For those Princes esteem'd it as a lessening of their Authority to be absent from their Armies, and thought it very impolitick to trust their Force in the Hands of another.

Their Manner of Engaging was the same which we have describ'd in the Battle of Tabasco ; but their Troops were better disciplin'd, and the Soldiers more obedient: They had more Nobles

Nobles to head them, and greater Hopes of Reward. They quickly discharg'd their missive Arms to make Use of their Swords, and very often of their Hands; for it was reckon'd a greater Action to make a Captive, than to kill an Enemy; and he was accounted the bravest Man who brought most Prisoners to the Sacrifice. The Military Employments were much esteem'd, and well supported; for Motezuma rewarded with great Liberality those who distinguish'd themselves in Battle; and had himself so Martial a Genius, and was so zealous for the Reputation of his Arms, that he invented honourable Rewards for the Nobles who serv'd in the Wars; instituting certain Military Orders, with their peculiar Habits and Marks; which gave both Honour and Distinction. Some were call'd Knights of the Eagle, others of the Tyger, and a third of the Lyon, and they bore the Device of their Order either painted on their Robe, or hanging to it. He founded also another Order of Knighthood superior to these, to which only Princes were admitted, or Nobles descended from a Royal Line: And to add thereto the greater Honour, he took the Habit himself. These Knights had Part of their Hair bound with a Red Ribband, and among the Plumes which adorn'd the Head, Tassels of the same Colour, which hung down upon the Shoulders, more or less, according to the Actions of the Cavaliers, which were known by the Number of Tassels which were augmented with great Solemnity, as they signaliz'd themselves by new Exploits; so that there was always Room to increase this Dignity by some fresh Atchievement in War.

We cannot but commend in the Mexicans the generous Ardour with which they aspir'd to these honourable Rewards, and in Motezuma the Merit of inventing them: For as this is Money the most easily coin'd, so it holds the first Rank among the Treasures of a Prince:

C H A P. XVII.

An Account how the Mexicans measur'd and computed their Months and Years. Their Festivals, Marriages, with other Rites and Customs worthy of Remark.

TH E Mexicans had dispos'd and regulated their Kalendar after a very notable Method. They adjusted it by the Motion of the Sun, making his Altitude and Declination the Measure of Times and Seasons. They allow'd their Year Three Hundred Sixty Five Days, as we do, but they divided them into Eighteen Months, assigning to each Month Twenty Days, which made Three Hundred and Sixty; the other Five, which were a Kind of Intercalary Days, they added at the End of the Year, to make it answer the Course of the Sun. During these Five Days, which they believe were left purposely by their Ancestors as vacant, and out of the Account, they gave themselves up wholly to Idleness, and only study'd how to lose that Overplus of Time. Tradesmen left off Work, and shut up their Shops; the Business of the Tribunals ceas'd, and the very Sacrifices in their Temples: They visited each other, and all People endeavour'd to entertain themselves with Variety of Diversions, signifying that by this Intermision they were preparing themselves anew for the Works and Labours of the ensuing Year, whose Beginning they plac'd on the First Day of the Spring, differing from the Solar Year, according to the Computation of Astrologers, only Three Days, which they took from our Month of February.

They had also their Weeks of Thirteen Days, with different Names, which they mark'd in their Kalendar by Images: Their Ages consisted of Four Weeks of Years; which Method of Imagery was a very artful and notable Invention, and was carefully preserv'd for a Memorial of all that happen'd. They made a great Circle, which they divided into Fifty Two Degrees, allowing a Year for every Degree. In the Centre they painted the Effigies of the Sun, from whose Rays proceeded Four Lines of different Colours, which equally divided the Circumference, leaving Thirteen Degrees to each Semidiameter, and these Divisions serv'd as Signs of their Zodiack, upon which their Ages had their Revolutions, and the Sun his Aspects, prosperous or adverse, according to the Colour of the Line. In a larger Circle, inclosing the other, they mark'd, with their Figures and Characters, the Accidents of the Age, and all Occurrences which had happen'd worthy of Memory. And these secular Maps were as publick Instruments, which serv'd for a Proof of their History. It may be reckon'd among the wisest Instructions of their Government, that they had Historiographers capable of handing down to Posterity, the Exploits of their Nation.

They had a Mixture of Superstition in the Computation of their Ages; for they were taught that the World was in Danger of Destruction when the Sun had finish'd the Revolution of those Four greater Weeks; and when the last Day of the Fifty Two Years was come, all the People prepar'd themselves for that dreadful and ultimate Calamity. They took Leave of the Light with Tears, and expected Death without any previous Sickness: They broke their Household Vessels as unnecessary Lumber; they extinguish'd their Fires, walking about all the Night like distracted People, without daring to take any Rest, till they knew whether they were to be for ever consign'd to the Regions of Darkness. But upon the Dawning of the Day they began to recover their Spirits, with their Eyes fix'd towards the East; and at the first Appearance of the Sun, they saluted him with all their Musical Instruments, with Hymns, and Songs which express'd their confus'd Joy: Then they congratulated each other upon their being secure of the World's Duration for another Age, immediately crowded to their Temples to render Thanks to their Gods, and to receive from the Priests new Fires which they had burning with the greatest Violence before the Altars, being constantly fed with dry Wood. Next they made anew all Provision for their necessary Subsistence, and this Day was celebrated with publick Rejoycings, and the Dancing and other Diversions were dedicated thro' the whole City to the Renewal of Time, much after the same Manner wherewith Rome celebrated her Secular Games.

Their Emperors receiv'd the Crown upon Conditions very particular: For the Election being made after the Manner has been already observ'd, the new King was oblig'd to take the Field with the Forces of the Empire, and obtain some Victory over his Enemies, or subdue some Rebels, or some neighbouring Province before he was Crown'd, or permitted to ascend the Royal Throne. A Custom worthy of Observation, and the chief Means by which this Monarchy rose to such a Height in so few Years. So soon as the Victorious Prince was found to be qualify'd for the Regal Dignity, by the Success of his Enterprize, he return'd triumphantly to the City, and made his publick Entry with great State and Solemnity: All the Nobility, Ministers, and Priests, accompany'd him to the Temple of the God of War, where he alighted from his Chair, and after having offer'd the customary Sacrifices, the Electoral Princes cloath'd him in Royal Robes, arming his Right-Hand with a Sword of Gold, edg'd with Flint, the Ensign of Justice; and his Left with a Bow and Arrows, signifying his Power and Command in War: Then the King of Tezcucó plac'd the Crown upon his Head, by a Privilege belonging to him as First Elector.

After this, one of the most eloquent Magistrates made a long Harangue, wishing him Joy of the Dignity, in the Name of the whole Empire; and added some Documents, representing the Troubles and Cares that attend a Crown, with the Obligations he lay under to regard the Publick Good of his Kingdoms; recommending to him the Imitation of his Ancestors. This Speech being ended, the Chief of the Priests approach'd him with great Reverence, and between his Hands the King took an Oath, with Circumstances very observable. First, he swore to maintain the Religion of his Ancestors: That he would observe the Laws and Customs of the Empire: That he would treat his Vassals with Lenity: That during his Reign they should have seasonable Rains: That no Inundations of Rivers, Sterility of Soil, or malignant Influences of the Sun should happen. A notable Compact between a King and his Vassals, and ridicul'd by Justus Lipsius! But we may venture to say, that by this Oath, they endeavour'd to oblige him to reign with such Moderation, that he might not by any Action of his own draw down the Indignation of Heaven; as not being ignorant that these Kinds of Chastisements and publick Calamities fall sometimes on the Subjects for the Sins and Exorbitances of the Prince.

For the rest of the Rites and Customs of this Nation, we shall only touch on those which deserve a Place in History, omitting their Superstitions, Indecencies, and Obscenities, which defile the Narration, tho' told without Offence to Truth.

Amidst such a Multitude of Gods, as we have before observ'd, and such Obscurity and Blindness in their Idolatry, they still acknowledg'd a Superior Deity, to whom they attributed tributed the Creation of the Heavens, and the Earth: And this Original of all Things was, amongst the Mexicans, a God without a Name, there being no Word in their Language whereby to express him. They only signify'd that they knew him, by looking up towards Heaven with Veneration, and giving him, after their Way, the Attribute of Ineffable, with the same religious Uncertainty with which the Athenians worship'd the Unknown God. But this Knowledge of the first Cause which, in Appearance, should have facilitated their being undeceiv'd, was of little Use upon that Occasion; for it was impossible to make them believe that this same Deity could govern the whole Universe, without the Assistance of other Gods, tho' in their Apprehension he had the Power to create it; and they were perswaded, that there were not any Gods in the other Parts of Heaven, till Men began to become miserable in Proportion as they multiplied; looking on the Gods as favourable Genij, who produc'd themselves when there was Occasion for them, without being in the least shock'd at the Notion that their Gods must have acquir'd a Being, and a Divinity from the Miseries of humane Nature:

They believ'd the Immortality of the Soul, with eternal Rewards and Punishments in a future State; but very ill understood the Nature of Virtue and Vice: And this Truth was obscur'd with other Errors; for they buried great Quantities of Gold and Silver with their Dead, to bear the Expences of their Journey, which they believ'd to be both long and troublesome. They put to Death some of their Servants to accompany them; and it was a common thing for Wives to celebrate the Exequies of their Husbands with their own Death. Princes were oblig'd to have Monuments of a vast Extent, for the greatest Part of their Riches and Family were interr'd with them; both the one and the other in Proportion to their Dignity and Grandeur. The whole Number of Servants were oblig'd to accompany the Prince into the other World, together with some Flatterers among them, who at that Time suffer'd for the Deceit of their Profession. The Bodies were carry'd with great Pomp and Solemnity to the Temples, from whence their Priests came forth to receive them, with their Copper Censers, singing to the Sound of hoarse and ill-tund Flutes, Hymns and Funeral Elegies, in a dismal melancholy Tone. They often rais'd up on high the Bier, during the voluntary Sacrifice of those miserable Wretches who had devoted both Bodies and Souls to Slavery. A Ceremony of remarkable Variety, compos'd of ridiculous Abuses, and deplorable Barbarities!

Their Marriages bore the Form of Contracts, with some religious Ceremonies. The preliminary Articles being all agreed upon, the Couple appear'd in the Temple, and one of the Priests examin'd their Inclinations by certain ceremonial Questions, appointed by Law for that Purpose: After that he took the Tip of the Woman's Veil with one Hand, and one Corner of the Husband's Garment in the other, tying the same together at the Ends, to signify the interior Tye of their Affections. Under this Sort of Nuptial Yoke, they return'd to their Habitation, accompany'd by the same Priest, where imitating the Superstition of the Romans with Regard to their Dii Lares, or Household Gods, they paid a Visit to the Domestic Fire, which they believ'd to be concern'd in the Union between the married Pair: They went round it Seven Times, following the Priest; after which they sat down to receive their equal Share of the Heat, and then the Marriage was thought to be accomplish'd. They register'd in a publick Instrument, the Portion brought by the Bride, every Part whereof the Husband was oblig'd to restore in Case they parted, which very frequently happen'd; for mutual Consent was judg'd a sufficient Cause for a Divorce: A Case in which the Law never interfer'd, but left it to the Parties concern'd, who best knew each other, to be their own Judges. The Girls remain'd with the Mother, and the Boys went with the Father; but when once the Marriage was thus dissolv'd, it was inevitable Death for them to come together again: So that notwithstanding the natural Inconstancy of that fickle Nation, the Danger of attempting to have any Cohabitation after a Divorce was no small Check upon them, and prevented many a Couple from parting. They were very careful of the Virtue and Conduct of their Wives, as a Point in which their Honour was nearly concern'd; and amidst that boundless Licentiousness and Liberty with which they indulg'd their sensual Appetites, they abhorr'd and punish'd Adultery with the utmost Rigour; not so much upon Account of the Atrocity of the Vice, as for the Inconveniencies which attended it.

Their new-born Infants were carry'd to the Temples with Solemnity, and the Priests receiv'd them with certain Admonitions, concerning the Troubles to which they were born. If they were the Sons of Nobles, they put a Sword into the Child's Right-Hand, and upon his Left Arm a Shield, kept in the Temple for that Purpose. If of Plebeian Extraction, they put into their Hands mechanical Instruments; and the Females of both Degrees had only the Distaff and Spindle, signifying to each the Kind of Employment which Destiny had prepar'd for them. This First Ceremony being over, they were brought up to the Altar, and there with a Thorn of Maguey, or a Lancet of Flint, they drew some Drops of Blood from the Privy-Parts; after which they either sprinkled them with Water, or dipp'd them into it, using at the same Time certain Invocations. In which Ceremony it should seem that the Devil, the Inventioner of these Rites, was ambitious to imitate Baptism, and Circumcision, with the same Pride with which he endeavour'd to counterfeit the other Ceremonies, and even the Sacraments of the Catholick Church; since he introduc'd among these Barbarians the Confession of Sins, giving them to understand, that thereby they obtain'd the Favour of their Gods. He instituted likewise a ridiculous Sort of Communion, which the Priests administred upon certain Days in the Year, dividing into small Bits an Idol made of Flower, mix'd up into a Past with Honey, which they call'd The God of Penitence. They had likewise Jubilees, Processions, Offerings of Incense, and other Forms of Divine Worship: Nay they even gave their Chief Priests the Title of Papas in their Language; by which we find, that this Imitation cost Satan a very particular Study and Application, whether with a Design to abuse and prophane the Sacred Mysteries and Ceremonies, by mingling them with his Abominations, or that he cannot yet repent of his Ambition, but is still aspiring and affecting to imitate the Omnipotent Creator.

The rest of the Rites and Ceremonies of these miserable Heathens were shocking and horrible, both to Reason and Nature: Bestialities and incongruous, stupid Absurdities, which seem'd altogether incompatible with the Regularity and admirable Oeconomy which was observ'd in the other Parts of that Government; and would scarce be believ'd, were not Histories full of Examples of the like Weaknesses and Errors of Human Capacities in other Nations, who are no less blind, tho' in Parts of the World where they have the Means of being more enlighten'd. Sacrifices of Human Blood began much about the same Time with Idolatry; and many Ages ago the Devil introduc'd them amongst those Nations, from whom the Israelites learn'd to sacrifice their Sons to the Idols of Canaan. The horrible and detestable Custom of Mens eating each other, has been seen practis'd many Ages since amongst other barbarous People of our Hemisphere, as Galatia confesses amongst her Antiquities, and Scythia must acknowledge the same in her Antrophophagi. Logs of Wood worship'd for Deities, superstitious

Auguries, the furious Agitations of Priests, their Communication with the Devil by his Oracles, and other Absurdities equally abominable have been admitted, and reverenc'd by other Gentiles, who were otherwise endow'd with great Sense, and were perfectly well skill'd in Morality and Politicks. Greece and Rome wanted the Knowledge of the true Religion, tho' in every Thing else they gave Laws to the whole World, and left edifying Examples to Posterity. From all this we are oblig'd to confess the Deficiency and the small Extent of human Wisdom, which reaches but a very little farther than the superficial Knowledge it receives from the Senses and Experience, whenever that reveal'd Light, by which we discover the Essence of Truth it self, is wanting. The Mexican Religion was therefore no other than a detestable Compound of all the Errors and Abominations which had been received among the Gentiles in the different Parts of the World.

We shall not enter into the Detail of their particular Festivals and Sacrifices, their Ceremonies, Sorceries, and Superstitions; not only because we meet them at every Step, with tedious Repetitions, in all the Histories of the Indies, but because it is our Opinion we cannot be too cautious how we give our Pen too large a Scope upon a Subject of this Nature, and at the best we look upon it as an unnecessary Lesson, as affording the Reader little Pleasure and much less Profit.

C H A P. XVIII.

MOTEZUMA continues his Entertainments and Presents to the Spaniards. Letters brought from Vera Cruz with an Account of the Battle wherein Juan de Escalante lost his Life: Upon which CORTES resolves to secure the Person of MOTEZUMA.

TH E Spaniards observ'd all these Novelties not without great Admiration, tho' they endeavour'd to conceal and dissemble their Surprise; and it cost them some Pains to compose their Countenances upon these Occasions, that they might maintain the Superiority they affected to carry over those People. The first Days were taken up in various Pastimes and Diversions. The Mexicans gave splendid and ostentatious Proofs of their Performances, with a Desire of entertaining their Guests, and not without an Ambition of displaying their Dexterity in the Management of their Arms, and their Activity in all their other Exercises. Motézuma encourag'd those Shews, and Entertainments, laying aside all Majesty, contrary to his accusom'd Pride and Reservedness, and upon all Occasions took Cortez along with him, attended by his Captains, and treated him with a Deference and Respect full of Humanity, which appear'd monstrous in one of his Character, and occasion'd those who knew him to have the greater Esteem for the Spaniards.

Their Visits were frequent and punctual; Cortez went to the Palace, and Motézuma to the Spanish Quarters. The Emperor was continually admiring every Thing that came from Spain, believing it to be a Part of Heaven; and so high an Idea he had of the King, that it excluded the Conceptions he entertain'd of his own Gods. He was ever endeavouring to gain the Affection of the Spaniards by distributing Curiosities and Jewels amongst the Captains and Soldiers, not without Discernment and Distinction of Merit; for he caref'd most of the Officers of Distinction, and knew how to proportion the Gift to the Importance of the Person whom he design'd to oblige.

The Nobility in Imitation of their King, were ambitious to render themselves agreeable to all the Strangers, by treating them with a Respect that favour'd of Submission: As for the Populace, they bent their Knees to the meanest of the Spanish Soldiers. In this Manner they enjoy'd an agreeable Repose, with something continually new to divert, and nothing to disturb them. But they were not long without Occasion of Disquiet; for about this Time there came two Tlascallan Soldiers to the City thro' By-Ways, disguised in the Habits of Mexicans, who going privately to Cortez, gave him a Letter from Vera-Cruz, which chang'd the Face of Affairs, and forc'd him upon Resolutions less pacifick.

Juan de Escalante, who, as we have said before, had the Government of the New Colony, was employ'd in continuing his Fortifications, and preserving his Correspondence with those Indian Friends whom Cortez had left him; and remain'd in this State of Tranquility without any Accident, till he receiv'd Advice that one of Motézuma's Generals was marching up and down in those Quarters with a considerable Army, committing Hostilities upon some Towns with which he had settled an Alliance, which depending upon the Protection of the Spaniards, refus'd to pay their accustom'd Tribute. This General's Name was Qualpopoca, and commanded all the Forces that were cantoned upon the Frontiers of Zempoalla; and having assembled them to support the Commissaries appointed to gather the Tax, he committed great Disorders, Extortions, and Violences upon those People, accompanying the Rigour of the Officers with the Licentiousness of the Soldiery; both the one and the other a sort of People insatiably greedy, who commonly call pillaging the Subject, serving the Prince. The Totonaques who inhabit the hilly Country, and whose Dwellings those Troops were then destroying, were the first who complain'd. They beseech'd Juan de Escalante to take up Arms in Defence of his Confederates, and offer'd to assist in the Undertaking with their whole remaining Strength. He comforted them with the Assurance that he resented their Injuries as done to himself: But before he would proceed to Extremities he resolv'd to send Messengers to the Mexican General, desiring him in a friendly Manner, "That he would suspend his Hostility, until such Time he should receive fresh Orders from the Emperor, since it was not possible for him to have authoriz'd a Proceeding of that Kind, when he had admitted to his Court Ambassadors from the Eastern Monarch, and had given them Leave to set on Foot a Treaty of Peace and Confederacy between the Two Crowns". This Message was carry'd by Two Zempoallans, Men of good Address, residing in Vera-Cruz; and the Answer of the Mexican was insolent and injurious: "That he was very well able to comprehend and execute the Orders of his Prince; and if any one should pretend to divert him from the Chastisement of those Rebels, he likewise knew how to maintain in the Field what he had undertaken in the Cabinet.

Juan de Escalante could not dissemble his Resentment; nor ought he to refuse the Challenge in the View of all the Indians, who were interested in the Success of the Totonaques, who ran the same Risque, and had put themselves under the same Protection: Wherefore having informed himself that the Gross of the Enemies Body did not exceed Four Thousand Men, he immediately assembled Two Thousand Indians, the greatest Part of whom were Totonaques of the hilly Country; who being either such as had fled before Qualpopoca, or irritated by his Violences, came to shelter themselves under Escalante's Protection; at the Head of which Number, well appointed after their Manner, and Forty Spaniards, Two of them arm'd with Arquebuses, and Three with Cross-Bows, and with Two Pieces of Artillery, Artillery. He began his March towards those Towns which wanted his Assistance, leaving Vera-Cruz but weakly garrison'd.

Qualpopoca had Notice of his Motions, and advanc'd to receive him, with all his Troops in exceeding good Order, near a small Village, since called Almeria. A little after Day-break both Armies came in Sight of each other, and engag'd with equal Resolution; but in a little while the Mexicans gave Way, and began to retire in great Disorder. It happen'd at the same Time that the Totonagues of our Party, either not being inur'd to War, or, from the accustom'd Dread they had of the Mexicans, were dispirited, and lagg'd behind, till at last they betook themselves to Flight, and could not be prevail'd with to advance, either by Persuasion, Compulsion, or Example: A rare Accident, which must be reckon'd among the unaccountable Events which happen in War, when the Conquerors fly from the Conquered! The Enemy fled with Precipitation and Dread, and were so careful of their own Safety, that they did not observe how much our Troops were diminish'd, but only did what they could, in a disorderly Manner, to retire to the next Towns, whither Juan de Escalante pursu'd them, with little more than his Forty Spaniards, immediately commanding the Village to be fir'd in different Places, and engag'd them at the same Time with so much Resolution, that without giving them Leisure to discover the Smallness of his Numbers, he broke, and intirely dislodg'd them, obliging them to turn their Backs and disperse themselves in the Woods. The Indians, after the Action was over, affirm'd that they saw in the Air a Woman, resembling her whom the Strangers worship'd for the Mother of their God, who dazzled and astonish'd them in such a Manner, that she depriv'd them of Strength or Power to stand their Ground. This Miracle did not manifest itself to the Spaniards, but the Success they met withal made it credible; and the Soldiers were now all accustom'd to share with Heaven in the Glory of their Exploits.

This was a very signal Victory, but it cost the Spaniards dear; for Juan de Escalante was mortally wounded, with Seven other Soldiers, of which Number the Indians carry'd off Juan de Arguillo, a Native of Leon, a Man of an extraordinary Stature, and very great Strength, who fell, valiantly fighting, at a Time when he could not be succour'd: The rest all died of their Wounds at Vera-Cruz, within Three Days.

Of this Loss, with all its Circumstances, the Council of Vera-Cruz sent Cortez an Account, that he might name a Successor cessor to Juan de Escalante, and be appriz'd of the Posture of his Affairs in those Parts. Cortez read the Letter, with the Concern that such a Piece of ill News requir'd. He communicated the same to his Captains, and without entering at that Time into all its Consequences, or discovering the Whole of his Chagrin, he desir'd them to reflect upon this Accident, and to give him Time for the forming such a Resolution as it should please God to inspire, recommending very particularly to Father Bartolomew de Olmedo to contribute to it by his Prayers, and to all in general to keep the News secret, that a Disaster of such Importance might not come to the Ears of the Soldiers, and be made a Subject of common Discourse.

He afterwards retir'd to his own Apartment, and began to reflect on all the Inconveniencies which might result from this Misfortune. He thought on several Expedients, and rejected them again: The Force of his Fancy even tir'd him with Variety, at once representing to him the Remedies and Difficulties attending them. Authors report, that he walk'd about a great Part of the Night, and by mere Accident discover'd at that Time a Place newly plaister'd up, in which Motezuma conceal'd the Treasures of his Father; and that after he had view'd them, he order'd the Place to be stop'd up again, without suffering any thing to be taken away. I shall not dwell upon the Diversion which this Discovery might give to his Uneasiness, since it appears more clearly that it lasted not long, but soon gave Way to that Application of Thought, which ended in a steady Resolution to take those Measures which I am going to relate.

He sent privately for the most sensible and best affected Indians of his Army, of whom he demanded "If they had observ'd any Alteration in the Minds of the Mexicans, and in what Esteem the Spaniards were at the Present among them?" They answer'd, "That the Common People were taken up with their Festivals made for the Diversion of the Spaniards, whom they reverenc'd, because they saw them honour'd by their Emperor: But that the Nobility seem'd pensive and mysterious; that they had secret Conferences, the Result of which they kept very private." They said, they had observ'd some Expressions which admitted a sinister Interpretation; one of which was, That it would be no difficult Matter to break down the Bridges of the Causey, with others of the same Kind, which all together gave sufficient Cause of Suspicion. Two or Three of those Indians heard it whisper'd, that some few Days before, a Spaniard's Head was brought as a Present to Motezuma; and

and that he commanded it to be taken away and conceal'd after he had view'd it with some Astonishment, it being of a very large Size, and the Face had a fierce Aspect, Marks which agreed very well with that of Juan de Arguillo. This redoubled the Uneasiness of Cortez, for hence it appear'd, that Moteczuma was privy to the Proceedings of his General.

Upon these Advices, and the Reflections he afterwards made thereupon, he shut himself up next Morning with his Captains, and some principal Soldiers, who, upon Account of their Merit or Experience, were wont to assist at the Juntas, where he laid the Case, with all its Circumstances, before them, and acquainted them what Information he had receiv'd the Night before from his trusty Indians, weighing with Unconcern, and great Sedateness of Temper, the Danger with which they were threaten'd: He touch'd with great Address upon the Difficulties which might occur; and then, without shewing which Way his own Sentiment inclin'd, he was silent, and gave them free Liberty to discuss the Affair.

They were of different Opinions: Some were for desiring Moteczuma's Passport, and marching immediately to the Relief of Vera Cruz: Others found great Difficulties in the Retreat, and were for going off privately, without forgetting the Riches they had acquir'd. But the greatest Part were of Opinion, that they should continue in Mexico, without seeming to have any Knowledge of what had pass'd at Vera Cruz, till they could find some Means to retreat with Safety. But Cortez recapitulating the several Proposals had been made, and highly commending the Zeal of endeavouring to hit the Point they had all express'd, deliver'd himself thus,

I can by no Means agree to that Proposition of desiring a Passport from Moteczuma; for after having open'd the Way to his Court with our Arms in Spite of all Opposition, we must unavoidably sink very low in the Opinion of the Mexicans, when once it shall be known, that we stand in Need of their Favour to retire. If Moteczuma has ill Designs against us, he may grant the Passport, with no other View than to destroy us in our Retreat; and if he should deny it, then we shall be oblig'd to march out by Force, and expose our selves to a certain Danger, after having declar'd our Weakness. Much less am I of Opinion, that we should offer to retreat by Stealth, for by so doing we shall at once brand our selves with the infamous Epithet of Fugitives, and Moteczuma can with the greatest Ease imaginable possess himself of the Passes, by sending Scouts before to give Notice of our March. And in short, in my Opinion it is by no Means convenient at this Juncture, even to think

think of retiring, for after what Manner soever we attempt it, it will infallibly be at the Expence of our Reputation; and having once lost our Friends and Confederates, whom that and nothing else engages on our Side, we shall assuredly find our selves without one Foot of Ground to tread upon with any Security. For these Considerations, I conclude that they come nearest to the Point who vote for our continuing here, without taking Notice of any Thing till we can go off with Honour, and for trying in the mean while what may happen agreeable to that Hope. Both Resolutions, it is true, are equally hazardous, but not equally honourable; and it would be a Misfortune, unworthy of Spaniards, to chuse to dye a dishonourable Death, when they have it in their Option to do the contrary. I make no Question but that it is necessary for us to stand our Ground where we are; the Manner how we shall effect it is what most employs my Thoughts. We are acquainted with the Rumours which begin to spread among the Mexicans. The Disgrace which has befallen us at Vera Cruz deserves your serious Reflections; and Arguillo's Head presented to Motezuma, is a plain Intimation that he was no Stranger to the Expedition of his General; nay, his very Silence upon that Article is a sufficient Reason for us to suspect his Intentions. Therefore upon considering the whole, I am of Opinion, that in order to maintain our selves in this City, with least Hazard, it will be expedient to resolve upon some great Action, that may give the Indians fresh Cause of Astonishment, and regain what Reputation they may imagine we have lost by these unfortunate Accidents. To which End, rejecting Projects of more Noise than Effect, I hold it absolutely necessary to seize the Person of Motezuma, and bring him Prisoner to our Quarters. A Resolution which I cannot help thinking will strike Terror into them, and must needs keep them within Bounds, and at the same Time will give us an Opportunity of capitulating after such a Manner both with the King and Vassals, as may be most for the Honour of our Sovereign and the common Security. The Pretence of his Imprisonment, according to my Judgment, must be the Death of Arguillo, to which he was privy, and the Breach of the Peace by one of his Generals; with which Two Offences we must give him to understand we have been acquainted, and for which we demand Satisfaction: For it would be to our Disadvantage that they should suppose us ignorant of any Thing which they themselves understand; when at the same Time they believe us superior to them in every Respect, and ignorant of nothing. These and such other Errors of their Imaginations we must encourage, or at least bear with, as extremely favourable to our bold Undertaking. I am very sensible of the Difficulties and Accidents which attend the resolving upon so daring an Enterprize; but great Actions have their Birth from great Dangers; and God will certainly support us, for many are the Wonders, I may venture to say the evident Miracles, which he hath wrought for us in this Expedition; and why should should we not now believe, that this Perseverance of ours is the Effect of his Divine Inspiration? His Service is the principal Motive of our Enterprize; and I cannot be persuaded, that he has conducted us thus far by his extraordinary Providence, to plunge us into unsurmountable Difficulties, and in our greatest Necessity to abandon us to our own Weakness.

He enlarg'd with so much Energy upon this pious Consideration, that he communicated to the whole Council the Vigour of his own Spirit, and brought them over to his Opinion; first the Captains, Juan Velazquez de Leon, Diego de Ordaz, with Gonzalo de Sandoval, and then all the rest applauded the judicious Arguments of their General, and judg'd the Goodness of the Remedy, by the heroic Gallantry of the Resolution. Upon this Foot the Junta broke up, having resolv'd upon the Imprisonment of Motezuma, and leaving the Management of the whole to the Discretion of Cortez.

Bernal Dias del Castillo, who loses no Opportunity of introducing himself as the Author of all great Resolutions, affirms, that he, and some other Soldiers, advis'd the Imprisonment of Motezuma, some Days before they had receiv'd any Intelligence of what had happen'd at Vera Cruz: But other Relations do not agree with his, nor was there Occasion, at that Juncture, to enter upon a Project of so violent a Nature. He should have kept himself within Bounds a little longer, and then his Advice would not have appear'd so improbable, and so much out of Season.

C H A P. XIX.

The Imprisonment of MOTEZUMA: An Account after what Manner it was effected, and how receiv'd amongst his Vassals.

IT must be acknowledg'd, that this Resolution of a few Spaniards, to seize so powerful a Prince in his own Court, amidst all his Guards, was a Boldness without Example. The Recital of this Action, tho' true, seems wholly incompatible with the Sincerity of History, and even in a Romance would surpass the Exaggerations and the Licence of Fable itself. It might have been call'd Temerity, had it been undertaken spontaneously, and with a greater Liberty of Choice: But a Man is not properly term'd rash, who shuts his Eyes to a Danger which he cannot avoid. Cortez saw himself equally lost if he made a Retreat; which would ruin his Reputation, or stood his Ground without retrieving his fading Honour by some extraordinary Exploit. The Mind, when it finds itself surrounded on all Sides with Difficulties, violently flies to that which least presses it; but the Method taken by Cortez was in Truth the most difficult: Whether he was resolv'd to end this Affair, one Way or other, at a Blow, or because he could not accommodate himself to Measures of a middle Nature, we may say, that it was great Magnanimity in him to elevate his Views above the ordinary Level, or that the Military Prudence is not such an Enemy to Extremes as the Civil: But better it is, that this Resolution of his should pass without a Name, or that only regarding the Success, we place it among those imperceptible Means which God made Use of in this Conquest; excluding, in Appearance, all natural Causes or Impulses.

The Hour when the Spaniards were accusom'd to wait upon Moteczuma was chosen for the Execution of their Design, that no Alarm might be given by their making him an unseasonable Visit. Cortez gave Orders to his Men to arm themselves in their Quarters, to saddle their Horses, and to hold themselves in a Readiness, without making any Noise or Movement till they receiv'd fresh Instructions. He possess'd himself of all the Avenues of the Streets leading to Moteczuma's Palace, with small scatter'd Detachments of Soldiers, and went to the Palace, accompany'd by the Captains; Pedro de Alvarado, Gonzalo de Sandoval, Juan Velazquez de Leon, Francisco de Luga; and Alonso Davila, having order'd Thirty private Men of his own chusing to follow at a Distance.

It was no surprizing Sight to see them enter with their Arms, which they usually carry'd as a Military Ornament. Moteczuma as customary, came out of his Apartment to receive the Visit, and they all took their Seats. His Servants, as by his Order they were always accusom'd to do, retir'd to another Part of the Palace; and when Donna Mariana and Geronimo Aguilar were come up, Cortez began his Complaint with a becoming Resentment. First he laid before Moteczuma the Action of his General, who had the Insolence to form an Army and attack his Confederates, in Violation of the Peace and Royal Safeguard, under which they thought themselves secure. Then he urg'd as a Crime, for which he ought to make Satisfaction to God and Man, the spilling the Blood of a Spaniard by the Mexicans, after

after they had made him Prisoner, to revenge upon him in cold Blood the Ignominy of their own shameful Defeat. And lastly, he expos'd in proper Colours, as a Point of still greater Consideration, the Excuse made by Qualpopoca, and his Captains, who declar'd they had undertaken that unjustifiable War by the Emperor's express Order: Concluding, That he thought he ow'd so much to his Majesty, as not to give Credit to an Action so unworthy of his Greatness, as that of favouring the Spaniards in one Place, while he was endeavouring to destroy them in another.

Motezuma chang'd Colour at the hearing of this Charge; and with all the Marks of Conviction interrupted Cortez, denying, as well as he could, that he had ever given any such Orders: But Cortez reliev'd his Confusion by saying, That he did believe it to be undoubtedly true, and was fully convinc'd, that he had no Hand in so base an Action; but that the Spaniards would not be so satisfied, nor even his own Vassals be undeceiv'd after such a Declaration of his General, unless they saw him give some extraordinary Proof of what he affirm'd, that might intirely efface the Impression of such a Calumny; and that therefore he was come to intreat him, that, without making any Disturbance, but as if it was his own spontaneous Choice, he would immediately go with him to the Spanish Quarters, with a Resolution not to stir from thence till it should be made apparent to all, that he had not been concern'd in so perfidious an Action. To which Purpose he represented to him, "That by this generous Confidence, so well becoming a
 " Princely Mind, he would not only appease the just Resentment
 " of the great Monarch whose Servant he was, and the Jealousy
 " of his Companions and Followers; but that it would redound
 " to his own Honour, which at present suffer'd a greater Eclipse
 " by his General's Behaviour; giving his Word, both as a Gentleman and a Minister to the most powerful Monarch in the " Universe, that he should be treated amongst the Spaniards with " all the Respect due to his Royal Character; since they only
 " desir'd to be secure of his good Will, that they might have it " in their Power to serve and obey him with the greater Veneration". Here Cortez left off speaking, and Motezuma likewise remain'd silent for some Moments, as amaz'd at the Boldness of the Proposal. But Cortez, desirous to reduce him by Gentleness, before he would determine on other Ways, added, "That the Quarters he had been pleas'd to assign them, were in one of his " Majesty's own Royal Palaces, where sometimes he was wont to " pass a few Days: That it could not seem strange to his Subjects

jects that he should change his Residence to clear himself of an Aspersion, which, being plac'd to his Account, was the Complaint of one King against another; whereas if the Fault were laid at his General's Door it might be redress'd by a proper Correction, without pushing it to that Extremity, and those Violences, which generally attend the Decision of Quarrels which happen between Sovereigns".

Motezuma could no longer suffer Cortez to enlarge upon Motives to persuade him to a Thing which he judg'd impracticable, and letting him know, he understood what it was he aim'd by such a Proposition; reply'd with some Impatience, "That Princes of his Rank were not accusom'd to deliver themselves up to a Prison, nor would his Subjects permit it, tho' he should forget his own Dignity so far, and stoop to so base a Compliance". To which Cortez answer'd; "That provided he went willingly, without obliging the Spaniards to forget the Respect they had for him, he valu'd not the Opposition of his Subjects, against whom he could employ a sufficient Force, without any Breach of their mutual Amity". The Dispute lasted long, Motezuma still refusing to leave his Palace; and Cortez endeavouring to persuade and secure him without proceeding to Extremities. Motezuma made several Offers, being sensible of the Hazard to which he was expos'd: He propos'd to send immediately for Qualpopoca and all his Officers, and give them up to Cortez to be chastiz'd as he should think proper: He offer'd Two of his Sons as Hostages, to be sent Prisoners to the Spanish Quarters, till such Time as he should perform his Promise; and repeated, with some Signs of Weakness, that he was not a Person who could hide himself, or flee to the Mountains. Cortez approv'd none of these Expedients; and Motezuma refus'd to surrender himself: But the Captains, who were present at this Dispute, suspecting the Danger that might ensue by this Delay, began to lose Patience, intimating, that they must decide the Question by Action; and Juan Velazquez de Leon said aloud, Let us leave off talking, and either seize or kill him. Motezuma took Notice of those Words, which were utter'd with great Passion, and demanded of Donna Marina, What it was that Spanish Captain spoke with so much Vehemence? And she, with a Discretion which never fail'd her upon Occasion, reply'd in such a Manner as if she apprehended being overheard by the Spaniards; My Lord, You run a great Hazard by not giving Way to the Instances of these People: You already know their Resolution, and the supernatural Power that assists them. I am your own Loyal Subject; my Thoughts have no other Employment than to do you Service; and I am likewise likewise one of their Confidents, well acquainted with the Secret of their Intentions. - If you go with them you will be treated with all the Respect that is due to your Person and Dignity ; and by resisting longer, you endanger your Life.

This short Speech, deliver'd with Address, and well tim'd, prevail'd on Motezuma ; who without entring into any fresh Contests, rose from his Seat, and said to the Spaniards ; “ I trust “ myself into your Hands : Let us go to your Quarters, for
 “ so the Gods will have it, since you have carried your Point,
 “ and I am determin'd.” He presently call'd for his Servants, and commanded them to get ready his Chair and Equipage ; and told his Ministers, “ That for certain Reasons of “ State, which he had concerted with his Gods, he had re“ solv'd to pass some Days in the Spanish Quarters : That they “ should understand, and publish to all his Subjects, that he “ went of his own Accord, and for his own Advantage.” He then gave Orders to one of the Captains of his Guards, to bring Qualpapoca Prisoner, with the other Officers concern'd in the Invasion of Zempoala ; to which Purpose he gave him the Royal Signet, which he always carry'd ty'd to his Right Arm, and bad him take Troops along with him, that he might make sure of apprehending the Criminals. All these Orders were given publicly, and Dona Marina explain'd them to Cortez, and the rest of the Spanish Captains, that they might not take Umbrage upon hearing him talk to his Servants, or commit any unseasonable Act of Violence.

He left his Palace without any more Delay, taking with him all his usual Attendance : The Spaniards marched on Foot close by his Chair, surrounding it under Pretence of attending him. A Report was presently spread about the City, that the Strangers had carry'd off the Emperor ; and the Streets were crowded in an Instant, with an Appearance of a general Insurrection ; for they made great Outcries, throwing themselves upon the Ground like Men in Despair ; and some discover'd the Tenderness of their Concern by their Tears : But Motezuma, with an Air of Gaiety and Composure, appeas'd the Tumult, and satisfy'd them in some Measure. He commanded them to cease their Cries ; and at the first Motion of his Hand a profound Silence ensu'd. He then told them, “ That he was “ not going to a Prison, but, for his own Diversion, to pass a few “ Days with his Friends the Strangers ; and this anticipated Sa“ tisfaction, or answering a Question before it was ask'd, con-“ firm'd what he endeavour'd to disown.

When he arriv'd at the Quarters, which, as we have observ'd, were in a Palace built by his Father, he gave Orders for his Guards to disperse the Populace, and to his Ministers to punish, with Loss of Life, any who should occasion the least Tumult or Disturbance. He courteously caress'd the Spanish Soldiers who went out to receive him with respectful Acclamations. The Palace being sufficiently large and convenient to receive him and all his Retinue, he pitch'd upon an Apartment, separate from the Spaniards, to reside in, which was instantly furnish'd by his own Servants with the best Moveables of his Wardrobe; and Cortes plac'd a sufficient Guard of Spanish Soldiers at the Avenues, and doubled those of the Quarters, posting Centinels in the nearest Streets, and omitting no Precaution which an Action of that Consequence requir'd. Orders were given to the Soldiers to permit the Entrance of those of the Emperor's Retinue, who were now all known; as likewise of the Nobility and Ministers who came to make their Court, with Reserve to admit but a certain Number in the Room of others who went out, under Pretext of keeping his Majesty from being crowded. Cortes went to visit him the same Evening, first asking Leave, and observing the same Formalities and Ceremonies as when he waited on him in his Imperial Palace. The like Respect was shew'd him by the Officers and Soldiers of Distinction: They all gave him humble Thanks for the Honour he did that House, as if he came thither by his own Choice; and he was as chearful and pleasant to all, as if none of them were present who had been Witnesses of the Resistance he would have made. He distributed amongst them several Jewels with his own Hand, which he brought on purpose to shew his good Humour; and for all that could be observ'd, either in his Behaviour or Expressions, he never once discover'd the least Weakness under his Confinement, nor ceas'd to maintain the Grandeur of an Emperor in the Constancy with which he endeavour'd to unite those two incompatible Extremes, Majesty and Dependency. To none of his Servants or Ministers, whose Attendance at all Hours was permitted, did he discover the Secret of his Confinement; either for that he was asham'd to own it, or that he fear'd the Loss of his Life, if they should make the least Disturbance. At that Time this Retirement was regarded by all as his own voluntary Resolution; for which Reason, the Presumption of the Spaniards was not so much as talk'd of, being indeed so great, that it was conceal'd by the very Excess of it as a Thing impossible, and exceeding the Bounds of Imagination itself.

Thus was Moteczuma's Imprisonment carry'd on and executed, and in a few Days he became so easy, that he had scarce any Inclination to change his Condition. Nevertheless, his Subjects discover'd at length, that the Spaniards had him under Confinement, notwithstanding they had carefully disguis'd the Violence they had been guilty of, under the specious Mask of a profound Respect. The Guards which were constantly posted at the Avenues of the Emperor's Apartment, and the Spaniards being continually under Arms in the Quarters, left them no Room for Doubt; but no one made the least Offer to treat concerning his Liberty: Nor is it to be imagin'd what Reasons they had; he to continue under that Oppression without any Reluctance, and they to live in the same Insensibility, without shewing any Concern at the Dishonour done to the Person of their Emperor. The Boldness of this Enterprize was very surprizing in the Spaniards, nor less remarkable was this Want of Spirit in Moteczuma; a Prince so puissant, and naturally of so haughty a Disposition, together with the little Resolution which then appear'd in the Mexicans, a Warlike Nation, and excessively zealous in supporting the Dignity of their Sovereigns. We may therefore safely venture to say, that the Hand of God was upon their Hearts; nor will this appear to be a superstitious Credulity, or any great Novelty in his Divine Providence; since the World has long ago seen an Example of His forwarding the Undertakings of His own People, by subduing the Spirit of their Enemies *.

* Joshua, Chap. 5. ver. 1.

C H A P. XX.

MOTEZUMA'S Behaviour under his Confinement, both to his own People and the Spaniards. Qualpopoca is brought Prisoner, and condemn'd to Death by CORTEZ, who causes MOTEZUMA to be put in Fetters, during the Execution of the Sentence.

THE Spaniards, in few Days, saw their Quarters converted into a Palace, without omitting to guard it, as the Prison of Motezuma. The Surprize of this daring Action abated insensibly amongst the Mexicans, with the Novelty of it. Some, disapproving the War made by Qualpopoca upon Vera-Cruz, commended the Procedure of Motezuma, and imputed it to the Greatness of his Soul that he parted with his Liberty as a Pledge of his Innocence. Others believ'd that the Gods, with whom they suppos'd him to have frequent Communication, had advis'd him to that which was most convenient, and would most redound to his Advantage. And others, who judg'd better, acquiesc'd intirely in his Resolution, without being so presumptuous as to examine into it, well knowing that the Actions of Sovereign Princes are to be comprehended, not by the Knowledge, but by the Obedience of their Vassals. He discharg'd the Functions of a Sovereign at the usual Hours; gave Audiences; heard the Advice and Representations of his Ministers; and apply'd himself to the Government of his Kingdoms, both Civil and Military, taking particular Care to conceal his involuntary Confinement.

His Table was serv'd from his Palace with a numerous Attendance of Servants, and greater Abundance than usual: The Overplus was distributed among the Spanish Soldiers; and he constantly sent Dishes of the greatest Delicacy to Cortez and his Captains, all whom he could call by their respective Names, and he had study'd even their several Humours and Dispositions, and knew how to make a proper Use of his Observations in conversing with with them, and would at Times season his Discourse with Pleasantry, in such a Manner as was no Way inconsistent either with Majesty or Decorum. All the Time that he was disengag'd from Business, he pass'd among the Spaniards; and was wont to say, That he was not himself without them. Every one endeavour'd to please him, and the Respect with which they treated him, gave him great Satisfaction. Freedoms and ill Manners extremely disgusted him; and if any one happen'd to be faulty that Way, he made the Offender understand that it shock'd him, and that he was sensible of his being ill us'd: So jealous was he of his Dignity, that he resent'd, with an extreme Indignation, somewhat done in his Presence by a Spaniard, with Design, as he thought, to affront him, and desir'd the Captain of the Guard to employ that Soldier at a greater Distance from his Person, or order him to be punish'd if he again offer'd to appear before him.

Some Evenings he us'd to play with Cortez at Tololoque, which is a Game with little Balls of Gold with which they endeavour'd to strike down certain small Pins of the same Metal, at a proportionable Distance: They play'd for Jewels, or other Curiosities, which were lost or won upon Five Marks. Moteczuma distributed his Winnings amongst the Spaniards, and Cortez gave his to the Emperor's inferior Officers. He would sometimes rally Pedro de Alverado, who counted for them, for his marking in Favour of Cortez, and reproach'd him after a pleasant Manner, for being a bad Reckoner; nevertheless he desir'd him to mark, and take Care to keep a fair Account.

He preserv'd the Sentiments of a Prince, even at Play; regarding the Loss as an Effect of Hazard, and the Gain as a Reward of Victory.

They did not omit in those private Conversations to introduce the Subject of Religion. Cortez discours'd him several Times, endeavouring with Gentleness to make him sensible of his Error. Fryar Bartolemeo de Olmedo seconded his Arguments with the like Piety, but with far greater Energy. Donna Marina very carefully interpreted these Discourses, adding her own private Reasons, as a Person newly undeceiv'd, who had still fresh in her Memory the Motives which converted her: But the Devil had got such an Ascendant over his Mind, that he suffer'd his own natural Reason to be so enslav'd, that no Arguments were of Force enough to touch his obdurate Heart. It was not known whether he had a Communication with the Devil, or if he continued to appear to him as usual, after the Spaniards arriv'd at Mexico; on the contrary, it was believ'd as certain, that from the first Appearance of the Cross of Christ in that City, all those infernal Invocations lost their Force, and the Oracles became silent. But that deluded Prince was so blind and abandon'd to his Errors, that he had no Manner of Inclination to relinquish them, or to advantage himself by the Light which was set before him: This Hardness of Heart was perhaps the miserable Effect of his other Vices and Enormities, with which he had displeas'd God; or a Chastisement for that very Negligence of hearing and not pursuing the Truth.

After Twenty Days, or somewhat more, the Captain of the Guard, who had been sent to the Frontiers of Vera Cruz, return'd, bringing Qualpopoca, and other Captains of the Army Prisoners, who upon Sight of the Royal Signet, had surrender'd themselves without Resistance. The Prisoners were conducted into the Apartment of Motezuma, who, by the Permission of Cortez, spoke to them, but with Reserve; for he was desirous they should conceal the Order he had given them, and suffer themselves to be deceiv'd by this exterior Shew of Confidence which he seem'd to repose in them. The Captain himself went afterwards with them to the Apartment of Cortez, to whom he deliver'd them, saying on the Part of his Master, "That he had sent them to him, that he might find out the Truth, and, at his own Discretion, inflict upon them what Punishment he thought they deserv'd." Cortez shut himself up with them, and they presently pleaded Guilty to all their Charges, acknowledging, That they had violated the Peace by their own Authority; had provok'd the Spaniards of Vera Cruz with their Hostilities, and had procur'd the Death of Arguillo, kill'd by their Order in cold Blood, tho' a Prisoner of War. All this they confess'd without once mentioning that they had any Commission for so doing from Motezuma, till perceiving that the Punishment they had been threaten'd with was no Jest, they endeavour'd to bring him in for an Accomplice, in order to save their Lives: But Cortez utterly refus'd to give Ear to that Evasion, treating it as a mere Chimeras and Invention of theirs, merely to excuse themselves. They were judg'd by a Court Martial, and receiv'd Sentence of Death, with the Circumstance of having their Bodies publicly burn'd before the Royal Palace, as Criminals who had incur'd the Penalty of High Treason.

Measures were immediately taken for the Execution, it being thought necessary not to delay it: But Cortez fearing Moteczuma's Resentment, and that he might endeavour to defend those who were to die for having executed his Orders, resolv'd to terrify him, by some daring Action, which should have threatening Appearances, and remind him of the Subjection in which he was. To this Purpose he bethought himself of another bold Stroke, to which he was certainly induc'd by the great Facility with which he depriv'd him of his Liberty, and the unexpected Patience with which he bore his Confinement. He order'd some of those Fetters to be brought which they us'd to carry with them for Criminals, and with those, carry'd openly in the Hands of a Soldier, Cortez came into the Presence of Moteczuma, and with him came Donna Marina, and Three or Four of his Captains. He did not omit the Respects with which he was wont to accost him; but raising his Voice, and with more Earnestness in his Countenance than ordinary, he told him, "That Qualpopoca, and the other Delinquents, now condemn'd to suffer Death, had confess'd their Crime, and had been found deserving of the Sentence; but added, that they had accus'd him, affirming they had acted wholly by his Orders; and that therefore it was necessary that he should expiate for those strong Presumptions by some personal Mortification: And that Kings, tho' they were not liable to ordinary Punishments, were yet subject to a superior Law, which commands Crowns, and ought, in some Respects, to imitate the Guilty, when they found themselves culpable, and were desirous to satisfy Divine Justice." Having said this, he commanded, with an Air of Authority and Resolution, that they should put Moteczuma in Fetters, without suffering any Reply; and leaving him in that Condition, turn'd his Back and retir'd to his Apartment, giving fresh Orders to his Guards, that for the present they should not suffer him to have any Manner of Communication with his Ministers.

So great was the Astonishment of Moteczuma, to see himself treated with so much Ignominy, that at first he wanted Force to resist, and afterwards Speech to complain. He remain'd a good while like one insensible; and his Servants who attended him, accompany'd his Grief with Lamentation, without presuming to speak; throwing themselves at his Feet, to bear the Weight of his Fetters. He recover'd from his first Confusion and Amazement, and began to break out into Impatience, but soon put a Curb upon himself; and attributing the unhappy Circumstances, stances, to which he was reduc'd, to the Will of his Gods, waited the Event, not without Apprehensions that his Life was in Danger: But soon recalling to Mind who he was, he intrepidly expected his Fate.

Cortez lost no Time in the Execution of what he had resolv'd upon. The Criminals were brought forth to receive their Punishment; all necessary Precautions having first been taken, to prevent any Opposition that might be made. The Execution was perform'd in Sight of an innumerable Concourse of People, not so much as one disorder'd Voice being heard, nor was there the least Ground for Jealousy. The People were seiz'd with a Terror, which was mix'd with Admiration and Respect. They greatly wonder'd at the Authority those Strangers assum'd, who, at the most, ought to have behav'd themselves only as Embassadors from another Prince: But they did not presume to call their Power in question, seeing it was establish'd with their own Sovereign's Approbation, which was the Reason that they flock'd in Crowds to behold that Spectacle, with a Kind of mortify'd Sedateness, or rather Insensibility, which, without knowing in what it consisted, gave Way to Fear. It was of great Help, on this Occasion, that the Invasion of Qualpopoca was ill receiv'd among the Mexicans, and that he had aggravated his Crime, and render'd it far more horrible, by having had the Presumption to charge his Sovereign as an Accomplice, which pass'd as a Thing incredible, and even had the Accusation been true, should have been punish'd as insolent and seditious. This Execution must be regarded as the Third bold Action of Cortez, which was effected, as has been observ'd, upon very irregular Principles: He had determin'd upon it, and had thought it very convenient, and not impossible. He knew the Genius of the People he had to deal with, and was no Stranger to the Value of the great Pledge he had in his Power, whatsoever might happen. Let us leave him to the Use of his own Reason, or at least not bring it into the Judgment of the History, contenting ourselves with relating the Fact as it pass'd, which, after being executed, prov'd of great Consequence for the Security of the Spaniards at Vera Cruz, and stifled, at that Time, those Rumours which began to disturb the Mexican Nobility.

Cortez immediately return'd to the Emperor's Apartment, and, with a chearful Countenance, courteously address'd him, saying, "The Traytors, My Lord, who have been so bold
" as to blemish your Character, have receiv'd condign Punishment;

“ment; and you yourself have sufficiently comply’d with “your Obligation, by submitting to the Justice of God, with “this little Intermission of your Liberty.” Then immediately he order’d the Fetters to be taken off, or as some Authors report, he put himself on his Knees, and took them off with his own Hands: And it is probable, that, out of his innate Prudence, he might endeavour, with such a Piece of Courtesy, to give a greater Recommendation to the Redress of his ill Treatment. Motezuma receiv’d that Part of his Liberty with a tumultuous Joy. He embrac’d Cortez Two or Three Times, and seem’d as if he would never have done with his thankful Acknowledgments.

Then they both sat down, and enter’d into amicable Conversation, and Cortez us’d another Piece of Policy with him, being what he was continually meditating upon; for he order’d all the Guards to retire, and gave him to understand, that whenever he pleas’d he might return to his Palace, the Cause of his Detention being now taken off. This Offer he made him, as being very sure he would not accept it; for he had frequently heard him firmly and resolutely declare, That it was by no Means convenient for him to think of returning to his Palace, or of leaving the Spaniards, till such Time as they should retire from his Court; for that he should greatly suffer in his Reputation, when it should be known amongst his Vassals, that he had receiv’d Liberty from a foreign Hand. A Thought which has been since father’d upon Motezuma as his own, but was indeed influenc’d into him by Donna Marina and some Captains, who represented that to him at the Instance of Cortez, who made Use of his own Reason of State, to hold him more Secure in Prison. But at this Time, Motezuma knowing what Cortez meant by that Offer, quitted the first Motive as foreign to his present Purpose, and made Use of another more artful; for he answer’d, “That he was very much oblig’d to “him for the Intention he had to restore him to his Palace;
 “but that he had taken a Resolution to continue where he “was, out of Regard to the Spaniards; for he knew very well,
 “that as soon as he should be in his Palace, his Nobility and “Ministers would press him to take up Arms against them, “for a Satisfaction of the Wrong he had receiv’d.” By these Means he desir’d they should understand, that he was contented to remain in Prison for their Security, and to protect them with his Authority. Cortez prais’d his Design, and made Acknowledgments for the Care he had of them, as if he intirely believ'd all he said. They both remain'd satisfy'd with their dexterous Management, believing they understood each other perfectly well; and, for their mutual Conveniency, suffer'd themselves to be deceiv'd, with that Sort of Cunning, or Dissimulation, which Politicians place among the Mysteries of Prudence, bestowing the Name of Virtue upon that which indeed is nothing but Artifice and Policy.

The End of the Third Book.

THE
Of the CONQUEST of MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I.

MOTEZUMA is permitted to be seen in publick, going out to the Temples and Recreations. CORTEZ takes some necessary Precautions. The Spaniards are in Doubt, at this Time, whether they should overthrow the Idols of Mexico, or wait for a properer Occasion.

FROM this Day forward Motezuma remain'd a voluntary Prisoner of the Spaniards, and was belov'd of all for his Courtesy and Liberality. His own Servants and Attendants had been hitherto unacquainted with his Gentleness and Moderation, as being Virtues he had acquir'd by his Conversation with Strangers, and far from his own natural Temper. He very often confirm'd the Sincerity of his Mind, both by Words and Actions: And when he thought he had secur'd and merited the Confidence of Cortez, he resolv'd to try him, asking his Permission to visit some of his Temples, giving his Word he would return punctually to his Prison, for so he us'd to call it when none of his own People were present: He acquainted him,

him, “ That he desir’d now for his own Conveniency, and “ for the sake of the Spaniards themselves, to shew himself to “ his Subjects ; for that they began to surmise, that he was “ detain’d in that Confinement by Force, seeing the Cause of his “ Detension was ceas’d by the Punishment of Qualpopoca. And “ that it was to be fear’d, some Commotion, more than bare“ ly popular, might happen, if he did not speedily prevent it “ by this Mark of his Liberty.” Hernan Cortez sensible how much he was in the right, and desirous likewise to humour the Mexicans, answer’d freely and courteously, “ That he might “ go when, and wherever he pleas’d, and that he attributed his “ making such a Request to the Excess of his Goodness, seeing “ both himself and all his People, were intirely at his Service ;
 “ but that he joyfully accepted the Promise he made him of “ not changing his Place of Residence, as one extremely desi“ rous not to be depriv’d of the Honour he had receiv’d.”

His Purpose to visit the Temples caused some Scruples in the General ; but to make the best Conditions he could, he obtain’d of him to abolish all human Sacrifices from that Day ; contenting himself with this Part of the Remedy, since it was not yet Time to go about to endeavour a total Reformation of their Errors ; and where we cannot make Use of the best Means it is Prudence to divide the Difficulty, and overcome Incon-veniencies by Degrees. Motezuma consented to this, effectually prohibiting those Sorts of Sacrifices in all the Temples : And tho’ it may be doubted, whether that Order was exactly comply’d with, yet it is certain, that nothing like it was acted in publick ; and if they ever did perform them, it was with their Gates shut, as if they were doing something that was criminal and unlawful.

His first Sally was to the principal Temple of the City, with his accustom’d Pomp and Attendance : He took some Spanniards along with him, calling them himself, by Way of Prevention, to avoid the Shame of having them order’d to attend him either as Guards or Witnesses of his Actions. The People celebrated this First Appearance of their Sovereign with great Acclamations of Joy. Every one strove with Emulation to express the general Satisfaction by such publick Applauses :
 Not that they truly lov’d him, or that they had forgot the Oppressions under which they labour’d ; but at this Time Duty got the better of their Inclinations, and a Crown has its Influence, altho’ it be upon the Head of a Tyrant. He receiv’d their Acclamations with an Air of Majesty, and was, that Day, very liberal in bestowing Favours upon his Nobles, and likewise in distributing Gifts among the Populace. He afterwards went up to the Temple, resting on the Arms of the Priests, and having comply'd with some of the least scandalous Rites of his Worship, return'd to the Quarters, where he again complimented the Spaniards, declaring, " That the Satisfaction he had

" in residing among them, made him no less desirous to re" turn, than the Discharge of his Promise.

He continued to go Abroad when he pleas'd, without any Thing extraordinary happening, sometimes to the Palace where he kept his Wives, at other Times to his Temples, and Pleasure-Houses, always using the Ceremony of asking Leave of Cortez, or taking him along with him, when what he went about would decently admit of his Company ; but he never lay a Night out of the Quarters, nor so much as once mention'd the changing of his Habitation ; on the contrary the Mexicans began to look upon this Perseverance of their Emperor's as the Effect of his Love to the Spaniards : So that now the Ministers and Nobles of the City visited Cortez, making Use of his Interest to gain their Pretensions ; and all the Spaniards, that were more particularly esteemed by Cortez, were both presented and flatter'd : The common Method of all Courts ; where by Intreaties and Addresses, those Idols call'd the Prince's Favourites, are in a Manner worshipped.

During this Tranquillity, Cortez did not neglect those Precautions which were thought conducive to his Security, nor to forward those high Designs which were forming in his Mind, tho' as yet without any determinate Object, or knowing whether the obscure Flattery of his Hopes would carry him. Immediately upon the Vacancy of the Government of Vera Cruz, by the Death of Juan de Escalante, and that the Ways were clear'd from Danger by the Punishment of the Criminals, he nam'd Captain Gonzalo de Sandoval for that Employment : And because, in the present Posture of Affairs, he would not part with so serviceable a Commander, he sent in Quality of his Lieutenant, certain private Soldier, nam'd Alonso de Grado, a Man of Sense and Ability, but of an unquiet turbulent Spirit, one of those who had distinguish'd themselves in the past Disturbances. It was believ'd, he gave him that Employment both to satisfy him, and to get him out of the Way : But it was no sound Point of Policy to put a Person so little to be depended on, in a Place that was kept for a Retreat, and against any Attempts which might be fear'd from the Isle of Cuba. His Assistance in that Port might have prov'd a great Convenience, if the Vessels which Diego Velasquez had set out in Prosecution of his ancient Claim had arriv'd a little sooner. But Alonso de Grado himself, by his own Proceedings, rectify'd the Error of his Election: For in a few Days after, there were so many Complaints sent from the Inhabitants, and the Towns thereabouts, that it was necessary to bring him away Prisoner, and to send the Governor himself.

Upon the Occasions of these Journeys to and fro, Hernan Cortez order'd, That they should bring some Cordage, Sails, Nails, and other Spoils of the Ships which had been bor'd, with a Design to build two Brigantines, that he might command the Passage of the Lake; for he could not put out of his Mind those broken Expressions which the Tlascalans had heard concerning cutting away the Bridges, and ruining the Causeys. He brought it about, so that Moteczuma himself desir'd it, with the Pretence of seeing the Nature of the large Embarcations used in Spain, and the great Ease with which they mov'd, the Wind doing the Service of Oars; a Curiosity which intirely surpass'd their Imagination, nor could they ever comprehend without ocular Demonstration, because the Mexicans were wholly ignorant of the Use of Sails, and thought it would be a great Conveniency, and redound very much to their Advantage, to have their Mariners instructed in this Art. It was not long before all that had been sent for, from Vera-Cruz, arriv'd; and the Building of the Vessels was begun by some Artists of that Profession, who had list'd in the Army for Soldiers: The Carpenters of the City cutting and bringing the Timber by Moteczuma's Order; so that in a few Days the Brigantines were finish'd, and the Emperor himself resolv'd to make the first Trial, embarking with the Spaniards, that he might take a nearer View of the surprizing Curiosity of that Sort of Navigation. For this Purpose he pitch'd upon one of their most solemn Hunting Days, in a Place where the Lake runs within the Land, that he might have Time enough for his Observations: And on the Day appointed, all the Canoes belonging to the Royal Equipage were early in the Morning upon the Lake, with his whole Family, Retinue, and Huntsmen, reinforcing the Number of Rowers, and ordering them to exert themselves, not without a Presumption that they should gain Credit by their Lightness, to the Disgrace of the Spanish Vessels, which, in their Opinions, were heavy, and difficult to govern: But it was not long before they were undeceiv'd; for the Brigantines set out with Sails and Oars, opportunely favour'd by the Wind, and left the Canoes a long Way behind, to the great Admiration of the Indians. This was a Day of great great Diversion to the Spaniards, as well for the Novelty and Manner of Hunting, as for Costliness and Magnificence of the Banquets: And Motézuma took great Pleasure in rallying his Rowers for their vain Endeavours to come up with the Brigantines, and glory'd in the Victory of the Spaniards as his own. After their Return, the whole City went out in Shoals to behold those floating Houses, as they term'd them in their Language. The Novelty of the Thing had its ordinary Effects, and above all, the Indians admir'd the Management of the Rudder, and the Sails, which to their thinking, commanded both the Water and the Wind: An Invention, which the most judicious among them admir'd as a Dexterity intirely beyond their Comprehension, and the Vulgar, as an Art more than Natural, and a Dominion over the Elements themselves. The Result of all was, that those Brigantines, which were built with a greater View, were much applauded; and the prudent Foresight of Cortez had this happy Effect, That he did what was necessary, and gain'd great Reputation.

At the same Time, he was laying such other Schemes as his active Vigilance dictated. He introduc'd, in Discourse with Motézuma, and his Nobles who came to visit him, the Greatness of his Sovereign, extolling his Clemency, and aggrandizing his Power; gaining them to his Opinion, with so much Address, that they began generally to desire the Alliance he propos'd, and an establish'd Commerce with the Spaniards, as the Interest of the Mexican Monarchy. He likewise made some important Discoveries by Way of Conversation, and pure Curiosity. He inform'd himself very particularly of the Strength and Extent of the Mexican Empire; of its Provinces, Confines, Mountains, Rivers, and principal Mines: Of the Distances of both Seas, their Qualities, Roads, and Harbours: And he was so far from expressing the least Concern about his Observations and Inquisitiveness, that Motézuma, for his better Information, and to gratify his Curiosity, order'd his Painter, with the Assistance of skilful People, to draw out all his Dominions on a Piece of Cloth, like our Maps, which shew'd him every Particular that was worth taking Notice of. He also permitted some Spaniards to go and take a View of the most celebrated Mines; as likewise of the Ports and Bays which were capable of Shipping. This Hernan Cortez propos'd to him, under Pretext of carrying a distinct Relation to his Prince of every Thing that was remarkable; to which Motézuma did not only give his Consent, but order'd some of his Soldiers to accompany them, and dispatch'd Orders that they should have free free Admittance, and be instructed in whatever they desir'd to know; a convincing Sign that he had no Suspicion, and that his Tongue and Heart went together. But at this very Juncture, when the Spaniards had most Reason to avoid starting any Innovations, as pernicious and dangerous to publick Quiet, and good Understanding between them and the Mexicans, our Historians mention a Resolution of theirs, so intirely preposterous and inconsistent with the rest of their Actions, and so very unseasonable, that we are inclin'd to call the Truth of it in Question, notwithstanding we have no sufficient Reasons to omit it. Bernal Diaz del Castillo says, as does likewise Francisco Lopez de Gemara, agreeing sometimes in that which was most unlikely, That they had resolv'd to overthrow all the Idols of Mexico, and to turn the principal Temple into a Church: That they sally'd out to put in Execution what they determin'd, notwithstanding Motezuma resisted, and endeavour'd to hinder them: That the Priests took up Arms, and the whole City rose in Defence of their Gods: That the Contest lasted, without coming to Blows, till such Time, as for the Publick Quiet, the Idols were suffer'd to remain in their Places; and a Chappel was cleans'd, and an Altar erected within the same Temple, where they plac'd the Cross of CHRIST, and the Image of His most blessed Mother: Mass was sung with great Solemnity, and the Altar continu'd many Days; the very Priests of the Idols taking Care to keep it neat, and to adorn it. And this Account Antonio de Herrera likewise gives, but differs from both those Authors, by adding some Circumstances which pass the Limits of Embellishment, if such Rhetorick may be allow'd an Historian: For he describes a Procession of the Spaniards all in Arms, which was made, in order to conduct the holy Images to the Temple; pens the very same Speech that Cortez made, or rather that which he would persuade us he made before the Crucifix; and recounts a Kind of Miracle his Devotion produc'd; taking upon him to say, on what Foundation we know not, That a little after, the Mexicans mutiny'd upon Account of the Want of Rain to refresh their parch'd Fields: That they came to Cortez in a tumultuous Manner, complaining, that their Gods refus'd to send them any Rain, because he had introduc'd strange Deities into their Temples: And that to appease those seditious People, he promis'd them, on the Part of his God, a plentiful Shower of Rain within a few Hours, which Promise Heaven punctually made good, to the great Admiration of Motezuma, and the whole City.

We shall not touch upon the Engagement he laid himself under, by promising Miracles to Infidels for Proof of the Truth of Religion, which might possibly have happen'd thro' the Vehemence of his Zeal; nor shall we wonder at the miraculous Success: For he might likewise have had, at that Juncture, some Spark of that lively Faith which merits and performs Miracles. But the very Action itself is so dissonant; so extremely repugnant to Reason, that it is difficult to believe it any way consistent, either with the Wariness and Character of Cortez, or the Disposition and Learning of Fryar Bartolomé de Olmedo.

But suppose the Action of overthrowing all the Idols of Mexico had succeeded at that Time, and after the Manner related; since it is sometimes lawful for an Historian to pass his Judgment upon the Facts he relates; we find in this several Objections which oblige us, at least, to doubt the Certainty of such a Determination, in so populous a City, where it might reasonably be held impossible to effect what was found so difficult in Cozamel. They were upon a good Footing with Moteczuma: All the Security they enjoy'd depended wholly upon his Favour: He had not given them the least Hopes of admitting the Gospel; but on the contrary was inflexible, and obstinate in his Idolatry. The Mexicans, besides the Bigottry with which they worshipp'd their Idols, and defended their Errors, were very much dispos'd to disturb the Spaniards. What Prudence then could there be in undertaking so unseasonable an Affair against the Inclination of Moteczuma? If we look toward the Views with which it was pretended to have been done, we shall find them intirely useles, and inconsistent with Reason. To begin the Conversion and Undeceiving of Idolaters by destroying their Idols: To regard an unprofitable outside Shew as the Triumph of Religion: To place the holy Images in a Place unclean and detestable; leaving them to the Disposal of Pagan Priests, expos'd to Irreverence, Profaneness, and Sacrilege: And lastly, to celebrate, amongst the Representations of the Devil, the ineffable Sacrifice of the Mass. Antonio de Herrera qualifies these Undertakings with the Title of memorable Actions. Let those judge who shall read it: We for our Parts do not find any proper Reason, either Politick or Christian, to solve so many Inconveniencies. So leaving this Point of the Story doubtful and undecided, we shall only add, that we had much rather, that either these Irregularities had never happen'd after the Manner they are related, or that incredible Truths had never been admitted in History.

C H A P. II.

A Conspiracy which was forming against the Spaniards, by the King of Tezcucó, is discover'd; and MOTEZUMA, partly by his own Vigilance, and partly by the Advice of CORTEZ, quells it, and chastises the Author.

FROM the very first Beginnings of this Enterprize of the Spaniards, the Variety of Accidents they met with was very remarkable; Prosperity and its Contrary alternately attending their Undertakings. Sometimes Hope was absolute, and made Difficulties give Way; and at other Times Dangers sprang from Security itself: All human Designs, and their Successes, being subject to this Condition, being so link'd together, that with little Intermission they succeed each other; and we ought to believe, that this Instability of Earthly Things is necessary to correct our intemperate Passions.

The blind Gentiles plac'd this unaccountable Series of Variety in an imaginary Wheel, which was form'd by a Chaining together of good and bad Success, and was turn'd without Design, by a certain Phantasm, which they call'd Fortune; attributing, by that Notion, to mere Chance every Thing they desir'd, or fear'd, it being, in Truth, the wise Disposition of Divine Providence, that the Felicities and Misfortunes of the World should not continue long in the same Station; that Mankind may enjoy the one with Moderation, may bear the other with Patience, and elevate their Minds to the Search of what is more stable and substantial in the Regions of Eternity.

The Spaniards already found themselves sufficiently secur'd of the Favour of Motezuma, and of the Esteem of the Mexicans: But at the same Time that they enjoy'd this favourable Tranquillity, there arose a fresh Storm, which endanger'd all the Precautions of Cortez, and was occasion'd by Cacumazin, the Emperor's Nephew, King of Tezcucó, and first Elector of the Empire. He was an inconsiderate, hot-headed Youth, rash, and of little Judgment, who being over-rul'd by his Ambition, had had determin'd to make his Name famous amongst the Indians, by declaring himself against the Spaniards, with the Pretence of setting the Emperor at Liberty: His Rank, Dignity, and high Blood gave him Hopes of attaining the Empire at the first Election: And he flatter'd himself, that his Sword being once drawn, he might have a Chance to reach the Crown. His first Care was to endeavour to blacken and to discredit Moteczuma with his People, upbraiding his Pusillanimity and Meanness of Spirit with which he suffer'd that inglorious Subjection. Then he accus'd the Spaniards, representing, in the blackest Colours, the Violence they did the Emperor, the great Interest they were gaining in the Government, and the Foundations they were laying of a Tyranny, without passing by any one Particular which might render them odious and despicable. The next Step he took was to sow the same Seeds of Sedition amongst the rest of the petty Kings of the Lake: And finding their Minds sufficiently dispos'd to an Insurrection, he resolv'd to put his Designs in Execution; to which Purpose he call'd a Council of all his Friends and Relations; which he secretly held in his Palace. There were present at the Assembly the Kings of Cuyocan, Iztapalapa, Tacuba, and Matalcingo, with other Caziques of the adjacent Countries, all Persons of Distinction and Interest, who had the Command of numerous Bodies of Fighting Men, and valu'd themselves upon their Experience in Military Affairs.

He made them an Harangue, supported with the Appearance of Reason, and with a Shew of Zeal for the Publick, concealing his hidden Designs: He consider'd the present Condition of the Emperor, seemingly forgetful of his own Liberty, and spoke warmly of the Obligation they all lay under, to unite like loyal Subjects and Vassals, to deliver him from that inglorious Bondage. He artfully brought in the Proximity of Blood, which oblig'd him to interest himself in what regarded his Uncle. And turning his Discourse upon the Spaniards; What is it we wait for Friends, and Kinsmen, said he, that we open not our Eyes to behold the Reproach of our Nation, and our shameful Sufferings? Shall we, who are born to bear Arms, and who place our greatest Felicity in the Terror we inspire our Enemies withal, shall we, I say, stoop our Necks to the disgraceful Yoke of a few wandering Strangers? What are all their daring and presumptuous Actions but so many Reproaches of our Effeminy, and purely founded upon the Contempt they have of us? Let us but seriously consider what they have atchieved in a few Days, and we shall first be sensible of our own Shame, and next of the Obligation we lye under. They have presumptuously intruded themselves into

into the Court of Mexico, being become insolent by having obtain'd Four Battels, in which the small Resistance they met with from their Enemies made them valiant. They have enter'd triumphantly into the City, in Despite of our King, and contrary to the Inclination of the Nobility and Ministry. They have introduc'd Rebels, and our profess'd Enemies, and keep them in Arms before our Eyes; and by so doing increase the Vanity of the Tlascallans, and trample under Foot the Glory of the Mexicans. They have taken away the Life of a General of the Empire, by a publick and ignominious Execution, audaciously exercising the Jurisdiction of Magistrates, and the Authority of Legislators, in Dominions wherein they are mere Strangers. And lastly, they have the Person of the Great Motezuma in their Quarters, violently forcing him from his Palace; and not content to place Guards upon him in our very Sight, they have proceeded to offer Outrage to his Royal Person, by putting the same Irons upon his Legs with which their most infamous Criminals are wont to be fetter'd. That this is true, we are all sensible; but who will there be found to believe it, without giving the Lye to his own Eyes? An infamous Truth it is, and which ought to be pass'd over, or rather buried in perpetual Oblivion! Well then, what detains you noble and illustrious Mexicans? Your King a Prisoner and you patient and unarmed Spectators! This Appearance of Liberty which you see him enjoy, for some Days past, is not Liberty, but a deceitful Step, by which he has insensibly pass'd to a more indecent Servitude. They have tyranniz'd over his very Heart, and made themselves Masters of his Will, which is the most ignoble Bondage a Prince can undergo. They are the Men who govern and command us; for the Person who ought to command us is a Vassal to them. You now behold him supinely negligent of the Conservation of his Dominions, regardless of the Defence of his Laws, Religion, and his wonted Princely Resolution converted into servile Abjection: We, whose Names and Power are so great in the Mexican Empire, must, with our utmost Strength endeavour to prevent its Ruin. What concerns us all to do, is, to unite our Forces, compleat the Ruin of these Strangers, and set our Sovereign at Liberty. If we shall displease him, by not obeying him so strictly in what we know to be contrary to his Interest, he will be sensible of the Goodness of the Remedy, when he shall find himself deliver'd from the Evil. If it should prove otherwise, Mexico has Men whose Temples will very well fit a Crown; and he will not be the first of our Kings, who for not knowing how to reign, or by reigning negligently, has let the Scepter drop out of his Hands.

Cacumazin deliver'd himself after this Manner, and with so much Warmth, that the whole Assembly followed his Opinion; breaking out into great Menaces against the Spaniards, and offering to serve personally in that Action. Only the Cazique of Matalcingo, who was in the same Degree of Consanguinity to Motezuma, and not without his Pretensions to the Crown, understood the Drift of the Proposal, and did his Endeavour to frustrate the Designs of his Competitor, by saying, That he held it more necessary, and agreeable to the Obligation of all, to acquaint Motezuma with what they design'd, and first take his Leave; since it would be very wrong in them to attack a Place wherein he resided, without first putting his Person in Security, as well for the Danger his Life might be in, as for the Disreputation of destroying those Strangers under the Protection of their Sovereign. The greatest Part of the Congregation contradicted this Proposition as impracticable: Cacumazin let fall some biting Expressions, which the other bore, not to discompose his Hopes. Then their Council broke up, having appointed the Day, concerted the Manner, and recommended an inviolable Secrecy to all.

Motezuma and Cortez had both Notice of this Conspiracy, almost at the same Time: Motezuma by a private Hand, which was suppos'd to be the King of Matalcingo; and Cortez by the Intelligence of his Spies and Confidants. They sought each other to communicate the News they had receiv'd, and Motezuma had the good Fortune to speak first, clearing himself from all Suspicion by such a convincing Proof of his Integrity. He inform'd Cortez of all that had been transacted; express'd a violent Indignation both against his Nephew, the King of Tezcuco, and all the rest of the Conspirators, and propos'd to chastise them with all the Rigour they deserv'd. But Cortez, giving him to understand, that he knew the whole Affair, intimating some Circumstances which left him no Room to doubt, answer'd, That he was very much concern'd to have been the Occasion of such a Disturbance amongst his Vassals, and for that Reason found himself oblig'd to take upon himself the Remedy: That he was therefore come to ask his Leave to march immediately with his Spaniards to Tezcuco, and put a Stop to this Mischiefe before it grew to a Head, by bringing Cacumazin Prisoner, before he should join his Confederates, and oblige them to have Recourse to more violent Remedies.

Motezuma would not admit of this Proposal, but on the contrary absolutely rejected it, as well knowing what a Diminution it would be to his Power and Authority, if he made Use of Foreign Arms to chastise Attempts of this Nature in Persons of that Rank. He therefore desir'd him, for his Sake, to dissemble his Resentment, and told him, as his final Resolution, That he would not consent, neither was it convenient that either himself or any of his People should make the least Motion, lest such a Proceeding might increase the Peoples Hatred to them, and render them more obstinate in insisting upon the Spaniards Removal from his Court ; but that they should rather help to subject those Rebels, by assisting him with their Counsel, and by acting, if there was Occasion, as Mediators.

He was of Opinion that it would be best first to try gentle Means, and that the Dependance his Nephew had on him would easily bring him to Reason, by reminding him of the Obligations he lay under, and by inducing him to enter into an amicable Correspondence with the Spaniards. To which Purpose he sent for him by one of his principal Attendants, who acquainted him with the Order he brought from the Emperor, and told him on the Part of Cortez, That he desired his Friendship, and to have him nearer that he might make him sensible of it. But he, who had now cast off all Obedience, and consulted nothing but his Ambition, with the Arrogance and Disrespect of one abandon'd, and precipitately bent upon his own Ruin, return'd the Emperor a most insolent Answer, and treated Cortez with so much Haughtiness and Contempt, that he made fresh Instances to Motezuma for Permission to chastise him ; which Proposal was a second Time rejected by the Emperor, who told him, That this was one of those Cases, which rather requir'd the Assistance of the Head than of the Hands ; and that he should leave it to him to manage according to the Experience, and Knowledge he had of those Extravagancies, and of the Source from whence they proceeded.

He carried himself afterwards with great Reservedness amongst his Ministers, seemingly contemning the Offence to induce the Offender to be less circumspect ; to which Purpose he told them, That he look'd on this bold Undertaking of his Nephew, as the Heat of Youth, and the first Motions of a Man without Consideration. But at the same Time he form'd a secret Conspiracy against the Conspirator himself ; making Use of some of his own Servants, who were either truly sensible of their Duty, or were gain'd by the help of Gifts and Promises ; by whose Means he contriv'd it so, that Cacumazin was assaulted one Night in his House, embark'd on a Canoe, that was ready prepar'd, and brought Prisoner to Mexico, without his being able to make any Resistance. It was then that Motezuma discover'd all his dissembled Anger, and without permitting that unhappy Prince to appear before him, or giving Room for any of his Excuses, he commanded, with the Approbation and Concurrence of Cortez, that he should be put into the closest Prison of the Nobles ; treating him as a Criminal who had committed an unpardonable Offence, and was to suffer capital Punishment.

There was at this Time in Mexico a Brother of Cacumazin, who, some few Days before, had happily escap'd out of his Hands, he having design'd to deprive him of his Life upon some domestick Jealousies of small Foundation. Motezuma took him under his Protection in his Palace, and for his greater Security enroll'd him in his Family. He was a young Man of Courage and great Merit, well esteem'd both in the Court, and amongst his Brother's Vassals; and the Circumstance of his being persecuted had more recommended him both to the one and to the other. Cortez cast his Eyes on him; and desiring to gain him for a Friend, and bring him over to his Party, he propos'd to Motezuma, to give him the Investiture, and Dominion of Tezcuco, since his Brother had render'd himself incapable of resuming his Government, by having conspir'd against his Sovereign, and told him, "That it would not be safe at
 " at that Juncture to punish a Delinquent of so much Interest
 " with Loss of Life, when the Minds of the Nobles were in " such Commotion: That depriving him of his Kingdom,
 " would be giving him a Kind of Death which made less Noise,
 " and was sufficiently severe to strike a Terror into his Accom-
 " plices: That this young Man was of a far better Disposition,
 " already indebted to him for his Life, and would likewise be
 " oblig'd to him for his Crown, and remain under greater Ob" ligations of Obedience, in Opposition to his Brother. And
 " lastly, that by this, he gave the Kingdom to the Person who " had the Right of Succession, and left to his own Blood the " Dignity of First Elector, which was of so great Authority in " the Empire.

Motezuma was so highly pleas'd with this Thought of Cortez, that he immediately communicated the same to his Council, where his Resolution was applauded as merciful and equitable: And the Ministers formed a Royal Decree, whereby Cacumazin was dispossest'd of all his Honours and Dignities, according to the Custom of that Country, as a Traytor and Rebel to his Prince, and his Brother nam'd for Successor of the Kingdom and Electorate. Motezuma afterwards order'd him to his Presence; and during the Time of his Investiture, which had its particular Ceremonies and Solemnities, he, with a Majestick Air, made a Speech, wherein, with all possible Succinctness, he hinted at all Motives which ought to oblige him to an inviolable Loyalty; and publickly declar'd, "That he had de-
 " termin'd this Affair purely by the Advice of Hernan Cortez,
 " giving him to understand, it was to him he ow'd his Ad" vancement." It may be imagin'd, that the Person interested

was

was not unacquainted with this before ; for it was not a Time to conceal Obligations. But what is observable, is the Care Motezuma took to have Cortez well esteem'd, and to gain the Minds of his People in Favour of the Spaniards.

The new King immediately departed for his Court, and was well receiv'd, and crown'd with great Acclamations and Rejoicings ; all People celebrating his Exaltation upon different Motives : Some, because they really lov'd him, and were concern'd at his Persecution ; others, out of ill Will to Cacumazin ; and the greatest Part to signify their Abhorrence of his Crime. This Manner of Chastisement, without Blood-shed, was highly applauded throughout the whole Empire, and was attributed to the superior Judgment of the Spaniards ; for no one expected such Moderation from Motezuma. And the very Novelty of it was of so much Consequence, that the other Conspirators presently dispers'd their Troops, and, unarm'd, had Recourse to their Monarch's Clemency. They made their Application to Cortez, and thro' his Means, at last obtain'd a Pardon ; and thus the Storm blew over that had been rais'd against him, and he got clear of the Danger with Advantage, partly by his own Industry, and partly by favourable Incidents : For Motezuma was oblig'd to him for the Tranquillity of his Realm ; the First Prince of the Empire ow'd to him his Dignity ; and by shewing Favour to the rest, who had endeavour'd to destroy him, he found himself supported with a new Stock of Friends, and People who stood indebted to him.

C H A P. III.

MOTEZUMA resolves to dispatch CORTEZ by answering his Embassy. He assembles his Nobles, and gives Orders, That the King of Spain should be acknowledg'd for Successor of that Empire; determining to obey him, and to pay him Tribute, as Descendant from their first Conqueror.

TH E S E Commotions, which had employ'd the whole Care of the Emperour, being quieted, he felt that Disturbance, which the Remembrance of past Danger leaves in the Imagination. He reason'd with himself about his present State; and it seem'd to him that the Spaniards had made too long a Stay at his Court; and that they began to think, that the Goodness he had us'd towards them gave them a Right over his Liberty. This induc'd him to resolve to familiarize himself less with them, and to change the Manner of his Conduct. He was asham'd of the Pretence Cacumazin had made Use of in his Conspiracy, attributing his good Nature to Want of Spirit; and sometimes he accus'd himself, as having given too much Occasion for those Murmurs. He was concern'd to see his Authority so diminish'd, which is a Jealousy that constantly attends a Throne, and takes up the first Place amongst those Passions whereby Monarchs are govern'd. He was apprehensive of a fresh Disturbance amongst his Vassals; and lest new Sparks should arise from that newly extinguish'd Fire, he was desirous of letting Cortez know, That it was Time to think of his Departure, but could not meet with a handsome Opportunity to propose it to him; for Jealousies are of a Nature not to be easily confess'd, because they express a Kind of Fear. He continued some Days in this Irresolution; but at length determin'd, that it was proper upon all Accounts, to hasten the Departure of the Spaniards, and thereby to remove that Obstacle to his Subjects Loyalty.

This Affair he manag'd with notable Conduct and Prudence; for before he communicated his Intention to Cortez, he had prepar'd Replies to all the Arguments he could bring for his longer Continuance there. He waited till Cortez came to visit him as he was wont, receiving him without the least Alteration in his Behaviour or Countenance, and introduced the Discourse concerning the King of Spain, after the same Manner as at other Times, declaring, what a mighty Veneration he had for him; and at last, artfully bringing about what he at first had propos'd, said, That he had been thinking to make a voluntary Acknowledgment of that Vassalage, which was due to him, as Successor of Quezalcoal, and Proprietary Lord of that Empire. So he really understood it, and in this only he spoke without Disguise: but he did not intend, at that Time, to surrender his Dominions to the King of Spain, but to get rid of Cortez, and to hasten his Dispatch; to which Purpose he added, That he intended to assemble the Nobility of his Realms, and to make this Acknowledgment in their Presence, that they might all, after his Example, pay Obedience, and establish the Vassalage by some Contribution, in which he would also set the Example; for that he had already provided several Jewels, and precious Stones of great Value, to discharge this Obligation on his Part, and doubted not but his Nobles would contribute on theirs the richest and most valuable Things they had; nor did he question, but that so considerable a Quantity wou'd be collected, as might be fit to appear before the Presence of his Prince, as the first Acknowledgment of the Mexican Empire.

This was his Proposal, and in this he granted at once every Thing that he thought the Spaniards could have the Boldness to desire; satisfying both their Ambition and Avarice, in order to deprive them of all Pretence for remaining longer in his Court, before he order'd them to depart: And he conceal'd, with so much Artifice, the Point he aim'd at, that Hernan Cortez; at that Time, did not discover it, but return'd him Thanks for that Liberality, without seeming surpriz'd at it, or magnifying it, as one who accepted, on the Part of his Master, that which he thought his Due: and he was extremely well satisfy'd for having obtain'd more than he imagin'd practicable, at the present Juncture of Affairs. He afterwards, to his Captains and Soldiers, extoll'd the mighty Service they should do their King, if they could bring it about to have so powerful a Monarch declar'd his Subject and Tributary: He discours'd of the immense Riches which with this News would be accompany'd, that it might not appear a bare Relation, and run the Risque of being thought incredible. And in Truth, he had no Thoughts at that Time of quitting his Enterprize, nor did he believe it a Matter of any great Difficulty to maintain himself there, till they should know in Spain, the Condition in which he was, and send him Orders how to proceed. A Security into which he was brought by the great Favour of Moteczuma, the Friends he was daily making, the Success with which all his Undertakings was attended, or by some superior Cause, which animated him to the Expectation of still greater Matters, lest he should lose Courage, and scruple to proceed when he was within Sight of his utmost Desires.

But Moteczuma who drew his Lines towards a different Center, and knew how to resolve at Leisure, and execute with Speed, immediately dispatch'd away his Convocatory Orders to the Carziques of his Realm, as was customary when any publick Affairs of more than ordinary Importance occur'd, without citing those who were at a great Distance, that no Time might be lost in what requir'd the utmost Dispatch. It was not many Days before they all arriv'd at Mexico, with the Attendance they us'd to bring to Court, which was so numerous, that, had the Occasion and Custom been unknown, it might have alarm'd the whole City. Moteczuma assembled them all in the Apartment where he had taken up his Residence, and in the Presence of Cortez, (who was call'd to this Congress, and, with his Interpreters and some of his Captains, took his Place amongst them) made them a Speech, in which he laid before them the Motives, and qualify'd the Harshness of that extraordinary Resolution he had taken. Bernal Diaz del Castillo says, He held Two several Assemblies, and that Cortez did not assist in the First: It may be one of his Equivocations; for Hernan Cortez himself would not have conceal'd it in the Second Relation of his Expedition; and besides as they were then endeavouring to satisfy him, and were to place a Confidence in him, it was not a proper Time for secret Assemblies,

This Transaction was carry'd on with great Splendor and Authority; for the Nobles and Ministers which resided at Mexico, assisted likewise at it. And Moteczuma, casting his Eyes upon the Assembly with an agreeable and becoming Majesty, began his Harangue; gaining the good Will and Attention of all, by laying before them, How much he lov'd them, and how much they were oblig'd to him; putting them in Mind, That it was from him alone they held all the Honours and Dignities they possess'd: And from that Beginning inferr'd, how much they ought ought to believe that he would propose nothing to them but what was for their Interest, after having consider'd on it with mature Deliberation, consulted with his Gods, and receiv'd evident Signals of their Approbation.

He affected many Times these Lights of Inspiration, to give something that savour'd of Divinity to his Resolutions, and on this Occasion they believed him; for it was no Novelty for the Devil to favour him with his Answers. Having laid this Foundation of Recrimination and Mystery, he gave a brief Relation of. "The Origin of the Mexican Empire; the Expedition of the Nabatlacas; the prodigious Actions of Quezalcoal, their First Emperor; the Prophecy he left when he departed for the Conquest of the East; foretelling, by the Impulse of Heaven, That his Descendants should return to govern these Countries." Then he touch'd, as a Point undoubted, "That the King of Spain, who rul'd in those Eastern Regions, was lawful Successor of the same Quezalcoal." And added, "That being the Monarch, from whom was to proceed that Prince so much desir'd amongst the Mexicans, and so often promis'd in the Oracles and Prophecies, which that Nation reverenc'd, they ought unanimously to acknowledge in his Person that Hereditary Right, giving to his Blood that, which for Want of it, had been introduc'd by Election: And that had he come himself in Person, as he had only sent his Embassadors, he was so much a Lover of Justice and Equity, and bore his Vassals so great an Affection, that for their greater Felicity, he would have been the First to strip himself of the Dignity he possess'd, by laying the Crown at his Feet, either to leave it to his absolute Disposal, or to receive it again from his Hand. But owing to his Gods the good Fortune that this so desirable News was arriv'd in his Time, he was resolv'd to be the First to shew his Satisfaction, and had determin'd immediately to pay him Obedience, and to do him some considerable Service: To which End he had destin'd the most precious Jewels of his Treasury, and desir'd that his Nobles would follow his Example, not only in making the same Acknowledgment, but in accompanying it with some Contribution of their Riches, that the Service being greater might appear with the greater Splendor in the Presence of that Prince."

In this Manner Motezuma concluded his Discourse, tho' he did not utter it at all without Interruption; for in Spite of all the Efforts

Efforts made upon himself, in this Act of his, when he came to pronounce himself Vassal to another Prince, he found something so shocking, and so repugnant to his Nature in those Expressions; that he paus'd a while, as if he wanted Words to proceed, and at the Conclusion, he shew'd his Concern so publickly, that some Tears were seen trickling down his Cheeks, which seem'd as if they had escap'd his Eyes without their Consent. And the Mexicans sensible of his Disturbance, and of the Cause from whence it proceeded, began likewise to shew their Concern, breaking forth into loud Sighs, desiring in Appearance, not without something that savour'd of Flattery, that by the Noise they made, their Fidelity should be taken Notice of; so that Cortez thought it necessary to desire Liberty to speak, in order to encourage Motezuma, and put him out of the Perturbation he was in, said "That it was not the " Intention of the King his Sovereign to dispossess him of his " Royal Dignity, nor to make the least Innovation in his Go" vernment; but that all he desir'd was, that they would, at " the present Assembly, settle his Right to the Succession, in " Favour of his Descendants, or Posterity, by Reason of his " being so far distant from those Regions, and so taken up in " other Conquests, that the Case mention'd in their Traditions
 " and Prophecies might not happen in many Years." With which Explanation Motezuma recover'd Heart, re-assum'd an Air of Tranquillity, and finish'd his Discourse as has been observ'd.

The Mexicans remain'd astonish'd, and utterly confounded to hear such a Proposal, wondering at it, as a Thing so very inconsistent, and so far unbecoming the Majesty of so powerful a Monarch, and a Prince so extremely jealous of his Authority. They look'd on each other without daring either to contradict, or to give any Sign of Consent, as being apprehensive that by doing either they should but confirm him the more in his strange Determination. This respectful Silence lasted till his Prime Minister, as a Person who had a better Knowledge of his Prince's Disposition than any other, took upon him to speak for the rest, and said; " That all the No-
 " bles who compos'd that Assembly respected him as their
 " Lord and natural Sovereign, and should be ready to obey
 " whatever his Majesty had been pleas'd to propose, and to " follow any Example he should think fit to set them; they " not doubting but that he had well weigh'd every Thing, and " had consulted with Heaven; nor had they any Instrument
 " more sacred than that of his Voice, whereby to be inform'd
 " of the Will of their Gods."

The whole Assembly agreed in the same Opinion ; and Hernan Cortez, when it came to his Turn to make his Acknowledgments, dictated to his Interpreters a Speech no less artful than the former, in which he gave Thanks to Motezuma, and all who were present, for this Demonstration of their Respect ; accepting their Service in the Name of his King, without seeming to think it strange that they comply'd with their Obligations ; but rather as one who receives his Debt, and is pleas'd with his Debtor's punctual Payment. But the Tears Motezuma had let fall were not sufficient, at that Time, to make Cortez suspicious of his Liberality, or to induce him to believe that he was then making Way for his final Dispatch, in which his being carry'd away by the first Appearance will admit some Excuse : For when he found that unaccountable Opinion concerning the Descendants of Quezalcoal receiv'd amongst them as an infallible and incontestable Truth, and that they look'd upon Don Carlos to be undoubtedly one of them, this Demonstration of their Respect did not appear so very irregular as to make him suspect it to be Artifice or Affectation. Upon which Supposition he might also attribute Motezuma's Tears and Perturbation of Mind, when he came to pronounce the Clauses of Vassalage, to the same Violence with which a King quits a Crown, and measures the vast Difference there is between Sovereignty and Subjection ; a Case in which the Spirit of a Man may sink without doing Wrong to his Courage. But it is to be believ'd, that Motezuma, notwithstanding he look'd on the King of Spain as lawful Successor of the Empire, had no Intention to make good what he offer'd : His whole Aim was to get rid of the Spaniards, and to take Time afterwards to consult his Ambition, without laying any great Stress upon his Word ; Dissimulation being, amongst those Barbarian Princes, in its natural Center ; which unworthy Character, sufficient to stain the Honour of a private Person, other barbarous Statesmen have plac'd amongst the necessary Arts of Reigning.

However it was, from that Day forward, the Emperor Charles the Fifth was acknowledg'd lawful and hereditary Lord of the Mexican Empire, in the Opinion of all those People ; and indeed destin'd by Heaven to a more real Possession of that Crown : Upon which Resolution a Publick Instrument was form'd, with all necessary Solemnities, according to the Method they us'd of paying Homage to their Kings : And tho' this Submission of Motezuma and his Vassals to the Emperor gave to Don Carlos little more than the bare Name of King of the Indies, yet it was a Kind of mysterious Insinuation of that Title which he afterwards acquir'd by Force of Arms, upon just Provocation, as we shall see in its proper Place, and was a particular Circumstance which concurr'd in the Justification of the Conquest of that Empire, besides other Considerations, which, in other Parts of the World do not only permit of a War, but likewise render it lawful, reasonable, and justifiable, whensoever it appears to be undertaken as the necessary Means for the Introduction of the Gospel.

C H A P. IV.

The Gold and Jewels design'd for the Present is deliver'd into the Possession of CORTEZ. MOTEZUMA resolutely tells him, that he must think of his Departure, which he endeavours to delay. Advice brought of the Arrival of a Squadron of Spanish Ships upon the Coast.

MO T E Z U M A, lost not a Moment's Time, but us'd his utmost Diligence to bring about the Designs he had in View, being now fully resolv'd to dispatch the Spaniards as soon as possible, as being weary of the Violence he did himself under that Kind of Subjection which he found he was oblig'd patiently to continue in as if it was of his own Choice. Full of this Care, he deliver'd to Cortez the Present he had provided, which consisted of various Curiosities in Gold, with precious Stones, some which he us'd about his own Person, and others that were kept for Grandeur, and serv'd for Ostentation; different Pieces of the same Kind and Metal, in the Shapes of Animals, Birds, and Fishes, the Excellency of the Workmanship delighting the Eye, and extremely enhancing their Value: A great Number of those Stones called Chalcuites, in Colour like to Emerald, and in the vast Esteem they had of them answering like our Diamonds; together with some Pictures made of Feathers, whose Colours being natural, either imitated Nature better, or else they had less to feign in Imitation: The Gift of a Royal Mind, who found himself oppress'd, and desir'd to put a Price upon his Liberty. After that came the Presents of the Nobles, under the Title of a Contribution, which consisted of Pieces of Gold, and other Curiosities

Curiosities of the same Sort, in which they vied with each other in their Obedience to their Prince, and not without some Mixture of their own Vanity. All came directed to Motezuma, and pass'd on, by his Order, to the Apartment of Cortez, who nam'd a Receiver and Treasurer, that they might take an exact Account of what was deliver'd; and in few Days they amass'd such a Quantity of Gold, that besides the Jewels, precious Stones, and Pieces of curious Workmanship, after they had melted down the rest, they found Six Hundred Thousand Pesos of Gold in Barrs of good Alloy; out of which the Fifth Part was set aside for the King, and of the Remainder, a Second Fifth for Hernan Cortez, with the Approbation of his People, and to defray the Expence of providing for the publick Necessities of the Army. He likewise set aside the Sum for which he stood accountable to Diego Velasquez, and that which his Friends in the Island of Cuba had lent him; the rest was divided amongst the Officers and Soldiers, including those who were at Vera Cruz.

Those who had Employments, had equal Shares; but amongst the private Men there was some Difference made, for they were distinguish'd and best rewarded who had done best Service, or been least troublesome in the past Disturbances. An Equity of a very dangerous Nature, where just Rewards are look'd upon as Grievances, and Distinction of Merit occasions Complaints. There were great Murmurings, and bold Words utter'd against Hernan Cortez, and his Captains: For at the Sight of such a Mass of Wealth those whose Deserts were least requir'd an equal Recompence with the most deserving. Their insatiable Avarice could not possibly be satisfy'd, nor was it convenient to publish the Reasons of that unequal Distribution.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo discusses this Point very indecently, and wasts too much Paper in considering and enlarging upon the Hardships the poor Soldiers underwent in this Distribution, and goes so far as to set down every minute Expression this or that Soldier us'd amongst his Companions.

He speaks more like a necessitous Soldier, than a Historian: And Antonio de Herrera follows him without making sufficient Reflection; for it is no less a Fault in History, to pass over that which ought to be well consider'd, than it is to dwell too long upon that which may be omitted. But both the one and the other agree, that this Discontent of the Soldiers was quieted by the Liberality of Cortez, who gave out of his own Dividend, all that was necessary to satisfy those who complain'd; and afterwards wards greatly prais'd the Generosity of that General; after this Manner rather overthrowing than confirming, what they ought not at all to have mention'd in their Narration.

Moteczuma, so soon as he had, on his own Part, and on that of his Nobles, comply'd with the Acknowledgment of Submission offer'd in the Assembly, sent for Cortez, and with an unaccustom'd Air of Severity, told him, "That it was reasonable
 " he should now begin to think of his Journey, since he was
 " intirely dispatch'd; and that the Motives, or Pretences for his " Stay being ceas'd, and he having receiv'd, for the Service of " the King his Master, so favourable an Answer to his Embassy,
 " his Vassals would not fail of surmising that he had greater
 " Views, if they saw him voluntarily continue longer in his
 " Court, nor could he himself any ways support him,
 " when Reason was not on his Side." This short Intimation of his Mind, deliver'd in a Sort of menacing Tone, with Signs of a premeditated Resolution, was so unexpected a Novelty to Cortez, that he paus'd for some Moments, to call to his Assistance his wonted Discretion in the Reply he was to make; and discovering then the Artifice of those Liberalities and Favours of the late Assembly, the first Motion of his Mind prompted him to return a resolute Answer, and to have Recourse to that superior Genius, by which he had the Ascendant over him; and whether it was with this Intent, or that he began to suspect Moteczuma might have some Force ready to back him, since he had deliver'd himself in such warm and plain Terms, he privately gave Orders to one of his Captains to make his Soldiers take to their Arms, and to be in a Readiness for any Occasion that might offer. But advising better with himself, he determin'd to seem for the present to acquiesce to his Pleasure, and to give some Reason for the Delay of his Answer, he handsomly excus'd his being embarrass'd at seeing him mov'd more than ordinary, tho' what he had been pleas'd to order was nothing but what was very reasonable. He told him, "That " he would instantly go about preparing for his Journey:
 " That he had now every Thing ready which he wanted; and " that having before design'd to execute it without farther De" lay, he had come with a Resolution of begging his Permission
 " for the building of some Vessels proper for so tedious a Voyage,
 " having, as his Majesty well knew, lost those in which he came
 " thither." With this artful and prudent Reply, he express'd his Obedience, and suspended the Execution, freeing himself from his present Embarrassment, and gaining Time for farther Resolutions.

It is said that Motezuma had provided Fifty Thousand Men to support his Determination, and that he came fully resolv'd to make himself obey'd by Force in Case he found there was any Occasion : But it is most certain, that he greatly apprehended the Answer of Cortez, and desir'd to avoid a Rupture ; for he embrac'd him with particular Affection, being highly pleas'd with his Reply, which he seem'd not to have expected. He was pleas'd that Cortez had depriv'd him of the Opportunity of putting himself in a Passion, or breaking with a Person for whom he had not only a Friendship, but likewise an Esteem, which came very short of Respect ; and finding himself now free from those Apprehensions, he said, “ That it was not his Intention to “ hasten his Departure without furnishing him with the necessary “ Means to put it in Execution : That he should, without De“ lay, dispose every Thing for building of the Vessels ; and in “ the mean Time he need not give himself any Disturbance, “ nor stir from his Court. That it was sufficient for the Sa“ tisfaction of his Gods, and the Quiet of his Subjects, that “ he had shewed such Readiness to obey the Commands of the “ first, and to comply with the Demands of the latter.” At this Time the Devil wearied him with horrible Threats, deluding him with Voices real or imaginary from the Mouths of his Idols, to irritate him against the Spaniards. The fresh Rumours which were spreading amongst his People, who very much resented that he had made himself the Tributary of a strange Prince, gave him likewise great Uneasiness, they looking upon this quitting of his Authority as a new Grievance, which in Time would fall heavy upon the Backs of his Vassals ; so that he found himself attack'd on the one Side by Politicks, and the other by Religion ; and it was very much that he determin'd to give this Permission to Cortez, as being most observant towards his Gods, and no less superstitious to the Idol of his Ambition.

Orders were instantly issu'd out for the building of the Vessels. The Journey was publish'd, and Motezuma made Proclamation, that all the Carpenters of the Country round about should repair to Ulua, assigning the Places where they were to cut Wood, and the Towns which were to contribute Indians of Burthen to carry it to the Dock. Hernan Cortez, for his Part, affected an outward Shew of Compliance : He immediately dispatch'd away the Masters and Workmen who had been employ'd in building the Brigantines, and were well known now amongst the Mexicans. He discours'd publickly with them of the Size and Quality of those Vessels, ordering them to make Use

Use of the Iron-Work, Rigging, and Sails of those which were sunk, and all the Talk was of the Voyage, as if it had been resolv'd on. Thus he lull'd the Mexicans asleep, quell'd the growing Murmurings, and confirm'd himself in Motezuma's Confidence.

But at the Time when the Builders were to set out for Vera Cruz, the General sent for Martin Lopez, a Biscainer by Nation, who went as chief Director, who as he was a consummate Master in the Art of Building, was the better qualify'd to do his Duty as a well-disciplin'd Soldier: Cortez gave him privately in Charge; "That he should go on by little and little in the building of those Vessels, and endeavour to prolong the Work as much as he possibly could, but still with such an artful Management, that they might go on slowly, without seeming to delay." His Design was, under the Colour of this, to keep himself still at Court, and give Time to his Commissaries Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero and Francisco de Montejo, to return from Spain, in Hopes they would bring him some fresh Recruits, or at least the Dispatches and Orders he wanted for the Direction of his Undertaking, which he still firmly resolv'd to prosecute: And in Case the last Necessity should force him out of Mexico, he design'd to wait for them in Vera Cruz, and maintain himself under the Protection of that Fortres, making use of the Nations in Friendship with him to oppose the Mexicans: An admirable Constancy, which not only supported him in the present Difficulties, but provided against those which might afterwards happen.

Within a few Days happen'd another Accident which quite disconcerted all these Measures, calling his Prudence and Courage to a new Trial. Motezuma had Intelligence brought him, that Eighteen Sail of Ships were seen off the Coast of Ulua, and his Ministers, who commanded in that Part of the Country, had sent the said Ships and their Number painted upon Cloths, which serv'd instead of Letters; with a Description of the People they had seen in them, and some Characters which signify'd what they suspected of their Intentions; being Spaniards in Appearance, and arriving at a Time when they treated of dispatching those who were already in his Court. Whatever Impression these Representations had on the Mind of Motezuma, the Result was, that he immediately sent for Cortez, laid the Picture before him, and told him, "That now the Provision he was making for his Journey was unnecessary, since some Ships of his Nation were arriv'd upon the Coasts, in which he might embark." Cortez view'd the Painting with more Attention than Surprize; and though he did not understand the Characters which describ'd them, he knew, by the Habit of the People, and the Make of the Vessels, enough for him not to doubt their being Spaniards. The first Motion of his Heart would have inclin'd him to Joy, since he believ'd for certain that his Commissaries were arriv'd, and flatter'd himself that they had brought him very considerable Supplies in such a Number of Vessels. The Imagination is easily carry'd away to that which it desires, and he could not suppose at that Time, that so powerful an Armada was design'd against him; for his own sincere, and noble Manner of Acting would not permit him to entertain any other Thoughts, the Well-intentioned being with Difficulty brought to believe that which is against Justice and Reason. His Answer to Moteczuma was, "That he would depart immediately, if those Ships were bound back for any of the King of Spain's Dominions." Nor did he think it all surprizing, that he should have the First News of these Particulars, because he was no Stranger to the indefatigable Diligence of their Couriers, and therefore he added, "That it would not be long before he should have an Account from the Spaniards who were at Zempoala, by which Means they should know with Certainty whither those Ships were bound, and the Designs of their Owners; and then he should see, whether it would be necessary to proceed in the building of the Vessels, or whether he might undertake his Journey without them."

Moteczuma approv'd of the Proposal, being well pleas'd with his Readiness, and acknowledg'd him to be in the Right: But in a short Time Letters came from Vera Cruz, in which Gonzalo de Sandoval sent Information; "That those Ships belong'd to Diego Velasquez, and brought Eight Hundred Spaniards to oppose Hernan Cortez, and his Conquest." Which unexpected Stroke he receiv'd in the Presence of Moteczuma, and stood in Need of all his Courage and Resolution to conceal his Perturbation of Mind. He found himself in Danger from the very Quarter from whence he expected Succour. The Juncture was truly desperate: Perplexity on every Side: Discontents and Murmurings in Mexico, and Enemies upon the Coast. But doing the best he could to compose himself, he conceal'd his Concern from Moteczuma, soften'd the Account amongst his own People, and retir'd afterwards to reason calmly, and be at more Liberty to think of a Remedy.

C H A P. V.

An Account of the Preparations made by DIEGO VELASQUEZ for the Destruction of HERNAN CORTEZ: The Army and Fleet which he sent against him, under the Command of PAMPHILO de NARVAEZ: His Arrival upon the Coast of New Spain; and his fruitless Attempt to reduce the Spaniards of Vera Cruz.

WE left Diego Velasquez full of Distrusts, impatient that his Endeavours to detain Hernan Cortez had prov'd abortive, disgracing, with the Name of Treason, the Flight which his own Violence had occasion'd, that he might take his Revenge under the specious Pretext of a necessary Remedy. He receiv'd the Letters of the Licentiate Benito Martin, his Chaplain, with the Title of the King's Lieutenant, not only of that Island, but of all the Lands which should be discover'd and conquer'd thorough his Means. He inform'd him with what Kindness or Acknowledgment he was defended, and protected by the Bishop of Burgos, President of the Indies; and how far that Prelate discountenanc'd the Commissaries of Hernan Cortez. But, at the same Time, acquainted him with what Benignity the Emperor had given them Audience at Tordesillas, together with the Noise the great Wealth they brought had made in Spain; and of the mighty Hopes they already conceiv'd of that Conquest, which they esteem'd preferable to all that had been made before.

With his new Commission, Diego Velasquez entertain'd greater Thoughts. The Favours of the President made him bold and presumptuous: And as human Passions increase with Power, and the more Men are supported by Authority, the greater Command they generally take upon them; the Governor the more believ'd himself engag'd to resent the Offence he thought he had receiv'd, and which he regarded now with an Air of Superiority which persuaded him that his Jealousy was no more than doing himself Justice. The Applauses of Cortez made him impatient and outrageous; and notwithstanding he was not sorry to see the Conquest so far advanc'd, for the Obligations of his Duty always left Room for the Service of his Sovereign, yet he could not bear that others should receive the Honour and Thanks for that which, in his Opinion, was due to him alone: So Vain-glorious was he in the Value he set upon his Share, in the first Disposition of that Enterprize, that, without any other Foundation, he attributed to himself the Glory thereof, and thought himself so much Lord of the Whole, that he believ'd the very Actions by which it was atchiev'd to be all his own.

Upon these Motives, and with these wrong Notions, he immediately prepar'd to form a Fleet and Army for the Destruction of Cortez, and all those who had follow'd his Fortune: He bought Ships, list'd Soldiers, and went in Person over the whole Island, visiting the Dwellings of the Spaniards, and encouraging them to the Undertaking. He set before them the Obligation they lay under to redress his Injuries: He shar'd with them before-hand the immense Riches of that Conquest, which, as he said, was then usurp'd by ill advised Rebels, who, as they had basely made their Escapes from Cuba by Flight, had left no Room for any to doubt of their Pusillanimity. With these Hopes, and some Troops he got on Foot, wherein he consum'd the greatest Part of his Substance, he in a few Days got together a Body of Men, which, in those Parts of the World, both for the Number and Quality of the People, might be term'd a formidable Army. It consisted of Eight Hundred Spanish Foot, Eighty Horse, and Ten or Twelve Pieces of Artillery, with abundance of Provisions, Arms, and Ammunition. He appointed for chief Commander of that Expedition Pamphilo de Narvaez, a Native of Valladolid, a Man of Capacity, and of the first Distinction in that Island, but highly opinionated of himself, and obstinately positive in his Resolutions. He gave him the Title of his Lieutenant, naming himself, Viceroy at least, of New Spain.

He gave him likewise secret Instructions, in which he order'd him, "That he should endeavour, to the utmost of his Power, to take Cortez, and should send him Prisoner to him under a strong Guard, that he might receive from his Hands the Punishment he had deserv'd: That he should do the same with the Chiefs of those who follow'd him, in Case they refus'd to abandon his Interest: And that he should take Possession, in his Name, of all that had been conquer'd, judging it to be all within his District, as the King's Lieutenant." All this without reasoning upon any Accidents which might happen; for at the Appearance of such a Force, he thought thought he could easily obtain all that he propos'd; Confidence, a Vice familiar to the Passionate, either looks at Dangers always at a Distance, or is insensible of them till it suffers under the Difficulty.

The Monks of St. Geronimo, who presided over the Royal Chamber of Audience at St. Domingo, and over the other Islands, with Supreme Jurisdiction, were inform'd of these Preparations, and foreseeing the Inconveniencies which might result from so publick a Competition, sent the Licentiate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, Auditor of the same Royal Chamber of Audience, to endeavour to bring Diego Velasquez to Reason; and if he found gentle Means insufficient, he should acquaint him with the Orders he carry'd, commanding him, upon great Penalties, to disarm his People, and unrig his Fleet, and not disturb or give any Impediment to the Conquest in which Hernan Cortez was employ'd, under the Colour of its belonging to him, upon any Account or Pretence whatsoever: And supposing that he had any personal Complaint against him, or might claim a Right to the Country he was then gaining for the King, he must appear before the Royal Tribunal, where he should be sure of having Justice done him in a regular Way.

This Minister arriv'd at the Isle of Cuba, where he found the Fleet ready to sail, which consisted of Eleven tall Ships and Seven somewhat larger than Brigantines, all in very good Order; and Diego Velasquez busily employ'd in forwarding the Embarkation of the Troops. The Licentiate did all he possibly could to reduce him to reasonable Terms, making Use of what Arguments he thought properest to persuade him to desist from his Enterprize, and to put his Confidence in him; representing to him, "The Hazard to which he expos'd himself in Case Cortez should stand upon his Defence, supported by those Adventurers who follow'd him, and were now interested in defending what they had acquir'd: The Damage that might arise when those Warlike Indians, newly conquer'd, should perceive a Civil War amongst the Spaniards. And that if by this Misunderstanding, they should lose a Conquest on which they already set so great a Value in Spain, he would risque his Credit in an Undertaking of so bad an Aspect, without its being in the Power of those who were most inclin'd in his Favour to defend him." Then he spoke on the Part of the Royal Chamber, and endeavour'd to persuade him, "To apply himself to the Tribunal, which would consider his Case with Attention, if he did not discredit it by this Act of Violence." And lastly, seeing him incapable of Advice, for that every thing which did not tend towards the Destruction of Hernan Cortez, seem'd to him utterly impracticable, he pass'd on to the judicial Part, shew'd his Orders, and caus'd them to be notify'd by an Escrivans he had brought with him for that Purpose ; accompanying them with different Requests, and Protests ; but nothing was sufficient to stop his Resolution: For the Title of the King's Lieutenant had so rais'd him in his own Conceit, that it seem'd he would acknowledge no Superior in his Government, and obstinately persisted in his intractable Humour. The Licentiate dissembled some Indecencies without directly contradicting him, lest he should render him more precipitate ; and seeing that he endeavour'd to hasten the Embarkation of his People, he feign'd a Desire of beholding this Land so much applauded and cry'd up; and, under the Pretext of Curiosity, offer'd to accompany them, to which Proposal Diego Velasquez easily agreed, that the News of his Insolence might come later to the Isle of Santo Domingo ; whereupon he embark'd, with the Approbation and Good Liking of all. A Resolution which whether it proceeded from himself, or from his Instructions, seem'd well judg'd, and convenient for the preventing of any Breach amongst the Spaniards. He persuaded himself, with sufficient Probability, that when he was far distant from Velasquez, he might with more Ease get his Orders obey'd, or that at least his Mediation would be more powerful with Pamphilo de Narvaez ; and notwithstanding his Assistance was a new Inconveniency, as we shall see hereafter, his Zeal and good Intentions were nothing the less meritorious: For tho' the Event does not always answer the Means which are made Use of to make an Affair succeed, yet this Effect of Chance does not lessen the Merit of well concerted Designs. Andres de Duero that Secretary of Velasquez, who favoured Cortez so much in the Beginning of his Fortune, likewise accompany'd the Expedition. Some say he offer'd himself for this Voyage, purely to share some of that Wealth, by remembring Cortez of the Services he had formerly done him ; and others say his Intention was to mediate with Narvaez, and prevent, as much as he could, the Ruin of his Friend ; which we rather chuse to believe than the former, as being sensible that it ill becomes an Historian to value himself upon maintaining ill-natur'd Conjectures.

The Fleet set sail, and having a favourable Wind, in a few Days they got a Sight of the desir'd Land. They came to an Anchor in the Port of Ulua, and Pamphilo de Narvaez sent some Soldiers ashore to get Intelligence, and make what Discoveries they could in the neighbouring Villages. These, who knew
their

“rels and Animofities of private Persons were not, at the King’s “Expence, to be decided by a Civil War: But letting the “Case, that if, preferring his own private Revenge to the Pub“lick Intereft, he fhould attempt any Manner of Violence “againft Hernan Cortez, he fhould quickly be made fenfible,
 “that not only himfelf, but all the Soldiers of that Garrifon,
 “would rather chufe to dye fighting by his Side, than ever “agree to fo bafe and difhonourable an Action.” The Priest receiv’d this Repulfe, as an unexpected Stroke; and being more accuftom’d to fuffer himfelf to be govern’d by his Paflion than to repress it, he broke out into injurious Language and Threats againft Hernan Cortez, calling him Traytor; and went fo far as to fay; that Gonzalo de Sandoval, and all who espous’d that Traytor’s Intereft, deferv’d no better Title themfelves.
 They all endeavour’d to bring him to Reafon, and to contain himfelf within the Bounds of Moderation, putting him in Mind of his Profeflion, that he might be fenfible at leaft of the Confideration why they bore with him. But he, rai-fing his Voice, without changing his Style, commanded the Efcrivano, or Notary, he had brought with him, to publifh the Orders he had, “That all might know that they were to pay “Obedience to Narvaez, on Pain of Death.” But this was what could not be put in Execution; for Gonzalo de Sandoval told the Efcrivano, plainly, “That he would order him immediately “to be hang’d; if he prefum’d to publifh any Orders which “did not come from the King.” In fhort, the Difpute rofe to that Height, that Sandoval commanded them to be feiz’d and taken into Cuftody. But fhon after, reflecting with himfelf upon the Mifchief they might do, if they return’d exasperated to Narvaez, he resolv’d to fend them Prifoners to Mexico, that Hernan Cortez might fecure them there, or endeavour to reduce them. This Determination he inflantly put in Execution, providing Indians of Burthen, who carry’d them Prifoners upon their Shoulders in a Sort of Chairs, which they ufed inftead of Litters. There went with them, as Commander of the Guard, a Spaniard he much confided in, whole Name was Pedro de Solis, whom he charg’d not to offer them any Injury, or ill Treatment upon the Road. Sandoval difpatch’d a Courier before, to give an Account to Cortez, and took Care to get his People in a Readinefs, call’d together his Indian Friends for the Defence of the Place, difpofing of every Thing as became a vigilant and careful Captain. It cannot be deny’d, but that he exerted the Military Power too far in the Imprifonment of an Ecclefiastick, that being a Liberty he ought not to have taken;

ken, had he not done it with Political Views; considering that it would be very inconvenient to have a Person of so violent and precipitate a Disposition near Narvaez, when they were to endeavour to bring Matters to an Accommodation, Peace being what was so very necessary. It may be presum'd, that, in this Resolution, if he had one Eye turn'd towards his own Private Resentment, he had the other upon the Publick Advantage: If he acted with this last View, as his first Calmness seems to persuade us, when he suffer'd the Priest's Heat, and shew'd him all due Respect, then indeed his Conduct ought not to be so much condemn'd, at least not the whole Action, because in some Part of it he wanted a little Moderation; for sometimes, when a Man is warm'd, he goes thro' with what otherwise he could never have brought about; and in such Cases Warmth serves to give Life to Prudence.

C H A P. VI.

The Precautions of HERNAN CORTEZ to avoid a Rupture. He makes Overtures of Peace, which are rejected by NARVAEZ, who, on the contrary, proclaim'd War, and seizes the Person of the Licentiate LUCAS VASQUEZ DE AYLLON.

HERNAN CORTEZ receiv'd frequent Advices of all these Particulars, which plainly confirm'd what before he only suspected: And some little Time after, he understood, that Pamphilo de Narvaez had landed, and march'd with his Army directly for Zempoala. This News made him very uneasy, dubious, and irresolute what Measures he was to take, and plainly sensible of the Inconveniencies he lay under. He could think of no Way that was not attended with ill Consequences: To seek Narvaez in the Field with such unequal Forces, was Temerity; more particularly when he was to leave in Mexico a Part of his People, to cover the Quarters, defend their acquir'd Treasure, and keep up that Kind of Guard which Motezuma suffer'd himself to be under: To expect his Enemy in the City, was the certain Way to stir up seditious Humours, with which the Mexicans were already but too much infected, and furnish them with a fair Opportunity of taking to their Arms under the specious Pretext of Self-Defence, and by that Means have another Danger at his Back : To make Overtures of Peace to Narvaez, and sollicit the Union of their respective Forces, was indeed the wholesomest and most convenient Method of proceeding, but appear'd the most difficult ; considering the Perverseness and the Obstinacy of the Man's Temper he had to deal with, whom he despair'd to bring to Reason, tho' he should condescend even to sue for his Friendship, which as yet he had not resolv'd upon, because a submissive Condescension seldom gains upon an insolent and obstinate Disposition, and in Proposals of Peace make but a very indifferent Figure. He consider'd the total Loss of his Conquest ; the Disappointment of those great Beginnings ; the Cause of Religion neglected ; the King's Interest trod under Foot ; and what most of all concern'd him was, to find himself oblig'd to feign Security and Content, shewing a Calm in his Countenance whilst his Breast was agitated by a furious Tempest.

To Motezuma he said, " That those newly arriv'd Spaniards were Vassals to the King his Master, and had brought a Second Embassy, to support the Proposition he had already made : That they came with an Army, according to the Custom of their Nation ; but that he would endeavour to dispose them to return, and would himself go along with them, as having now receiv'd his full Dispatches, since his Majesty's Generosity and Bounty had left nothing for those new Comers to desire, they having no other Proposals to make but what he himself had already made and obtain'd."

His Soldiers he encourag'd with various fallacious Suppositions, telling them, " That Narvaez was his very good Friend, and a Person of such Honour, Integrity, and good Sense, that he would not fail of hearing Reason, and would infallibly prefer the Service of God and his Sovereign to the Interest of a private Man : That Diego Velasquez had dispeopled the Island of Cuba purely to gratify his revengeful Temper ; and, in his Opinion, he had sent him a fresh Supply of Spaniards wherewith to prosecute his Conquest ; for he did not in the least doubt, but he should make Fellow-Soldiers and Companions of those who were sent against him as Enemies."

With his Captains he was less reserv'd. He communicated to them part of his Suspicions, and reason'd, by Way of Prevention, upon the Accidents which might offer : He represented, not without some Aggravations, the small Skill Narvaez had in Military

Military Affairs; the ill Disposition of his People; the Injustice of his Cause, and other Motives of Encouragement, in which he conceal'd his real Sentiments, giving them in Truth more Hopes than he had himself.

Lastly, He ask'd their Opinion, as he was always accusom'd to do in Cases of like Importance; and disposing it after such a Manner that they should advise him to what he thought best, he resolv'd first to try to bring Matters to an Accommodation, and to make such Proposals to Narvaez that he should not be able to refuse his Offers without charging himself with all the Inconveniencies of a Rupture: But at the same Time he made Provision for the War according to his wonted Diligence. He sent to his Friends of Tlascala to get ready Six Thousand Soldiers for an Enterprize in which it was possible he might want their Service. He order'd an Officer, with Three or Four Spanish Soldiers, who had been in the Province of Chinantla to discover the Mines of that Part of the Country, to endeavour to dispose the Caziques to a Levy of other Two Thousand Men, and that they should have them ready to march with him at the first Notice. The Chinanteca's were Enemies to the Mexicans, and had declar'd themselves for the Spaniards with Signs of great Sincerity, and had sent privately to offer them their Obedience: These were a valiant and warlike People, and with whom he thought it would redound very much to his Advantage to reinforce his Army: And recollecting, that he had heard the Lances which they us'd in their Wars highly commended, as being considerably longer than ours, and made of a very tough Wood, he order'd Three Hundred to be brought, to divide amongst his Soldiers, and arm'd them with Points of temper'd Copper, which sufficiently supplied the want of Iron; a Precaution which succeeded mighty well, both because the Cavalry of Narvaez gave him no small Uneasiness, and besides, he had a Mind to have Time to instruct his Men in the Use and Management of those Arms: In the mean while Pedro de Solis arriv'd with the Prisoners, sent by Gonzalo de Sandoval, of which he had inform'd Cortez, and expected his Orders at the Side of the Lake: But Cortez, who already had Notice of their coming, went out to receive them with more than ordinary Attendance. He immediately order'd their Fetters to be taken off, embrac'd them with great Humanity, and the Licentiate Guevara, more than once, with particular Civility, telling him, "That he would chastise Gonzalo de Sandoval for the little Regard he had shewn to his Person and Dignity." He afterwards conducted him to his own Apartment, gave him his Table, and with a seeming Satisfaction, intimated several Times, how much he esteem'd the Happiness of having Pamphilo de Narvaez in that Country, on Account of the past Friendship and Intimacy that had been between them. He took Care that the Spaniards should all appear cheerful and hearty before him. He made him a Witness of the Favours he receiv'd from Moteczuma, and the great Respect with which he was treated by the Mexican Princes. He presented him with some Jewels of Value, which greatly mollify'd the Violence of his Temper. He did the same by his Companions; and without letting them know that he stood in Need of their good Offices to incline Narvaez to Peace, he dispatch'd them in Four Days, fully persuaded by his Reasons, and engag'd by his Liberality and courteous Treatment.

After he had taken these politick Measures, leaving it to Time to ripen and to produce the Effect, he resolv'd to send some Person of Account to make such Proposals to Narvaez, as were reasonable and convenient for the common Interest and the Service of the King; and for this Negotiation he chose Fryer Bartolomeo de Olmedo, a Person of known Integrity, Wisdom, and Eloquence, and supported by the Dignity of his Character, making what Haste he possibly could with his Dispatches; and gave him Letters for Narvaez, for the Licentiate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, and for the Secretary Andres de Ducro, with several Jewels to distribute, as he should think proper. The Importance of a Peace was the Argument of those Letters; in that to Narvaez, He courteously bad him welcome to those Coasts, with Expressions of singular Respect and Esteem: And, after reminding him of their former Friendship and Intimacy, “ He inform'd him of the “ State of his Conquest; acquainting him, at large, with the “ Provinces he had subjected; the Sagacity and Martial Ge“ nius of the People; and representing to him the Power and “ Grandeur of Moteczuma.” This he did, not so much to magnify his own Actions, as to make him sensible how much it imported them all to unite their Forces for compleating the Enterprize which was in so great a Forwardness. He gave him likewise to understand; “ How much they ought to fear, lest
 “ the Mexicans, a considerate and warlike Nation, should come “ to the Knowledge of any Misunderstanding amongst the “ Spaniards, for that they would very well know how to make “ their Advantage, and destroy both Parties to free themselves “ from a Foreign Yoke.” And lastly he told him, “ That, to “ prevent all Disputes and Accidents, it was absolutely necessary, “ that, without farther Delay, he should acquaint him with the “ Orders

“ Orders he brought ; for if they were from the King, he was “ ready to obey them, give up his General’s Staff, and the Army “ under his Command : But if his Commission was only from “ Diego Velasquez, they ought both of them to consider with “ equal Attention, how much they adventur’d ; for that in “ any Dispute where the King’s Interest was concern’d, the Pre“ tensions of a Vassal were but of small Weight, and might “ be adjusted at a cheaper Rate ; it being his Design to satisfy “ Velasquez for all the Expence of his first fitting out, and to di“ vide with him not only the Profits but the very Glory of the “ Conquest.” After this Manner he concluded his Letter ;
 But thinking he had dwelt too long upon the Article of Accommodation, he added, by Way of Postscript, some brisk Expressions, letting him know, “ That he did not make Use of “ Arguments because he wanted Force ; and that he knew as “ well how to defend, as how to propose.”

Pamphilo de Narvaez had taken up his Quarter, and lodg’d his Army in Zempoala ; and the fat Cazique was very careful and sedulous in the Entertainments of, and Attendance upon those Spaniards, believing they came as a Succour to his Friend Hernan Cortez ; but it was not long before he was undeceiv’d : For he did not find in them the same Manner of Carriage to which he had been accusom’d by his former Guests ; and notwithstanding they had with them no Interpreter to make themselves be understood, their Actions spoke, and their Proceedings sufficiently distinguish’d them. He discover’d in Narvaez an imperious ill-natur’d Disposition, which gave him no small Trouble ; and he left him no Room to doubt when he saw him take by Force all the Furniture and Jewels which Hernan Cortez had left in his House. The Soldiers, to whom the Liberty their Commander took serv’d for an Example, treated their Hosts like Enemies, and put in Practice whatever Avarice, and a licentious Thirst for Rapine, could dictate.

The Licentiate Guevara soon after arriv’d, and related the Success of his Journey ; the Grandeur and Magnificence of Mexico ; how well Hernan Cortez was receiv’d in that Court ;
 how much he was esteem’d and belov’d by Moteczuma, and respected by his Vassals : He extoll’d the Humanity and Courtesy with which he had receiv’d and entertain’d him ; and from that he pass’d on to what Cortez so earnestly desir’d, that it might not be known that there was any Misunderstanding amongst the Spaniards : And he was about proposing an Accommodation of all, but he could not prosecute his Discourse, for Narvaez cut him short, telling him, “ That he might return to “ Mexico,

“ Mexico, if the Artifices of Cortez had made so mighty an Impression upon him; and thrust him from his Presence with great Rudeness and Disrespect.” But the Priest and his Companions sought a new Auditory; Passing with that News, and with these Presents, to the Assemblies of the Soldiers, and obtain’d what most of all imported the Care and Diligence of Cortez; for some began to commend, and incline to the Reasonableness of his Arguments; others made Encomiums upon his Liberality; and all remain’d dispos’d to Peace, the most Part beginning to have a Suspicion of, and a Dislike to the Obstinacy and ill Temper of Narvaez.

Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo soon follow’d Guevara, and found in Pamphilo de Narvaez much more Pride and Haughtiness than Good Nature and Humanity. He deliver’d his Letters, and the other having read them out of Compliment, and with the Air of one who puts a Constraint upon himself, he dispos’d himself to hear what he had to say; giving him to understand, That he suffer’d the Embassy purely for the Sake of the Ambassador. The Father’s Harangue was eloquent, expressive, and substantial. He began with putting him in Mind of the Obligations of his Profession, to interpose himself as a disinterested Mediator in these Differences; endeavour’d to set forth the Sincerity of Cortez’s Heart, as an Eye-Witness to all his Proceedings, and bound to speak the Truth. Next he assur’d him, “ That it would be no difficult Matter for him to obtain any Thing that should be propos’d, provided it was reasonable, and for the Service of the King.” Then he represented, in elegant Terms, “ What a Hazard they ran by those Misunderstandings; and what an extraordinary Advantage it would be to Diego Velasquez, if he would co-operate with these Forces to compleat the Conquest;” and added: “ That having them at his Command, he ought to weigh the Use he was to put them to with the present State of Affairs; a Point which must be presuppos’d in his Instructions; since it was always left to the Discretion of the Captain, to chuse the Means with which he was to obtain the End he aim’d at: And a Commander was always oblig’d to act according to the Times and Accidents, left in the Execution of his Orders he should destroy the Intention thereof.”

The Answer of Narvaez was precipitate and confus’d; he said, “ That it did not become Diego Velasquez to make Conditions with a rebellious Subject, whose Chastisement was the first and principal Business of the Army he had under his Conduct: That he would immediately proclaim for “ Traytors

“ Traytors all those who espous’d the Interest of that Rebel;
 “ and that he had brought sufficient Force to snatch the Con“ quest out of his Hands, without having any Occasion for “ the Advice of those who, being equally guilty, with the same “ Reasons they had to tremble at his Approach, were endea“ vouring to persuade him.” Father Bartholomeo, still prefer-ving the same Moderation of Temper, reply’d, “ That he “ would do well to consider, what he intended to resolve up-
 “ on; for before he arriv’d at Mexico, he would find whole “ Provinces of Warlike Indians, Friends and Confederates to “ Cortez, who would not fail to take up Arms in his Defence;
 “ and that it would not be so easy to suppress him as he ima“ gin’d, since his Spaniards were all resolutely determin’d to “ dye with him; and besides, he had Motexuma on his Side;
 “ a Prince so powerful, that for every single Soldier he had “ brought with him, he was able to raise a numerous Army.”
 “ And lastly, he told him, That an Affair of this Nature was “ not to be resolv’d in Haste, but requir’d Deliberation, and “ a second Reflection; adding, That he would return for his “ final Answer.”

With this Bravado the Father took his Leave, for he thought it was necessary to abate that Confidence Narvaez had plac’d in his Forces, on which he chiefly founded his Obstinacy.

He proceeded presently to put in Execution the other Part of his Instructions. He visited the Licentiate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, and the Secretary Andres de Duero, who highly commended his Zeal, approving what he propos’d to Narvaez, offering to assist in his Dispatch with their utmost Power, in order to establish a Peace, which was so very necessary to all. Then the Father visited the Captains and Soldiers of his Acquaintance; publish’d his Commission; endeavour’d to support the good Intention of Cortez; made them all desirous of a Reconciliation; distributed the Jewels and other Curiosities he had in Charge with good Judgment, and had Reason to hope that there would be a Party form’d in Favour of Cortez, or at least in Favour of an Accommodation, had not Pamphilo de Narvaez, who had Notice of these Practices, put a Stop to his Proceeding. He order’d him to be brought before him, loaded him with Injuries and Threats, call’d him a mutinous and seditious Traytor, giving the Name of Treason to his Sounding amongst his People the Praises of Cortez, and was determin’d to have secur’d his Person, had not the Secretary Andres de Duero interpos’d, at whose Instances he alter’d his Mind, and sent him Orders immediately to depart from Zempoala.

But the Licentiate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, being inform'd of what pass'd, came very seasonably and gave his Opinion, "That it would be proper first to assemble all the Officers, that they might consider more deliberately what Answer should be return'd to Hernan Cortez, since he shew'd himself dispos'd to Peace; and it seem'd no difficult Matter to bring it about upon Terms reasonable and advantageous to all." To which Proposal were very much inclin'd some of the Officers who were present: But Narvaez heard him with a Sort of Impatience which favour'd somewhat of Contempt; and in Order to stop all their Mouths at once, he, before them all, made a solemn Declaration of War, with Fire and Sword, against Hernan Cortez, causing the same to be publicly proclaim'd, pronouncing him a Rebel and a Traytor to the King, and assigning a considerable Reward to any, who should either take or kill him. He, at the same Time, gave Orders that the Army should prepare to march. But the Auditor Lucas Velasquez de Ayllon, not being able to endure those Irregularities, and who was indeed oblig'd to put a Stop to such violent Proceedings by his own Authority, commanded the Cryer to desist, and plainly told Narvaez, "That he should not stir a Foot from Zempoala upon Pain of Death, nor employ those Forces without the unanimous Consent of the whole Army." He commanded the Captains and Soldiers not to obey him, and persisted in his Protests and in exerting his Authority with such Resolution, that Narvaez, quite out of Patience, blind with Choler, and losing all Respect to his Person and Function, order'd him to be ignominiously apprehended, and immediately carry'd away on Board one of his Vessels to the Island of Cuba. Upon which Fryer Bartolomeo de Olmedo return'd very much scandaliz'd without any farther Answer; and his own Captains and Soldiers themselves were so highly incens'd, that the most Intelligent, observing he had presum'd to arrest a Minister of that Rank and Character, found themselves oblig'd to look on till they could take some Measures for the Service of the King; and those of less Judgment and Penetration had Matter sufficient for Disaffection and Murmuring against their Captain. This Insolence of Narvaez gave the Affairs of Cortez a happy Turn, confirming him in the good Opinion of the Soldiers; and the false Steps and Mismanagement of his Enemy rais'd his Reputation more than all his Diligence and Circumspection had done before.

C H A P. VII.

MOTEZUMA continues his good Offices toward CORTEZ and his Spaniards. The Alteration which some attribute to the Practices of NARVAEZ look'd upon as fictitious and improbable. CORTEZ resolves to depart, and executes that Resolution, leaving a Part of his Force in Mexico.

SOME of our Writers report, that Pamphilo de Narvaez held a Correspondence of great Intimacy and Friendship with Motezuma: That Couriers went and came from Mexico to Zempoala, by whose Means he gave him to understand, " That he brought a Commission from the King of Spain to chastise the Violences and Exorbitances of Cortez. That not only he himself, but all those who follow'd his Banners, were Fugitives and Rebels; and that having understood how greatly his Majesty was oppress'd, propos'd immediately to march with his Army, in order to restore him to his Liberty, and the peaceable Possession of his Dominions;" with other malicious Impostures of the same Kind. To which they add, That Motezuma charm'd with those Hopes which so agreeably flatter'd his Desires, not only carry'd on a friendly Correspondence with him, but also made him several great and valuable Presents, being jealous of Cortez, and desirous to regain his Liberty thro' those private and underhand Means. We know not how this Intelligence could ever come to the Knowledge of Motezuma: For Narvaez had no Interpreters to make himself understood amongst the Indians, and such a concerted Negotiation could never be carry'd on by Signs and Dumb-Shew. None of his Spaniards came to Mexico except the Licentiate Guevara, and his Companions which Sandoval sent; and these had never any private Conference with Motezuma. And even had Cortez been guilty of such a Piece of Negligence, they could not possibly have been intelligible to each other without making Use of Aguilar or of Donna Marina; a Case wholly inconsistent with what is related of their untainted Fidelity. We must believe then, that the Indians of Zempoala knew by the Behaviour, Countenances, and other exterior Tokens, the Enmity and Opposition there subsisted between those Two Armies, of all which Intelligence was sent to Motezuma by his Confidants and Ministers; since it is not in the least to be doubted but that he had the Account before it was imparted to him by Cortez: But from his Actions it plainly appears, that he kept his Mind inviolably firm, and was wholly free from any underhand Design against the Spaniards of Mexico. It is not deny'd but that the Emperor sent some Presents of Value to Narvaez; but it cannot be concluded from thence that there was a Correspondence between them: For these Mexican Princes were accusom'd so to regale all Strangers who happen'd to touch on their Coasts, as Motezuma had done to Cortez and his Followers; and he might conceal, without Artifice, that Mark of his Liberality, as being an establish'd Custom, or perhaps to avoid seeming to make a Merit of his Generosity. But it is observable that in those very Gifts, whether conceal'd or otherwise, there were some casual Circumstances which turn'd to the Credit of Cortez: For upon the Receipt of them, Narvaez express'd more Attachment to them than was becoming; for after he had counted them over with great Exactness, he order'd them to be set aside with superabundant Care, without making the least Shew of his Liberality to his greatest Confidants. And the Soldiers, tho' they are never sensible of their own insatiable Avarice, yet they never fail of condemning it in their Generals, began to be dispirited with this Disappointment of their Hopes, and mixing their own proper Interests amongst the Causes of the present Divisions, they judg'd Cortez had the most Reason on his Side, as being the most liberal and generous.

Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo at length return'd from his Journey, and Hernan Cortez found in his Relation all that he suspected of Narvaez: He was not so much concern'd at the Contempt he shew'd to the Proposals he had made him with Regard to himself, as he was on Account of the Undertaking. He was sensible, by the Imprisonment of the Auditor Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, what little Regard he had to the King's Service, who could carry his Insolence to such a Length. He heard without Resentment, at least outwardly, the injurious and reviling Language with which he treated him in his Absence. Authors do with Justice very much commend his Moderation, that when he receiv'd Advice from several Hands of the Contempt with which he spoke of his Person, the Indecencies and Bitterness of his Reflections, and how often he took the Liberty to brand him with the infamous Name of Traytor, he was never heard to utter an unseemly Expression, or to call Pamphilo de Narvaez by any other than his own Name. A Mind not to be sufficiently valu'd, which can receive Outrages, and at the same Time preserve a Moderation!

Greatly did Cortez comfort himself with the News which Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo brought him, of the good Disposition he found in the People of Narvaez, who for the most Part were desirous of Peace, and but little affected to his Opinion; so that he did not doubt but that he should be able to face him as an Enemy, and to bring him to the Terms he desir'd either by Force, or the Dissaffection of his own Soldiers. He communicated his Thoughts to his Officers, and having jointly and maturely consider'd the Inconveniencies on all Sides, they held it for the least hazardous to take the Field with the greatest Number they possibly could, and to incorporate the Indians who were ready provided in Tlascala and Chinantla, and afterwards to march in a Body towards Zempoala, with a Design to halt in some confederate Town, where they might be nearer at Hand to treat of Peace; having besides the Advantage of capitulating with Arms in their Hands, and the Conveniency of being in a Place where they might pick up such of the People of Narvaez as should determine, or be inclin'd to quit his Party. This Resolution was immediately publish'd amongst the Soldiers, and receiv'd with great Applause and Chearfulness. They were not ignorant of the great Inequality of Number there was between them and the contrary Party; but in Sight of such Danger they were so far from entertaining the least Thoughts of Fear, that those who lay under the least Obligations of exerting their Zeal for the Cause, claim'd a Title to be present in the Expedition; and it was necessary to make Use both of Intreaties and Authority, when the Time came to name those who were to be left in Mexico; so great was the Confidence they had fix'd, some in the Prudence and Conduct, others in the Intrepidity and Valour, but all in general in the good Fortune of their Commander; for so they term'd that extraordinary and uninterrupted Series of Success with which he was wont to accomplish whatsoever he took in Hand. A Quality which is of great Force on the Minds of Soldiers, and would be still more superlatively efficacious if they knew how to make suitable Returns to the great Author of Nature for those unlook'd-for Events which are call'd Good Fortune, because they proceed from a Cause they do not comprehend.

Hernan Cortez, without delaying the Matter, provided beforehand with various Pretences, repair'd to Motezuma's Apartment, to give him an Account of his intended March, concealing, as much as possible, his inward Concern: But the Emperor oblig'd him to take a Turn different from what he had design'd, by anticipating him, and beginning the Conversation. He receiv'd him, saying, "That he had for some Time observ'd him to be very thoughtful, and was concern'd that he should conceal from him the Cause of his Discontent; for he had from different Parts receiv'd Information, That the Spanish General residing in Zempoala, came with bad Intentions against him and his: That he did not so much wonder that they should be Enemies for some personal Prejudice, and private Misunderstanding, as that, being, as they were Vassals to the same Prince, they should head Two Armies of contrary Factions, by which it plainly appear'd, that one of them must of Necessity be a Rebel to his Sovereign."

This unexpected Account from Motezuma, and the Manner in which it was deliver'd, might have embarrass'd Cortez; nor did it fail to shock him in some Measure: But with that natural Promptitude with which he was always accusom'd to disengage himself upon such Occasions, he answer'd without Hesitation, "That those who made their Observations upon the bad Intentions of those Spaniards, and the imprudent Menaces of their unadvis'd Commander, had inform'd him of no other than the Truth, and he now came with a Design to communicate the same to him, having not had it in his Power to comply sooner with this Obligation, because Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo was but just arriv'd with the first Account of the News. That notwithstanding the Spanish Captain, who was at Zempoala, had given some Proofs of a disorderly Passion, yet he was not to be look'd upon as a Rebel, but rather as a Person deceiv'd, who imagin'd he was serving his Prince while he was doing the Reverse; for he came thither in Quality of a Substitute, or Lieutenant, from a misinform'd Governor, who residing in a very remote Province, was not acquainted with the last Resolutions of the Court of Spain, and was persuad'd that the Duty of this Embassy in which himself was employ'd was his Property, and of Right belong'd to him: That all the Preparations of so frivolous a Precaution would easily vanish, without any farther Trouble than his laying before him his own Dispatches, by Virtue of which he had full Power and Jurisdiction over all the Spaniards, both Officers and others, who should arrive upon those Coasts:

“ And that therefore, before his Ignorance and Misinformation “ should engage him to take any farther false Steps, he had “ resolv’d to direct his March to Zempoala, with great Part “ of his Forces, to dispose those Spaniards to return to their “ Ships; and that he would make them sensible, that they “ were now to respect the Subjects of the Mexican Empire as “ People admitted under the Protection of the King of Spain:
 “ That he would immediately put this in Execution, the prin“ cipal Motive of his hastening his Departure being the just Con“ sideration of not preventing them from approaching his Court, “ that Army being compos’d of Men less disciplin’d and “ governable than became those who were to be admitted “ into that Neighbourhood, without running the Hazard of “ occasioning some Disturbance amongst his Vassals.”

After this Manner Cortez endeavour’d, as well as he could, to interest that Prince in his Resolution; and Motezuma, who already knew the Vexations and Inconveniencies of which the Zempoalans complain’d, commended his Design; holding it expedient, that he should endeavour to keep at a Distance from the Court Troops of such violent and irregular Proceedings:
 But it appear’d to him as an Act of Temerity in Cortez, that since those Spaniards had already declar’d themselves his Enemies, and were so disproportionately superior to him in Force, he should offer to expose himself upon such precarious Terms;
 since, in his Opinion, if he came off well, he must needs be disregarded; tho’ he stood a far worse Chance. He offer’d to furnish him with an Army that should support him, the Leaders whereof should be under his Command, and intirely at his Devotion, since he would give them strict Orders to respect and obey him as they would do himself if he went in Person; A Point which he repeated; and with many Instances earnestly insisted upon, by which he gave convincing Proofs of his Sincerity and Affection, without any Mixture of Fallacy or Affectation. But Hernan Cortez gratefully thank’d him for his friendly Offers; tho’, at the same Time, he excus’d himself from accepting them; for in Reality he plac’d but a slender Confidence in the Mexicans, neither did he care to run the Hazard of admitting Auxiliary Forces which might command him; as one who well knew how embarrassing it was in Actions of War, to have at once the Front engag’d by a known Enemy; and the Sides and Rear surrounded by Friends not much to be confided in.

The Motives of his Journey being after this Manner somewhat soften’d; he next employ’d his whole Care in making all necessary Preparations for his setting out, with a Design to get what

what Intelligence he was able, before Narvaez should make any Movement. He determin'd to leave in Mexico Eighty Spaniards under the Command of Pedro de Alverado, which in the Opinion of all was most prudently resolv'd, because that Officer was highly in Motezuma's Favour, besides his being a Gentleman of great Courage and good Sense, and had the Advantage of being an accomplish'd Courtier, and together with a free engaging Behaviour, he had all the Resolution that was necessary to overcome the greatest Difficulties, and could have Recourse to Policy when he found Strength was not sufficient. The General gave him in Charge, "That he should do his utmost to keep Motezuma in that Kind of Liberty which might make him insensible of Confinement, and should prevent, as much as possible, his having any long Conferences with the Mexicans." He left under his Care all the Treasure, as well that belonging to the King his Sovereign, as to particular Persons; and above all he made him sensible, how much it imported to keep that Part of his Forces in the Mexican Court, and that Prince at his Devotion; that being the Point to which he ought to direct all his Actions, as the Foundation of their Common Security.

To the Soldiers he gave Orders, "That they should obey their Captain, and serve, and respect Motezuma with greater Diligence, Circumspection, and Submission than ever; and that they be careful of maintaining an amicable Correspondence with those of his Family and Court: Exhorting them, for their own Security, to Union among themselves, and Civility towards others."

He dispatch'd a Courier to Gonzalo de Sandoval, with Orders, "That he should march out to meet him, or, with the Spaniards under his Command, wait his Coming at the Place where he propos'd to halt, leaving the Fortress of Vera Cruz to the Care of the Confederate Indians;" which in Effect, was little less than abandoning it. But it was not now Time to think of dividing his Forces, neither would that Fortification, which was built only to keep off the Indians, be capable of resisting the Spaniards if they had a Mind to attack it. He took Care of what Provisions were necessary, that he might not have them to seek, or be forc'd to extort them from the Peasants. He procur'd a Body of Indians of Burthen, who were to carry the Baggage; and the next Day being fix'd upon for the March, he order'd High-Mass to be celebrated, whereat he commanded, that all the Soldiers should be present, in order to recommend to God the good Success of their Enterprize; protesting before the Altar, "That he desir'd
" nothing

“ nothing but to do Service to God and his King, which in that “ Juncture he said were inseparable : That he went without “ Hatred, Malice, or Ambition, which Consideration he would “ always retain, and was assur’d that the Justice of his Cause “ would plead for him before God and Man.”

He next went to take his Leave of Motezuma, and earnestly requested him, “ That he would protect that small Number of “ Spaniards, he left with him, and would be pleas’d not to aban“ don them upon any Account whatsoever ; for the least “ Change or Diminution of his Favour towards them might “ occasion great Inconveniencies, which would require extra“ ordinary Remedies if his Subjects should perceive any Al“ teration in his Management ; and that he should be very sorry
 “ to find himself, at his Return, oblig’d to approach that Person “ complaining, from whose Presence he departed so well satisfy’d.”

To which he added, “ That Pedro de Alvarado was left to repre“ sent his Person ; and as by that Commission the Prerogatives of “ an Embassador belong’d to him, during his Absence : That he “ had bound him under an Obligation to assist in every Thing “ that should be for his Majesty’s greater Service ; and that he “ did not doubt but he should return very speedily to his Pre“ sence, free from all these Perplexities, to receive his Orders, “ prepare for his Voyage, and carry to the Emperor his Sove“ raign, together with his Majesty’s magnificent Presents, the “ News of his Friendship and Confederacy, which would be to “ him the Jewel of far greater Value than all.”

Motezuma, again began to express his Concern, that he should offer to set out with so unequal a Force, and intreated him, “ That if there was no other Way to decide their Disputes but “ by Arms, he would endeavour to delay the coming to an “ open Rupture till the Arrival of the Mexican Succours, which “ he would not fail to get ready, in what Number he desir’d.
 “ He gave him his Word not to forsake the Spaniards which he “ left with Pedro de Alvarado, nor change his Habitation during “ his Absence.” Antonio de Herrera adds, That he accompany’d him a good Way out of Town with his whole Retinue of Courtiers ; but maliciously attributes this Respect not to any real Friendship, but to the earnest Desire he had to see himself freed from the Spaniards, supposing him to be already disaffected to Hernan Cortez and his Followers, and glad to get rid of them at any Rate. What appears is, that he punctually kept his Promise, persevering both in his Continuance with the Spaniards in their Quarters, and in his accusom’d Kindness and Familiarity to them, notwithstanding great Disturbances hap-pen'd, all which he might have remedied by returning to his own Palace. And in his whole Procedure, as well in what he did in the Defence of those Spaniards who were near his Person, as in what he left unattempted against the rest in that Disunion of their Forces, it is evidently demonstrable, that he cannot be justly charg'd with the least Double-Dealing, or any Alteration in his Behaviour towards them. It is true, that at last he began to wish they were gone, because the Quiet of his whole Realm absolutely requir'd it; but he never once resolv'd to break with them, or ever forgot the Royal Safe-Guard under the Protection of which they resided at his Court. These Principles, which indeed seem to belong to a better taught and less barbarous Prince, and little answerable to Motezuma's natural Disposition, yet so total a Change of this Indian's Temper may be look'd upon as one of the Miracles which God wrought to facilitate the Conquest: For the extraordinary Affection and Inclination, with that awful Dread and Deference, which he always had for Cortez, were so directly opposite to his unbounded Pride and Reservedness, that every one of his Actions which so notoriously contradicted Nature, may very well be imputed to a Divine Inspiration.

C H A P. VIII.

HERNAN CORTEZ directs his March towards Zempoala. Is disappointed of the Succours which he expected from Tlascala. Continues his March as far as Motalequita; from whence he again makes Overtures of Peace, and, with new Provocation, declares War.

THEY began their March, following the Road of Cholula with all the Caution and Care which the Security of the Army requir'd, and which Custom had now made easy to the Soldiers, by long Experience grown perfect in the Art of War, inur'd to the Hardships which attend it, and accustom'd to obey without Murmuring or Disputing. They were receiv'd in that City with a chearful Welcome; the servile Dread with which these People first paid their Obedience being now converted into an unfeigned affectionate Veneration for

for their Conquerors. From thence they pass'd on to Tlascala, and half a League from that City they found a splendid Appearance of the Nobility, and the whole Senate. The Entrance was celebrated with great Demonstrations of Joy, answerable to the fresh Lawrels with which the Spaniards return'd, after having depriv'd Motezuma of his Liberty, and somewhat abated the exorbitant Pride of the Mexicans. A Circumstance which increas'd their Applauses, and greatly better'd the Treatment of the Army. The Senate immediately went to deliberate upon the Answer which they were to give to Hernan Cortez, concerning the Auxiliary Forces he had desir'd of the Republick. And here we find another Disagreement of our Authors, which unhappily too frequently occur in these Accounts of the Indies, obliging us sometimes to embrace that which has the greatest Appearance of Probability, and very often to be at abundance of Trouble to search for what is only possible. Bernal Diaz says, That he demanded Four Thousand Men, and that they gave him a Refusal, with the Pretence, That their Soldiers durst not take up Arms against the Spaniards, for that they found themselves incapable of resisting the Horses and Fire-Arms. And Antonio de Herrera affirms, That they gave Six Thousand effective Men, and offer'd him a greater Number; which he says were actually incorporated amongst the Spanish Companies, and that at Three Leagues Distance from their City they return'd Home, as not being accusom'd to fight far from their own Confines. But be it as it will, for it is not of any Importance, nor can we pretend to rectify every Error, it is very certain, that the Tlascalans did not appear upon this Occasion. Hernan Cortez demanded their Militia more to make a Noise and Shew with Narvaez than that he much confided in their Arms, or depended on their Service against the Spaniards.

But it is likewise certain, that he parted from that City without Complaint or Distrust of the Tlascalans; for he sought them afterwards, and found them always ready when he had any Occasion for their Service against other Indians; upon which Occasions they were valiant and resolute, having always preserv'd their Liberty in Spite of the whole Power of the Mexican Emperor, so near his Capital City; and that under the Reign of a Prince who center'd his greatest Vanity in the Renown of being call'd a Conqueror. The Army stay'd but a short Time in Tlascala, and, hastening their March, they pass'd on to Matalequita, a Town of Indian Friends, distant Twelve Leagues from Zempoala, where, almost at the same Instant, he was join'd by Gonzalo de Sandoval, with the Troops under his Command, and Seven Soldiers more, who, the Day after the Imprisonment of the Auditor Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, had from the Army pass'd to Vera Cruz, as from that Action having a Suspicion of the Party they were engag'd in. From those Spaniards Cortez was inform'd of all that was transacted in his Enemy's Quarters, and Sandoval gave him an exact Account of all: For before setting out he found Means to introduce into Zempoala Two Spanish Soldiers, who most artfully imitated the Behaviour and Gesture of the Indians, nor were they very much unlike them in their Complexion: These Men voluntarily and chearfully stripp'd themselves, and concealing their Nakedness with the barbarous Cloathing of that Country, early in the Morning enter'd into Zempoala, with each a Basket of Fruit upon his Head, and placing themselves amongst the rest of those who sold that Sort of Provision, truck'd their Fruit for Glas, and so desirous were they in feigning their Eagerness after Trifles, and the Simplicity of the Native Peasants, that no one regarded them; so that they went all about the Town, and escap'd in Safety with what Intelligence they had got: But not contented with only this, they resolv'd to bring Proof of what Sort of Watch this Army kept in the Night, and return'd a Second Time, with each of them a Load of Grass, amongst some Indians who had been out a Foraging; and did not only discover the Enemy's little Vigilance in their Quarters, but confirm'd it by bringing off to Vera Cruz a Horse which they had the Address to convey away from the very Parade, without meeting with the least Opposition; and it happend to belong to Captain Salvatierra, one of the most zealous Sticklers in exasperating Narvaez against Hernan Cortez: A Circumstance which made the Prize much more valuable. These Two Soldiers, notwithstanding they perform'd, upon this Occasion, all that could be expected from Industry and undaunted Resolution, yet their Names are unfortunately and unjustly conceal'd, in a Design so well executed, and in a History wherein we find, at every Step, Actions of far less Moment register'd as Honours to the Name of the Performers.

Cortez founded a great Part of his Hopes upon the small Skill and Experience the opposite Party had in Military Affairs; and the Negligence and supine Security with which Pamphilo de Narvaez govern'd the Troops under his Conduct, furnish'd his Imagination with various Designs: This Supinity proceeded, as Cortez very well knew, from the Contempt in which that General held the inferior Force of the Mexican-Spaniards; nor was Cortez at all displeas'd to see himself and his Partisans, so contemn'd, since it caus'd such a Security in the Enemy's Army; a Security so favourable to his Pretensions, and which seem'd to fight his Battle for him: Nor was he out in that Manner of arguing; it being demonstrably evident, that Security is an utter Enemy to all Precaution, and has occasion'd the Ruin of many a Commander. It ought to be reckon'd amongst the greatest Dangers of War; for, generally speaking, when Two Armies come to measure their Strength, the despis'd Enemy gets the better. In the mean while Cortez was not idle; and tho' he press'd his Competitor with repeated Instances to accommodate their Difference in an amicable Way, as wisely considering that Proposals of Peace ought to precede the Rupture on his Side, yet he made all necessary Preparations for War.

He muster'd his Men, and found he had Two Hundred, Seventy Six Spaniards, including the Officers, and those who came from Vera Cruz with Gonzalo de Sandoval, without reckoning the Indians of Burthen he had to carry the Baggage. After this he dispatch'd Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo a second Time, to make his ultimate Efforts for the adjusting of all Matters in Dispute; but it was not long before that Ecclesiastick sent him Advice of the small Success of his Negotiation. But Cortez desiring still to do something more in order to justify himself, and to gain Time till the Two Thousand Indians which he expected from Chinantla were arriv'd, he resolv'd to send Captain Juan Velasquez de Leon, as believing, that by his Authority, and his near Relation to Diego Velasquez, his Mediation might be better accepted. He had long Experience of his Fidelity, and but a few Days before he had repeated his Protestations of dying by his Side, if there was Occasion, and put into his Hands a Letter sent him by Narvaez, wherein he made him very advantageous Offers, if he would espouse his Interest. A Proof of his Friendship and Integrity, which Sincerity and ingenious Procedure Cortez return'd by confiding to his Management so important a Negotiation. It was generally believ'd, when he arriv'd at Zempoala, that he came determin'd to follow the Banners of his Kinsman Diego Velasquez; and Narvaez with a numerous Retinue went out to receive him: But when he began to understand his Commission, and found he was endeavouring to justify and support the Cause of his Enemy Cortez, he broke off the Discourse, and with some Passion abruptly left him, tho' not altogether without Hopes of reducing him; for before he renew'd the Conversation with him, he gave Orders to muster his whole Force in his Presence, desiring, in Appearance, either to terrify or convince him with this vain Ostentation of his Strength. Some advis'd Narvaez to secure his Person; but that he durst not attempt, by Reason that Gentleman had many Friends in the Army; on the contrary he invited him to Dinner the Day following, as he likewise did all the Officers who were his greatest Friends, and in whom he most confided, to assist him in his Endeavours to bring that Captain over to his Party. The Beginning of the Conversation was all Civility and Compliments: But amidst their Mirth, and the Liberties of the Feast, there began soon after some Ralleries to be introduc'd against Cortez. And notwithstanding Captain Juan Velasques for some Time endeavour'd to dissemble his Uneasiness, that he might not ruin the Negotiation he was intrusted with; yet, when they came to indecent Expressions, and utter'd injurious Invectives against Cortez, he could no longer contain himself, but said aloud with some Warmth; "That they should enter upon some other Discourse, and not revile and speak ill of his absent General, in his Presence;" adding, "That whoever amongst them all, who did not esteem both Hernan Cortez, and every one of his Partisans for good and loyal Subjects to the King of Spain, he would say it before fewer Witnesses, and he would undeceive him after what Manner he pleas'd." They were all silent, and Pamphilo de Narvaez was likewise very much embarrass'd about the Return of an Answer: But a young Captain, a near Kinsman of Diego Velasquez, and of his own Name, took upon him to tell him, "That none was worthy either of being of the Blood, or of bearing the Name of Velasquez, who so strenuously maintain'd a Traytor's Cause." To which Juan Velasquez giving him the Lye, drew his Sword with so determin'd a Resolution to chastise his Insolence, that they had all of them sufficient Trouble to pacify him and prevent Mischief: In short, they desir'd him to return to the Camp of Cortez, to avoid the Inconveniencies which his staying there might produce. He instantly did so, taking with him Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo, and let fall some Words at Parting intimating Revenge, and which seem'd to threaten an open Rupture.

Some of the Officers were much dissatisfy'd that Narvaez had suffer'd him to depart without reconciling the Quarrel between him and his Kinsman, and hearing his Proposal, that they might have return'd an Answer, good or bad, according to what he had in Commission to propose: They said, “ That “ a Person of his Consideration and Authority ought to have “ been treated with more Respect; and that from his Judg“ ment and Sincerity it could not be suppos’d, that he would “ come with any preposterous or unreasonable Message: That

 “ the nicest Punctilios of War never went so far as to hinder
 “ the Freedom of hearing every Thing an Ambassador had to “ say: Nor was it good Policy, nor the right Way to appear “ formidable to an Enemy to give him Cause to believe they “ fear’d his Reasons.” These Discourses pass’d from the Officers to the Soldiers, with so true a Knowledge how little justifiable were their whole Procedure in this War, that Pamphilo de Narvaez was oblig’d, in order to quiet them, to name a Person, who, in his own and in the Names of the whole Party, was to excuse and apologize for that Want of Civility, and to inquire of Cortez, of what Points Juan Velasquez de Leon’s Commission consisted; and to that Effect they unanimously chose the Secretary Andres de Duero, who having less Partiality against Hernan Cortez, seem’d the fittest Person for the Satisfaction of the Malecontents; and upon Account of his being withal a Domestick Servant to Diego Velasquez, might, by those who were averse to an Accommodation, be better confided in than any other.

Hernan Cortez, finding by the Account which Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo and Juan Velasquez de Leon had brought him, that he had more than sufficiently made Advances towards obtaining a Peace, and holding it now absolutely necessary to come to a Rupture, he remov’d his Troops, with a Design of approaching nearer to the Enemy, and of seizing some advantageous Post where he might attend the Arrival of the Chinau-tecas, and consult at Leisure.

He was upon the March when his Scouts came back with Intelligence, that the Secretary Andres de Duero was coming from Zempoala; and Hernan Cortez, not without Hopes of some favourable News, advanc’d to receive him: They saluted each other with equal Demonstration of Friendship and Affection, and renew’d their Embraces several Times, putting each other in Mind of their former Intimacy. The Officers all congratulated his Arrival with great Demonstrations of Joy and Satisfaction; and before they came to the immediate Point of the Negotiation, Cortez made him several valuable Presents, accompany’d with Promises of much more. He stay’d all the next Day, after Dinner, during which Time they had several private Conferences with great Freedom and Intimacy. They discours’d

discours'd of some Mediums, in order to a Union between the Two contending Parties, and were very desirous of finding out a Way to reduce Narvaez to Reason, whose Obstinacy and untractable Temper was the only Obstacle to the desir'd Peace. Cortez went so far as to relinquish to his Competitor the Mexican Expedition, and to go with his Partisans in Quest of other Conquests. And Andres de Duero, seeing him act so nobly and generously with his Enemy, propos'd an Interview; not doubting but that he might prevail with Narvaez to give him a Meeting, and that by the personal Appearance and Communication of those Two Rivals, all their Disputes and Animosities would be the easier surmounted. Some say, that he carry'd Orders with him to make that Proposal: Others, that it was wholly owing to Cortez; but all agree, that an Interview was resolv'd upon, and adjusted, as soon as Andres de Duero return'd to Zempoala; by whose Care and Diligence an authentic Agreement was made, assigning the Hour and Place where the Conference was to be held; each giving Assurance, under his Hand, that he would come to the Place appointed, accompany'd with only Ten Friends, who were to serve as Witnesses to whatever should be said, transacted, or agreed upon.

But at the very Time while Hernan Cortez was preparing himself to observe with all Punctuality, on his Part, the Conditions of that Agreement, Andres de Duero gave him private Notice, That Narvaez had resolv'd to lay an Ambush, with a Design to take or kill him; which being likewise confirm'd by others of his Friends, he was so stung; that he wrote to Narvaez, giving him to understand, "That he had discover'd
" his base unmanlike Treachery, and that from that Moment
" he renounc'd all Thoughts of Accommodation; remitting
" his farther Satisfaction to the Decision of the Sword." Had it not been for this timely Advice, his Credulity and sincere Manner of Proceeding would have hurry'd him blindly into the Hands of his implacable Enemy; and he was scarce capable of justifying himself to his own People, for this Want of Caution; this precipitate Confidence, in trusting to Narvaez after so many repeated Proofs of his sinister Intentions. But nevertheless he cannot justly be accus'd of having acted the Part of an imprudent Commander in putting that Confidence in his Competitor's Word; since, upon such Occasions, Breach of Faith is a Villany of so black and infamous a Nature, that an Enemy ought never to be suspected capable even of attempting it: For such perfidious Wiles as those are not to be allow'd a Place among the Stratagems of War, nor are Treacheries

Treacheries and Deceits which leave a Stain upon the Honour of those who commit them, ever authoriz'd even in the most inveterate and rigorous War.

C H A P. IX.

HERNAN CORTEZ continues his March till within a League of Zempoala. PAMPHILO DE NARVAEZ takes the Field with his Troops. Is oblig'd to retire by the Badness of the Weather. CORTEZ resolves to attack him in his Quarters.

HERNAN CORTEZ was rather animated, than incens'd at this fresh Instance of his Competitor's Perfidy. An Enemy capable of such base grovling Thoughts appearing unworthy of his Apprehensions, as believing that one who had endeavour'd to secure a Victory at the Expence of his own Honour and Reputation, could never have any great Dependance either upon himself or his Partisans. He pursu'd his March with more than ordinary Diligence and Expedition, not that he had absolutely determin'd upon the Measures he was to take, but having his Heart full of Hopes, he was spur'd on by a certain Confidence which seldom fails to be the Forerunner of Success. He took his Station within a League of Zempoala, in a Place where his Front was defended by a River, call'd the River of Canoas, and his Rear by the Neighbourhood of Vera Cruz, where the Inhabitants assign'd them some Cottages, sufficiently commodious to quarter his People and to refresh them after what they had suffer'd from the scorching Heat of the Sun, and the Fatigues of that tedious March.

He order'd some Scouts to pass on the other Side of the River, where he likewise posted Centinels, that when his Troops had for some Time refresh'd themselves, he might consult with his Officers concerning what Measures were to be taken, according to the Intelligence he should receive from the Enemy, amongst whom he had gain'd some Friends, and believ'd, that when Opportunity offer'd, all who had a Dislike to this War would espouse his Interest; which Supposition, and the small Experience and Capacity of Narvaez, gave him sufficient Encouragement to venture so near Zempoala, without the Imputation of Imprudence or Temerity. Narvaez had Information of the Place where his Enemy was lodg'd; and with more Hurry and Precipitation than Conduct and Circumspection, and a Haste which appear'd very like Confusion, he drew out his Troops into the Field, where he immediately order'd the War to be proclaim'd, as if it had not already been sufficiently publish'd. He assign'd a Reward of Two Thousand Pieces of Eight to any who should bring him the Head of Cortez, and a lesser Price for those of Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Juan Velasquez de Leon. He issued out several Orders at once, never forgetting to express his Inveteracy, and still mixing Threats with all he spoke, and every Thing he did shew'd a great Contempt of his Enemy, but still with some Appearances of Dread. His Troops being at last plac'd in Order, not by any Disposition of his, but by that of the Officers, who did their Duty without much minding what he said: He march'd about a Quarter of a League at the Head of his Army, being determin'd to halt and wait for Cortez in the open Field; foolishly persuading himself, that he had so little Judgment as to offer to attack him in such a Place where his Enemy might make all the Advantage of the great Superiority of his Numbers. Obstinate persisting in that vain Credulity, he continued in that Post the whole Day, wasting his Time, and deceiving his Imagination with various inconsistent Thoughts, which gave him Confidence, and fondly flatter'd his Hopes. He had already distributed amongst his Soldiers the Enemy's Spoil, enriching his Captains with the Treasures of Mexico; and talk'd very much of the Victory, but little or nothing of the Engagement. But as the Sun was just upon setting, the Weather grew extremely dark and cloudy, and those Clouds began to discharge so prodigious a Quantity of Rain, that the Soldiers bestow'd many bitter Curses upon their Expedition, and, with loud Clamours, demanded to return to their Quarters. The Officers likewise soon grew as impatient as the rest, and without much Difficulty prevail'd with Narvaez, who also had his Share of the general Uneasiness; they being all quite unaccustom'd to resist the Inclemencies of such tempestuous Weather, and many of them were averse to a War which was like to be attended with so many Inconveniencies.

Narvaez had a little before receiv'd Information, that Cortez kept himself on the other Side of the River; from which, he reasonably enough conjectur'd, that they had nothing to apprehend from the Enemy's Quarters for that Night: And as People are generally very willing to believe what they desire, they all

all unanimously agreed, that it was absolutely necessary that they should retire, and put it in Execution in great Disorder, running to seek for Shelter, more like Men before an Enemy than like Soldiers upon a March. Narvaez however would not suffer his Forces to separate that Night; rather because he design'd to take the Field early in the Morning, than for any Jealousy he had of Cortez, notwithstanding he affected the Vigilance and Care a General ought to have when an Enemy is so near him. They all lodg'd themselves in the principal Temple of the City, which consisted of Three Towers, or Chappels, at a small Distance from each other, seated on an Eminence, and sufficiently capacious, to which they went up by many ill-contriv'd Steps, the Steepness and Difficulty of whose Ascent very much added to the Security of the Height. The Rails at the Foot of the Stairs he fortify'd with his Artillery. For himself he chose the Middle Tower, to which he retir'd with some Officers, and about One Hundred Soldiers of those in whom he most confided; and the rest of his Troops he distributed in the other Two, sending out some Horse to scour the Neighbourhood, and order'd Two Centinels to be posted at the Avenues; and with these Precautions, which, in his Opinion, left nothing unsecur'd with Respect to good Discipline, he devoted the Remainder of the Night to rest; and so far was he from imagining or surmizing any Danger, that he gave himself up to Sleep, without taking any farther Care or Concern.

Andrez de Duero instantly dispatch'd away One he confided in, and who could go out of the Place unsuspected, to inform Cortez by Word of Mouth of their Return, and in what Manner they had dispos'd themselves in their Quarters, rather to make him easy by this friendly Advice, that he might pass the Night in Quiet, than to send him Intelligence, or stir him up to new Designs. But Cortez upon this Notice delay'd but little in determining to lay hold of the favourable Opportunity which invited him to Success. He had maturely premeditated all the Accidents which might offer themselves during the Course of this War; and, as sometimes a Man must shut his Eyes to Difficulties which always appear greatest at a Distance, and ought to recollect, that there are some Cases where Reasoning is an Enemy to Execution, he call'd his People together without more Delay, and put them in Order, notwithstanding the Tempest continued: But his Soldiers, already inur'd to greater Fatigues, obey'd without complaining of the Badness of the Weather, or inquiring the Occasion of so unseasonable sonable and unexpected a Motion ; so much they depended upon the Prudence and good Conduct of their Leader. They pass'd the River with the Water above their Middle, and this Difficulty being overcome, he made them a short Speech, wherein he communicated his Design to them, without making the least Doubt of the Success of his Resolution, nor yet barring the Way to wholesome Advice. He inform'd them with what Confusion and Disorder the Enemy had retir'd ; seeking to shelter themselves in Quarters to defend them against the Rigour of the Night : He likewise told them how they were divided, and the Manner how they were distributed in the Towers of the Temple : He aggravated the Carelessness and Security in which they were, and with what Facility they might be attack'd, before they could be able to unite, or have Room to draw up : And perceiving that they not only did not oppose the Proposal, but approv'd and applauded it, he pursued his Harangue, delivering himself with fresh Ardour ; This Night, my Friends, said he, this Night, Heaven has vouchsaf'd to put into our Hands the most favourable Opportunity that Desire itself could frame : You shall this Night be Witnesses of the great Confidence I repose in your Courage ; and I must ingenuously confess, that it is your known Valour alone which inspires me with these bold Attempts. A few Hours ago we expected our Enemies here, with the Hopes of vanquishing them by the Advantage of this River : Now we have them supinely careless and disunited, the very Contempt with which they treat us fighting on our Side. From the shameful Impatience with which they quitted the Field, flying from the Inclemency of the Night, a slight Inconveniency of Nature, we may readily gather what Use those Men will make of that Ease which they sought with such pusillanimous Weakness, and enjoy without Jealousy or Suspicion. Narvaez has but little Knowledge of the Niceties and Punctuality to which the Chances of War oblige Men : His Soldiers are for the most part Novices, People pick'd up in Haste, who have never seen any Service, and will not find it very easy to rally in the Obscurity of the Night, since a little Matter will put them into Disorder in the Presence of the Sun. Many have been disoblig'd, and complain of their Captain's Conduct ; nor are there wanting some who favour our Party, and not a few who hold this War in Detestation ; and Arms feel heavy when they move against Inclination : But both the one and the other must be treated like Enemies, till they declare themselves ; for should they overcome us, we shall be us'd like Rebels and Traytors. Notwithstanding Reason and Justice is on our Side, yet in War Reason is an Enemy to the Negligent, and generally declares for the Conquerors. They come to take from you all that you have acquir'd ; nor do they aspire at less than to be the absolute

Lords of your Liberties, Goods, and Hopes. They will call our Victories, theirs: Theirs the Land which you have conquer'd at the Expence of your Blood: Theirs the Glory of your Heroick Exploits: And the worst of all is, that with the same Foot with which they endeavour to tread on our Necks, they tread on the Service of our Sovereign, and put a Stop to the Progress of our Religion; for those will all be lost if we are vanquish'd; and notwithstanding the Fault will be theirs, yet it will be question'd who are the Guilty. The Way to prevent these Evils is to behave yourselves this Night with your accustom'd Intrepidity: You are far better able to execute than I am to dictate: Betake yourselves to your Arms, and forget not your Custom of conquering: God and the King in your Hearts, Honour in your Eyes, and Argument in your Hands: I will be your inseparable Companion in all the Danger, and I less pretend to encourage you by my Words, than I do to persuade you by my Example.

Their Minds were so fir'd with this Speech of Cortez, that the Soldiers made pressing Instances not to delay the March. They all acknowledg'd the Justness of his Resolution, and some protested to him, "That if he once offer'd to think of any Accommodation with Narvaez, they would withdraw their Obedience:" Words of Men resolute and determin'd, which did not sound ill in the Ears of Cortez, because they rather express'd Briskness than Disrespect. Without Loss of Time he form'd Three small Bodies of his Men, which were to succeed each other in the Assault. The First he committed to the Charge of Gonzalo de Sandoval, with Seventy Men; in which Number were comprehended the Captains George and Gonzalo de Alvarado, Alonso Davila, Juan Velasquez de Leon, Juan Nunez de Mercado, and our Historian Bernal Diaz del Castillo. For Commander of the Second he nam'd the Maestre de Campo, Christoval de Olid, with Seventy Men more, assisted by Andres de Tapia, Rodrigo Rangel, Juan Xaramillo, and Bernardino Vasquez de Tapia: Cortez himself commanded the rest, with the Captains Diego de Ordaz, Alonso de Grado, Christoval, and Martin de Gamboa, Diego Pizarro, and Domingo de Albuquerque. The Disposition was, "That Gonzalo de Sandoval, at the Head of the Van-

" Guard, should endeavour to overcome the first Difficulty of
 " the Stairs, and frustrate the Use of the Artillery, dividing his " Men so as to interrupt the Communication of the Two " Towers on the Sides; taking great Care to keep a profound " Silence amongst the People: That Christoval de Olid, should " immediately use his utmost Endeavours to get up and invest
 " the Tower where Narvaez was lodg'd, and carry on the " Attack with all the Vigour they possibly could: That the " General himself should, with those who follow'd him, take " Care

“ Care to back them, and to animate and assist wheresoever
 “ his Presence was most necessary ; and that as soon as they “ had given the Attack, the Drums should beat, and the o“ ther Warlike Instruments should sound, that so unexpected
 “ a Noise might contribute to strike a Terror into the Enemy, “ and increase their Confusion.” Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo then began his Spiritual Exhortation, and gave them to understand, in pathetick Terms, That they were going to fight for God’s Cause, encouraging and exhorting them to do their Duty to the utmost of their Ability, in order to merit his Divine Favour. There was a Cross in the Road, which they themselves had fix’d there when they had pass’d to Mexico, before which they all fell down on their Knees, while the pious Ecclesiastick dictated to them an Act of Contrition, which with Voices, expressing a fervent Zeal, they all pronounc’d after him : He then order’d them to recite the General Confession of Faith ; and giving them his Blessing and Absolution, he left their Minds inspir’d with an Ardour, which, tho’ their Thoughts were before generous and resolute, was of a sublimer and more refin’d Nature ; for the Quiet of a Man’s Conscience either lessens the Horrors and Apprehensions of Danger, or strengthens the Contempt of Death.

This Act of Devotion being over, Hernan Cortez put his Three little Battalions into Order : He dispos’d the Pikes and Fire Arms in their proper Places ; repeated to the Officers their Instructions, and very particularly recommended Silence to all :
 The Word he gave them was El Espiritu Santo, i. e. The Holy Ghost, it being then Whitsontide. He then began his March, in the same Order they were to give the Assault, keeping a very slow Pace, that they might not arrive tir’d, and to give likewise the more Time to the Enemy to indulge themselves with Rest, depending pretty much on the Advantage he had of their Security and Negligence, whereby he hop’d, at a cheaper Rate, to overcome them, without having the least Scruple for his acting, upon this Occasion, with less Generosity than he was wont, in this Manner of surprizing his Enemy, call’d by the Ancients Faults of Emperors and Commanders ;
 for all Stratagems, which are not actual Breach of Faith, are lawful Permissions in the Art Military, and the Preference between the Conduct and the Courage of a Soldier is disputable.

C H A P. X.

HERNAN CORTEZ arrives at Zempoala, where he finds Opposition. He obtains the Victory, and takes NARVAEZ Prisoner, whose Troops he obliges to serve under his Banner.

CORTEZ had march'd somewhat more than half a League, when his Scouts return'd with a Centinel of Narvaez, whom they had surpriz'd and taken Prisoner; and inform'd him that the other, his Companion, who was a little behind, had escap'd among the Bushes; an Accident which destroy'd their Supposition of finding a sleeping Enemy. Upon this they held a short Consultation amongst the Officers; and it was unanimously agreed, That it was wholly improbable that the Soldier, in Case he had discover'd their March, would be so bold as to offer to return by the direct Road at first, it being more likely that he would take a round about Way to avoid the Danger. The Result of all was, without Delay to hasten their March, that they might, if possible, arrive to the Enemies Quarters before that Spy, or at least as soon as he; supposing that if he had not the Advantage of assaulting them sleeping, they should find them scarce well awake, and in the Disorder of their first Surprise. Thus they argued as they went, still advancing with the utmost Expedition, and when they came near the Town, they left their Horses, Baggage, and other Incumbrances, at a Brook a little out of the Road. But the Centinel, whose Fear gave him Wings, arriv'd some Minutes before them, and gave the Alarm, crying out as loud as he could, The Enemy is upon us. Those who were most alert instantly betook themselves to their Arms, and brought that Soldier before Narvaez, who after asking him some Questions, made slight both of the Intelligence and the Person who brought it; holding it for a Thing impracticable, that Cortez durst have the Presumption to seek him with so small a Number, within his very Lodgment, or that he could march in a Night so dark and tempestuous.

It was but a little more than Midnight when Hernan Cortez reach'd Zempoala, and he had the good Fortune not to be discover'd by the Enemies Cavalry, who, it is probable, had either lost their Way in the Obscurity of the Night, or had quitted the Road to seek some Shelter against the Rain. He enter'd the Town, and came with his Troops within Sight of the Temple, without finding any Corps de Guard, or Centinel to challenge him. The Dispute was then at the highest between Narvaez and the Soldier, who affirm'd, he not only saw the Enemy's Van-Guard, but likewise the whole Army upon a hasty March: But Narvaez and his People still found Pretences to justify and indulge their Security, and in canvassing and weighing the Probability of that Intelligence, lost that Time, which even had the News been more improbable than they imagin'd it, ought to have been employ'd in Prevention; walking backwards and forwards in the uppermost Porch, some dubious of the Truth of the Intelligence their Commander had receiv'd, and others less diffident, giving Credit to it; but all in general with their Arms in their Hands, and little less than prepar'd for whatever might happen. Cortez soon perceiv'd they had discover'd him: And finding himself now in the second of the Cases which they had before consider'd, resolv'd to give the Assault before they should put themselves in Order. He made the Signal for the Attack, and Gonzalo de Sandoval, with his Van-Guard, began to mount the Stairs, according to the Instructions they had receiv'd. Some of the Men belonging to the Artillery, who were upon Guard, heard the Noise, and firing two or three Pieces, sounded an Alarm, which sufficiently convinc'd them all of the Truth of the first Rumour. This Alarm was immediately succeeded by the Noise of Drums, and confus'd Voices; and presently those who found themselves nearest at Hand, repair'd to the Defence of the Stairs. The Opposition soon increas'd, and the Dispute came to Push of Pike and Sword. Gonzalo de Sandoval was extremely put to it, being at once to force his Way against a far superior Number, with the Disadvantage of lower Ground: But it was not long before Christoval de Olid came up to his Relief, and Hernan Cortez, leaving his Rear form'd, flung himself into the hottest of the Engagement, facilitating the Advance of both those Captains, and performing with his Sword what he inspir'd with his Voice, whose Resolution and Impetuosity the Enemy unable to withstand, in a few Moments began to give Ground, quitting the last Step; and soon after retreating in great Disorder, abandoning the Porch, and the Artillery.

Artillery. Many fled to their Quarters, others repair'd to the Gate of the principal Tower, where the Dispute again began, and continu'd for some Time with equal Courage on both Sides.

Pamphilo de Narvaez, who, by his Friends Persuasion, had stay'd to arm himself, now made his Appearance: He encourag'd, with his Words, those who were engaging the Enemy, and did all he could to put them in Order. He then advanc'd with so much Boldness into the thickest of the Fight, that being near one Pedro Sanchez Farfan, a Soldier of Sandoval's Company, that Man gave him a Thrust in the Face with his Pike, which struck out one of his Eyes, whereupon he fell down, without being able to say any more than, I am a dead Man! The News of this Accident soon spread amongst his Troops: They were all seiz'd with Fear and Consternation, tho' with various Effects; for some abandon'd him shamefully; others stood motionless as if they had been Thunder-struck; and those who were most desirous of doing their utmost to succour him, fought like Men amaz'd, and in Confusion at the Suddenness of the Accident; insomuch that they found themselves oblig'd to retreat, leaving the Conquerors at Liberty to convey him away, who carry'd, or rather dragg'd him down the Stairs. Cortez sent Orders to Gonzalo de Sandoval, to take Care of securing his Person, which was put in Execution, by delivering him to the Body of Men which was in the Rear: And that Commander, who a little before beheld this War with so careless an Eye, upon the Recovery of his Senses, found himself not only with the Pain of his Wound, but also in the Power of his Enemies, and with Two Pair of Fetters upon his Legs, without the least Prospect of obtaining his Liberty.

The Dispute was now, for want of Resistance, at an End. The Followers of Narvaez all shut themselves up in their Towers, so greatly terrify'd that they durst not offer to fire one Shot, and only took Care to defend the Entrance. The Partisans of Cortez with loud Voices proclaim'd their Victory, some repeating the Name of Cortez, others that of the Emperor Don Carlos, and the most considerate invoc'd the Holy Ghost. These Acclamations of anticipated Joy did not a little serve to increase the Enemy's Consternation, which was, in that Juncture, supported by a Circumstance of no small Importance towards persuading them to believe that Cortez had brought thither a very powerful Army, which to their thinking; fill'd a great Part of the circumjacent Country; for from the Windows of their Towers they discover'd Lights at different Distances, which thro' the Night's Obscurity appear'd to their Eyes like lighted Matches in the Hands of numerous Bands of Harquebusiers. These Lights were no other than certain Insects which shine by Night like Glow-Worms, but much brighter and of a larger Size than those in our Hemisphere: An Apprehension which had a very singular Influence upon the Minds of the more vulgar Part of the Army, and inspir'd with Doubts and Mistrusts even those who shew'd themselves most resolute. So apt are the Unfortunate to be shock'd and disturb'd at the least Effects of Chance.

Cortez commanded his Men to cease their Acclamations of Victory, the unseasonable Belief of which is very often of bad Consequence, and ought to be avoided and prevented, because it renders Soldiers careless and disorderly. He gave Orders that the Artillery should be turn'd against the Towers, and caus'd a general Pardon to be proclaim'd for those who would surrender; offering very reasonable Conditions, and a Communication of Interests to all those who would resolve to follow his Banners; Liberty and free Passage to those who were willing to return to the Island of Cuba, and to all in general Security for their Persons and Baggage, which was very prudently consider'd; for it greatly import'd that he should make this Declaration of his Intentions before the Day, whose Dawn was not far off, should undeceive those People, and shew how inconsiderable a Force held them oppress'd, and give them Courage to recover from the Terror they were in: For sometimes Fear is converted into Rashness, out of mere Shame for having been alarm'd without suitable Foundation.

They had scarce finish'd the Publication to the Three separate Holds where the Enemy had retreated, when the Officers and Soldiers, in whole Troops, came to surrender themselves. As they arriv'd they every one deliver'd up their Arms; and Cortez, with his accusom'd Urbanity, receiv'd them very courteously, but, at the same Time, caus'd his Friends, as well as the others, to be disarm'd, either to conceal their Inclinations, or that their Example might serve as a Precedent to the rest. The Number of those who surrender'd increas'd to that Degree in a few Moments, that it was necessary to separate, and secure them with sufficient Guards till Day should discover their Countenances and Affections.

In the mean while Gonzalo de Sandoval did not forget Narvaez, but had his Wound carefully dress'd; and Hernan Cortez, who indefatigably went up and down to every Quarter, and consider'd Narvaez as his principal Care, went to see him, not intending to discover himself, that he might not add to his Affliction by his Presence; but the Respect his Soldiers shew'd him at his Approach discover'd him; and Narvaez turning himself to look on him with the Air of one who was not throughly sensible of his Misfortune, said, "Be thankful and value your self, Captain, upon the Good Fortune you have had in making me your Prisoner." To which Correz reply'd, "Thanks be to God for all Things, Friend: But without any Manner of Vanity, I do assure you, that I account this Victory and your Imprisonment amongst the least considerable Actions which have been transacted in this Country."

Cortez had Notice brought him, that one of the Towers, in which the Captains Salvatierra and Diego Velasquez the Younger had fortify'd themselves, made an obstinate Defence, those Officers, by their Authority and Persuasions, preventing the Soldiers who were with them from surrendring: Whereupon Cortez immediately return'd to the Temple, and caus'd them to be summon'd and acquainted, that if they would not surrender, they should be treated with the utmost Rigour of War; and finding they were resolutely bent either to defend themselves to the last, or to capitulate, he, not without some Heat, gave Orders to play with Two Pieces of Artillery upon the Tower; but presently after, he directed his Gunners to discharge against the Top of the Building, more to terrify than to hurt them. This Order they punctually executed, and there needed no more Trouble, that being sufficient to bring out the greatest Part of the Defendants to ask Quarter, leaving the Entrance of the Tower free, which Juan Velasquez de Leon soon possessed himself of, with a small Body of his Men, seizing the Captains Salvatierra and Velasquez, both declar'd Enemies, and who, it was to be fear'd, might aspire to supply the Vacancy of Narvaez. This completed the Victory in Favour of Cortez: On his Side only Two Soldiers were kill'd, and some few wounded, of which Number Two more are said to have died afterwards. Of the contrary Faction were kill'd a Captain, an Ensign, with Fifteen private Men, and the Number of the Wounded was much more considerable. Narvaez and Salvatierra were sent to Vera Cruz with a sufficient Guard. Young Diego Velasquez remain'd Prisoner with Juan Velasquez de Leon; and notwithstanding he had given him a just Cause of Resentment upon Account of what had happen'd at Zempoala, he took particular Care both of his Cure and Entertainment, to which he was partly mov'd by the Tye of Blood, but chiefly out of a noble and generous Inclination. All this was perform'd form'd before the Morning, and was a remarkable Action both on Account of the Justness of the Measures which Cortez took, and the Weaknesses, Oversights, and irregular Conduct of Narvaez.

At Break of Day arriv'd the Two Thousand Chimantecas which Cortez demanded; and notwithstanding they came after the Victory, Cortez was very glad at their Coming, being well pleas'd that his Prisoners should see he did not want Friends to assist him. With Shame and Confusion did the poor vanquish'd Spaniards reflect upon the Condition in which they then found themselves. The Day-Light set their Ignominy in full View before their Eyes: They beheld the Arrival of those Succours, and soon came to the Knowledge of the small Force with which Cortez had obtain'd the Victory: They curs'd the the Confidence and Supinity of Narvaez, and condemn'd his thoughtless Indolence; all which Reflections made Way for their greater Esteem of Cortez, whose Vigilance and undaunted Courage they consider'd with no less Admiration. It is the Prerogative of Valour, more especially in War, not to be hated even by those who envy it. The Unfortunate may, indeed, be sensible of their Disgrace, and may feel it with Regret; yet the heroick Exploits of a Conqueror lose no Part of their Lustre in the Eyes of the Conquer'd: A Maxim which was never more verify'd than upon this Occasion; for there was not amongst all those Prisoners one Soldier but who had a secret Inclination to follow the Fortune of an abler Leader, (yet still without communicating his Sentiments to the rest) and to serve under the Banners of an Army where the Soldiers acquir'd both Honour and Wealth.

Cortez had no small Number of real Friends and Well-Wishers amongst them, besides many who were affected with his Valour, and more who were charm'd with his Liberality. His real Friends at last threw aside the Mask of Dissimulation, and gave a Beginning to the Acclamations with which all who were disinterestedly affected presently declar'd themselves, and the rest soon follow'd their Example. They were admitted to the Presence of their new General: Many would have cast themselves at his Feet, had he not prevented them with his Embraces. They all gave in their Names, disputing for the Preference on the Roll, nor was there one amongst all that Number who made the least Motion of returning to the Island of Cuba.

Hernan Cortez had, by these Means, gain'd the principal Advantage he propos'd in this Undertaking; for he did not so much desire to conquer those Spaniards, as he did to bring them over to his Party. He made it his Business to consider and pry into their Inclinations, and having found in them all a sufficient Sincerity, he soon after order'd their Arms to be return'd; an Action which some of his Officers were very averse to, and had endeavour'd to prevent: But there wanted not Motives for this Confidence and Security. Those of the greatest Authority and Distinction among them were his real Friends, and the Chinantecas being there was a considerable Security to his Party. They acknowledg'd the Favour they receiv'd, and, with fresh Acclamations, applauded the Trust he put in them; so that in a few Hours Cortez found himself possess'd of an Army of more than a Thousand Spaniards, the only Enemies who could give him Umbrage, safe in his Custody, a Fleet of Eleven Ships and Seven Brigantines at his Disposal, the last Effort of Diego Velasquez overthrown and brought to nought, Master of sufficient Force to return to his principal Conquest; all which was owing to his undaunted Heart, great Vigilance, and Military Skill; and not a little to the Valour and Compliance of his Soldiers who had first so readily approv'd of this dangerous Enterprize, and afterwards, with the Sword, had gain'd him not only the Victory, but that which he chiefly desir'd: For in the Opinion of those who set up for Judges of Fame and Reputation, it is Success alone that crowns the Design, and often gives the Reputation of Prudent Conduct to the rashest and most hazardous Undertakings.

C H A P. XI.

CORTEZ reduces the Cavalry of NARVAEZ which kept the Field. He receives Information that the Mexicans had taken up Arms against the Spaniards which he had left with MOTEZUMA. He marches with his Army to Mexico, and enters that City without Opposition.

THE Cavalry of Narvaez did not appear that Night, which had they been dispos'd as a Place of Arms, at so small a Distance from the Enemy, requir'd, might have been very troublesome to Cortez: But there all Military Rules were laid aside; for when once the Commander in Chief falls into the Errors of Negligence and Security, all the false Steps he makes seem less strange, since the Absurdities of his Conduct pass for Consequences. Those who had least Share in the Action made Use of the Horses to make their Escape; and in the Morning came Advice, that they had join'd those who were detach'd for Scouts the Night before, and made up a Body of about Forty Horse, with which they beat up and down the Neighbourhood with a Countenance as if they intended to make Resistance. This News gave but little Umbrage; and Hernan Cortez, before he would proceed to violent Methods against them, sent Two Officers, Christoval de Olid, and Diego de Ordaz, to endeavour to reduce them by fair Means, which Commission they presently put in Execution, and, at the first Offer of their being admitted into the Army upon the same Footing with their Companions, brought them to Reason, the Example set them by the rest being sufficient to induce them all readily to come in and take Service under Cortez with their Arms and Horses. Immediate Care was taken of the Wounded, for whom and all the rest convenient Quarters were provided, upon which Occasion the Cazique and his Zempoalans assisted chearfully and diligently, celebrating the Victory, and disposing all Things for the Entertainment of their Friends with a Kind of interested Joy, in which they seem'd to breathe after their past Fatigues.

Hernan

Hernán Cortez was not negligent as to what regarded the Security of the Armada; a very essential Point at this nice Juncture. He sent immediate Orders to Captain Francisco de Lugo, that he should cause the Sails, Tackling, and Rudders of all the Vessels to be brought Ashore and laid up at Vera Cruz. He order'd that the Pilots and Mariners who came with Narvaez should come to Zempoala, and sent such a Number of his own as he thought sufficient to take Care of the Hulls. With these he appointed one Pedro Cavallero, to go in Quality of their Chief, or Supervisor, a sufficient Employment for Bernal Diaz to honour him with the Title of Admiral of the Sea.

After this he dismiss'd the Chinantecas, who return'd Home, making as great Acknowledgment for their Succour as if they had done him actual Service: He then allow'd some Days for the Refreshment of his Troops, during which Time the Inhabitants of the neighbouring Villages, and Caziques of the circumjacent Country came to congratulate the Good Spaniards, or Gentle Tealés, or Gods, for so they call'd those who belong'd to Cortez. They renew'd their Obedience, and made fresh Offers of their Friendship, accompanying these Demonstrations of Respect with many Presents and Regales, whereat the People of Narvaez did not a little admire; beginning to experience the Advantages of the new Party they had embrac'd in the Entertainment and Security of those Indians, who a little before had appear'd discontented, sullen and terrify'd.

But notwithstanding this Chain of Success, Cortez had Mexico continually at Heart: The Dangers to which he had left Pedro de Alvarado and his Spaniards expos'd, was never one Moment out of his Mind. He was sensible that their Security consisted solely on that little Dependance he might have upon the Promise Moteczuma had made him, of not attempting any Change in his Absence: An Obligation of no great Force, where the Princes are arbitrary and their Will absolute, and where their Statesmen, with various Solutions, seldom fail of pretending to free their Sovereigns from all Tyes, maintaining, that they are not oblig'd to the Observance of their Words like private Men: An abominable State Maxim, which upon this Occasion gave Cortez sufficient Ground for Apprehension, yet still without approving so base a Policy by an open Suspicion; for to admit, in any Manner, of a King's breaking his Word is the same Thing as to acquit him of the Obligations of a Man of Honour. Having fix'd his Resolution of immediately returning to Mexico, and not being willing to run the Hazard of taking with him so numerous a Body of Men, for Fear of giving

giving Umbrage to Motezuma, and moving afresh the unquiet Spirits of his Courtiers, he determin'd to divide his Army, and employ some Part of his Troops in other Conquests. To this Effect he appointed Juan Velasquez de Leon to take Two Hundred Men under his Conduct, and march to the Province of Panuco, to pacify the Disturbances there, and Diego de Ordaz, with Two Hundred more to people the Country of Guazacoalco; reserving for himself little more than Six Hundred Spaniards, a Number which he thought well proportion'd for his Return to the Mexican Court with some Appearance of Modesty, yet without wholly laying aside the Marks of a Conqueror.

But at the very Time when this Disposition was going to be put in Execution, something new offer'd which oblig'd him to change his Resolutions: For he receiv'd a Letter from Pedro de Alvarado, wherein that Officer inform'd him, "That the " Mexicans had taken up Arms against him; and in Spite of " Motezuma; who had never once offer'd to leave the Quar" ters, had made such frequent Attacks, and in such Mul" titudes, that himself, and all who were with him, would " be inevitably lost if they were not speedily succour'd." This Intelligence was brought by a Spanish Soldier, accompany'd by an Embassador from Motezuma, whose Message was to lay before Cortez the following Representations, "That it " had been intirely out of his Sovereign's Power to repress
" the Fury of his seditious Vassals: That his Royal Authority
" had suffer'd extremely from those Mutineers: That his " Majesty assur'd him, he would never abandon Pedro de Alva-
" rado, and the Spaniards;" and lastly, he invited him to Court, with all possible Expedition, to apply a Remedy to that Evil. Whether it was upon Account of the ill Consequences that Sedition might produce to himself, or whether upon Account of the Danger his Spanish Guests were in, both the one and the other argue his Sincerity, and the great Confidence he repos'd in Cortez.

There was no Occasion to consult about what Resolution was to be taken in this Case, for both Officers and Soldiers voted their immediate March to be absolutely indispensable: Some taking for a seasonable and lucky Presage this Accident which serv'd as a Pretext to prevent the Division of their Forces, and to return with the whole Body to Mexico, from the Reduction of which Place their future Conquests were all to commence. Cortez, without Delay, nam'd for Governor of Vera Cruz, in Quality of Deputy, or Lieutenant to Gonzalo de Sandoval, one Rodrigo Rangel, a Person in whom he confided, to whose Capacity and Care he might venture to trust the Security of the Prisoners, and the Preservation of his Indian Allies. He then caus'd his Army to be muster'd, and after having deducted a Garrison proper to be left at Zempoala, with a sufficient Number for the Security of the Vessels, he found it to consist of a Thousand Foot, and One Hundred Horse. He took different Routs, both to avoid incommoding the Country People, and for the greater Conveniency of procuring Plenty of Provisions, and appointed for the general Rendezvous, a Place well known near Tlascala, into which they thought it necessary to march united, and in good Order: But notwithstanding several Commissaries were sent before, to furnish the Army on the March, all their Diligence was not sufficient to prevent those who march'd out of the principal Road from suffering Hunger sometimes, and frequently intolerable Thirst. These Fatigues and Hardships those who came with Narvaez endur'd without murmuring or being dishearten'd; tho' they were the same Men who, a little before, had given Way to less unsupportable Inconveniencies, which Change must be attributed either to the Example set them by the Veterans, or to the Hopes with which their Hearts were inspir'd, and may be also partly imputed to the Difference of the Leader, an Opinion of whom is generally wont to have a secret Influence upon the Soldiers, both as to their Courage in Battle, as to their Patience in undergoing Hardships.

Cortez, before his setting out, wrote an Answer to Pedro de Alvarado, and sent to Moteczuma by his Embassador, giving them an Account of his Victory, Return, and the Increase of his Army; to the one, to encourage him with the Hopes of powerful Succour; and to the other, that he might not be surpriz'd to see him return with so great a Force, since the Disturbances in his Capital oblig'd him not to divide his Troops. He regulated his March by the Necessity he was under, making all the Expedition he possibly could; lessening the Hours of Refreshment, which he seem'd to find even in the Fatigue he underwent. He made some Stay at the Place of Rendezvous to gather up his People, who came by different Roads, and at last arriv'd at Tlascala, on the Seventeenth of June, with all his Troops in good Order. His Entry was splendid and joyful. Magiscatzin entertain'd Cortez at his own House. The rest were accomodated, respected, and well regal'd, in their several Quarters. The Hatred the Tlascalans bore the Mexicans was as little conceal'd, as was their Love to the Spaniards. They acquainted them with their Conspiracy, and the imminent Danger

Pedro de Alvarado was in, with Circumstances of more Affection than Certainty: They exaggerated the Presumption and the Perfidy of that Nation, exciting the Spaniards to Revenge, mixing their Counsel and Insinuation together with no great Artifice, magnifying the Crimes of the Mexicans with a suspicious Zeal; for Truths in the Mouth of an Enemy, tho' introduc'd by Way of Intelligence, are really design'd Accusations.

The Senate, upon this Occasion, resolv'd to make a grand Effort, and to get all their Troops together to assist Cortez against the Mexicans, not without their own politick Reasons, which were better comprehended than conceal'd; for it plainly appear'd, that under the specious Pretext of favouring the Cause of their Friend, their Design was to make Use of his Forces to ruin, at once, the commanding Nation which they so much abhorr'd. This Disguise was easily seen thro'; and Hernan Cortez, after he had shewn his Acknowledgment and Satisfaction for their Offers, repress'd the Pride with which they were dispos'd to follow him, opposing, to the Instances of the Senate, some seeming Reasons, which in Substance were no more than bare Pretences against Pretences. But he admitted of about Two Thousand Men; of their best Troops, with their respective Officers, or Commanders of Companies, to march with him, and which were of Service afterwards upon the following Occasions. He took these Indians with him, either for the greater Security of his Undertaking, or to keep up the Confidence of the Tlascalans, who already had the Reputation of being valiant in Engagements against the Mexicans, and he took no greater Number, that he might neither give Offence to Motezuma, nor drive his mutinous Subjects to Despair; for his Intention was to enter Mexico in a pacifick Manner, and to try if he could reduce those People with moderate Remedies without giving Way to his Anger, or thinking of the Punishment of the Guilty; he desir'd now to make every Thing as easy as possible, as being sensible, that the quieting of a Sedition, and terrifying the Seditious, are Two Things which very ill agree at one and the same Time.

He arriv'd at Mexico upon St. John's Day, without having met with any Subject of Uneasiness in the Way more than the Variety and Disagreement of the Intelligence he receiv'd. The Army pass'd the Lake without the least Opposition, tho' there wanted not Appearances that Something had been intended; for they found the Two Spanish Brigantines stav'd to Pieces and burn'd; the Suburbs and Barrier at the Entrance abandon'd; abandon'd ; the Bridges, which serv'd for the Communication of the Streets, broken down, and all in a suspicious gloomy Silence ; all Signs which oblig'd them to slacken their Pace, the Infantry still advancing with a slow March, the Cavalry going a considerable Way before. This Suspicion lasted till the Spaniards, who were with Motezuma in Mexico, discovering their Army, rais'd a great Shout and dissipated their Apprehensions. Pedro de Alvarado came down with his People to the Gate of his Quarters, and they celebrated their common Felicity with mutual Satisfaction. Instead of saluting, they wish'd each other Joy of their Victory : All spoke, and all were interrupted ; much was express'd by Embraces and broken Sentences ; the usual Eloquence of Joy, where Sounds are far more expressive and significant than Words.

Motezuma, follow'd by some of his Servants, went out as far as the outermost Court, where he receiv'd Cortez with an Excess of Joy and Affection, all Majesty being quite laid aside. It is certain, and no one offers to deny it, that he desir'd his Coming, because he had then great Occasion both for his Forces and Counsel, to keep his Subjects under ; as likewise upon Account of the very Confinement in which he found himself, different from that kind of Liberty which Cortez gave him, suffering him to go out to his Diversion whenever he pleas'd ; a Liberty he would not once assume, during the whole Time of his Absence, notwithstanding his Confinement - most certainly depended purely upon the Force of his Parole ; the Compliance with which oblig'd him not to abandon the Spaniards in those troublesome Times.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo says, “ That Hernan Cortez repaid
 “ with ill Manners and Slight, all Motezuma's Demonstrations “ of Respect : That he turn'd his Face from him, and retir'd
 “ to his Apartment, without either visiting him, or suffering “ himself to be visited by him ; That he us'd some very dis“ respectful and uncivil Expressions towards him, even in the “ Hearing of his Servants.” And adds, as his own Opinion, “ That finding himself with such a Number of Spaniards, “ he spoke with so much Boldness and Discourtesy.” Thus says Bernal Diaz : But Antonio de Herrera, in his History, discredits Cortez still more ; for he pretends to quote that General's own Expressions as a Proof of his irregular Procedure, in the following Words ; “ Many People have affirm'd, that they “ have heard Cortez say, That if upon his Arrival, he visited Mo- “ tezuma, his Affairs would go well ; and that he did not do it ;
 “ holding him in small Account because he found himself so “ power-

“powerful.” And to this Purpose, he quotes a Passage out of Cornelius Tacitus, the Substance of which is, That Prosperity makes great Commanders proud and insolent. Neither Francisco Lopez de Gomara, nor Hernan Cortez himself, in the second Relation of his Journey, relates it after this Manner; and Cortez might sure have touch’d upon it, to have shewn the Motives which oblig’d him to a Procedure of so much Harshness, either to have given Reasons for his so doing, or to have made an Excuse. We leave to the Judicious and Unbiaffed to decide what Credit ought to be given to these Circumstances: But we beg leave to make some Scruple at believing that Cortez could ever be guilty of so fruitless and unseasonable an Absurdity. The same Herrera and Castillo agree, That Moteczuma oppos’d, as much as in him lay, the seditious Proceedings of the Mexicans: That he always with-held and repress’d them: That they attempted to force the Quarters; and that Pedro de Alvarado, and all the rest who were with him, must infallibly have perished, had they not been protected under the Shadow of his Authority. No body offers to deny Cortez being very sensible of all that; and his finding that Prince religiously punctual to all he had promis’d, left him not the least Room to surmise the contrary, it being both preposterous and unreasonable to suppose, that he should foment an Insurrection which he sedulously endeavour’d to suppress, or that he should voluntarily continue among the very People whom he design’d to destroy. It seems an Action altogether inconsistent with the usual Prudence of Cortez, to shew a Contempt for a Person of whose Assistance and Protection there was so much Probability he might stand in Need; nor was the Immoderation they charge him with, as the Effect of his Prosperity, at all natural to his Temper and Genius. It may be believ’d, or at least surmis’d, that Antonio de Herrera gave into this Particular with little or no Foundation, only by perusing the Manuscripts of Bernal Diaz, a prejudic’d Interpreter of the Actions of Cortez; and perhaps he inclin’d to follow his Opinion out of a Vanity, to adapt and appropriate that Sentence of Tacitus: An Ambition in Historians both dangerous and pernicious, since it seldom fails of either wresting, or biaffing the Narrative, purely to introduce the Remarks they like; and it is not every one that will be at the Trouble of examining farther, to inform himself, whether the Quotation and the Truth of the Fact agree.

C H A P. XII.

The Motives which induc'd the Mexicans to take up Arms. DIEGO DE ORDAZ, with some Companies of Men, is sent to make Discoveries in the City. Falls into an Ambush the Revolters had laid for him, upon which CORTEZ determines to prosecute the War.

FW O or Three Days before Cortez arriv'd at Mexico, the Rebels had retir'd to the other Part of the City, suspending all Hostilities, in which, according to what could be inferr'd from the Event, they had crafty and treacherous Views. They thought themselves secure in their excessive Numbers, and were grown proud upon their having kill'd Three or Four Spaniards in the past Engagements: An extraordinary Case, by which, tho' at the Expence of many Lives, they assum'd fresh Boldness, and greater Insolence. They knew Cortez was coming, and could not be ignorant how much his Army was increas'd, but they were so far from fearing him, that they retreated in that Manner; and left him the Entrance free, with the View of destroying all the Spaniards at once, after they were joyn'd together in the City. Their real Design in that mysterious Conduct was not at first understood, tho' their Retreat was look'd upon as Policy; nor can one judge too suspiciously of the Motions of a known Enemy.

The whole Army was quarter'd within the Walls of the spacious Palace, where both Spaniards and Tlascalans were sufficiently accommodated: Guards and Centinels were distributed and plac'd, answerable to the Jealousy wherewith that mysterious Cessation from Hostilities had inspir'd them. Cortez retir'd with Pedro de Alvarado to inquire into the Original of this Sedition, and to consider of Remedies upon the Knowledge of the Cause: And here we again meet with the same Variety and Contradictions by which the Course of our Pen has been frequently interrupted. Some say, That the Practices and Intelligence of Narvaez first induc'd the Mexicans to this Insurrection. Others, That Motezuma himself alone contriv'd and fomented the Mutiny, as impatient of Confinement, and desirous of his Liberty; but it is not at all necessary that we detain ourselves upon this Point, since we have already fully shewn upon what slender Foundations these private Negotiations are attributed to Narvaez; and Motezuma has been sufficiently clear'd from all such incoherent and contradictory Imputations. Some have affirm'd the Source of this Sedition to have proceeded from the Loyalty and Fidelity of the Mexicans; reporting, that their sole Reason for taking up Arms, was in order to rescue their Sovereign from the Oppression he lay under; a Sentiment, which comes nearer to Reason and Probability, than it does to real Fact. Others attribute this Rupture to the Zeal of the Indian Sacerdotes: And this Opinion indeed has some Appearance of Truth; for they were very officious in the Tumult, loudly publishing the Menaces of their Gods, inspiring the rest with that same Fury wherewith they themselves were dispos'd to receive their diabolical Oracles. They repeated to the People what Satan spoke by the Mouths of their Idols; and tho' they were not the first Movers of the Sedition, they were yet indefatigably active, and powerfully zealous in supporting it, by stirring up the People's Minds. Foreign Writers are still far more remote, from even the Appearance of Truth, accounting the Origin and Motives of those Disturbances among the Cruelties and Inhumanities with which they endeavour to discredit and blacken the Spaniards in their Conquest of the Indies: And the worst of all is, they support their Malice by citing Bartolomeo de las Casas, or Casaus, who was afterwards Bishop of Chiapa, whose Words they copy, and quote as an authentick infallible Proof of what they charge our Nation with, as being the Testimony of one of our own Authors, and a Person of no small Distinction. What he left in Writing, and which passes among his Works, is, "That the " Mexicans having appointed a publick Dance, of that Kind

 " which they call Mitotes, in order to divert and entertain Mo-
 " tezuma, Pedro de Alvarado, taking Notice of the Jewels with " which the Indians were adorn'd, call'd together all his Sol" diers, and fell upon them, cutting them to Pieces, to make " himself Master of those valuable Ornaments; in the gaining
 " of which infamous Spoils, he says, above Two Thousand
 " of the Mexican Nobility were put to the Sword," with which he leaves the Conspiracy on the Footing of a just Revenge. A preposterous, unaccountable Suggestion, neither probable, nor even possible. This Prelate did, at that Time, solicit the Relief of the Indians, and exaggerating the Oppressions they labour'd under, had far less Regard to the Truth, than to the supporting of his own Assertion. The greatest Part of our Writers convince him of being ill inform'd, not only of that Affair, but likewise in several other Enormities, which he has left in Writing to the Discredit of the Spaniards. 'Tis happy to find him so well refuted, that we may the better treat him with that Respect which is due to his Dignity. The plain Truth of the Matter was, That Pedro de Alvarado, a little after the Departure of Cortez from Mexico, perceiv'd, in the Nobility of that Court, less Respect and Complaisance than usual, which obliged him to behave himself with greater Caution, and to have an Eye to their Motions and Countenances. He employ'd some Persons in whom he could confide, to observe what pass'd in the City, and by them understood that the People were contriving something extraordinary; that they held Assemblies in several different Houses, with an ill concerted Privacy, which tho' it concealed their Measures, yet it plainly enough discover'd their Intentions: However, he had such good Intelligence, that he had evident Reason to be assur'd, that there was a dangerous Conspiracy hatching against the Spaniards; nor was it long before he gain'd even some of the Conspirators themselves, who gave him a full Account of the whole Treason, aggravating the Circumstances, without forgetting their own Interest. A solemn Festival was drawing near, which they were annually wont to celebrate with those Publick Dances, called Mitotes, which was a promiscuous Convention of Nobility and Plebeians, and was indeed an Assembly of the whole City. This Day was pitch'd upon for the putting their Enterprize in Execution, as supposing that upon such an Occasion they might assemble openly, without being taken Notice of, or giving any Jealousy. Their Intention was to begin the Dance, in order to get the common People together, and then in a Body, follow'd by the Multitude, to proclaim aloud their Emperor's Liberty, and the Defence of their Gods; postponing the Publication of their Designs till then, as being of too great Importance to be hazarded among the Vulgar, till they might reasonably think themselves secure from Danger by their Numbers; and in Reality their Scheme was not ill laid; nor is it often seen that the Wicked are defective in Contrivances how to perpetrate the Evil they have projected.
 of

The Morning before the appointed Day, some of the chief Promoters of the Sedition came to visit Pedro de Alvarado, and ask'd his Permission to celebrate their Festival, which was no other

other than a formal Compliment with which they thought to blind him; and he not having as yet his Suspicions sufficiently confirm'd, granted their Request, upon Condition, that they should not go armed, nor offer any human Sacrifices: But that very Night he understood, that they were busily employ'd in concealing a considerable Quantity of Arms in Houses near the Temple. This intirely dissipated all his Doubts, and gave Occasion for a very rash Action which yet had some Appearances of a Remedy, and might have prov'd so if he had gone about it with due Moderation. He resolv'd to assault them in the Beginning of their Festival, without giving them Time to take Arms, or raise the Populace; and accordingly he put it in Execution, going out at the Hour appointed accompany'd with Fifty of his Men, as if his Curiosity to see the Diversion had led him thither. He found them all in a Manner intoxicated with Liquor and Excess of Joy, that their Treason was hitherto undiscover'd, and in so great a Forwardness. He attack'd and put them to Flight with little or no Resistance; wounding and killing several who delay'd running away or leaping from the Galleries and Windows of the Temple. His Design was only to terrify and disperse them, which he indeed very easily compass'd, but not without Disorder; for the Spaniards instantly fell to stripping the Dead and Wounded of their Jewels and Ornaments of Value: A Liberty not to be prevented at that Time, nor ever without the greatest Difficulty when a Soldier finds himself with a Sword in his Hand, and Gold in View.

Pedro de Alvarado manag'd this Affair with more Heat than Foresight. He retir'd with the Satisfaction of a Conqueror without acquainting the Populace with the Motives of his Anger. He ought immediately upon the Spot to have publish'd the Treachery which those Nobles had been contriving against him; and should have expos'd the Arms they had conceal'd, or have done something on his Part to gain, in his Favour, the Votes of the common People, who are always very easily mov'd against the Nobility: But he return'd either well satisfy'd and convinc'd that the Chastisement he inflicted upon the Indians had been just, and the Resolution absolutely necessary, or else ignorant how much it imported a successful Action to be supported by Equity and Reason. Those People, who knew nothing at all of the Provocation, and beheld the Slaughter of the Nobility, and Spoil of their Jewels, attributed the whole Action to an avaricious Thirst, and were so enrag'd that they presently ran to their Arms, and with little, or no, Sollici-

Sollicitation from the first Conspirators, incorporated themselves into their Body, by which Means the Sédition was instantly swell'd to a most formidable Monster.

Hernan Cortez reprehended Pedro de Alvarado for his rash Procedure, and especially for his Want of Consideration, in hazarding himself and the best Part of his Forces upon a Day so universally popular, leaving his Quarter, and what should have been his chief Care, expos'd to any Accident which might happen. He was likewise much concern'd that he had conceal'd from Motezuma the first Appearance of that Disturbance; for Alvarado did not confide in that Prince till he saw him by his Side in the succeeding Dispute; whereas he should have communicated to him his Suspicions, if not to make Use of his Authority, yet, at least, to sound his Mind, in order to discover whether or no he was secure with so weak a Garrison; instead of which he turn'd his Back upon an Enemy of whom he ought to have been most jealous. He blam'd his Inadvertency that he did not publicly justify himself to the People, and even to the Delinquents themselves, for such a violent Proceeding. By all which it was manifestly obvious, that neither in the Action itself, nor the Motives, or Circumstances, was there any of that premeditated Malice which has been imputed to him: For most certainly Cortez would not have been satisfy'd with reprehending only a Misdemeanor of so much Injustice and Cruelty, nor would ever have let slip that Opportunity of punishing, or at least confining him, in order to introduce Peace by that exemplary Satisfaction: But, as a convincing Argument, we find that Alvarado himself propos'd his own Imprisonment, as a Means to facilitate the Reduction of those People; but Cortez did not approve of that Method, because he thought it was a better Way to make Use of the same Reason, which Alvarado himself had against the first Mutineers, to undeceive the Populacè, and weaken the Faction of the Nobility.

The Seditious kept close all the Evening, nor was there afterwards any Thing to disturb the Quiet of that Night. The Morning came, and Hernan Cortez observing the same suspicious Silence to be still among the Enemy, made no Doubt but that they were at their Cabals, since not one Soul was to be seen in the Streets, nor any where about, as far as the Eye could discern; insomuch that he order'd Diego de Ordaz out into the City to dive into the Bottom of that Mystery. He took with him Four Hundred Spanish and Tlascalan Soldiers, and in good Order began to march thro' the principal Streets. He had not gone far, before he discover'd a pretty numerous Company of armed Men, which the Enemy, it seems, had detach'd out on purpose to decoy and draw him on; and he still advancing, with a Design to make some Prisoners, in order to get Intelligence, discover'd an innumerable Multitude of Indians, who march'd up to his Front; when looking back, he beheld another Army in his Rear, which had been conceal'd in the neighbouring Streets, on each Side, cutting off his Retreat. Both Bodies attack'd him at once with equal Fury; and at the same Time there appear'd at the Windows, and in the Galleries of the Houses, a Third Army of the Common People, which in a Manner hinder'd them from breathing, darkening the Air with Stones, and all Sorts of missive Weapons. Diego de Ordaz, who, upon this Occasion, stood in Need of all his Valour, Resolution, and Experience to extricate himself, with as much Speed, and as little Confusion as possible, from so desperate a Juncture, divided his Battalion according to the Ground; making a Second Front to his Rear with Pikes and Swords, against the Two Torrents of Enemies below, and plying his Fire-Arms against those who were above. It was wholly impracticable for him to advertise Cortez of the Danger he was in; nor did the General think it any Way necessary to reinforce him without such Notice, as presuming that he had sufficient Force to execute the Orders he had given him: But the Heat of the Engagement was of no long Continuance; for the Indians attack'd so tumultuously, and with so little Order, that confounded, and, as it were, drowned in their own Numbers, hinder'd each other from making Use of their Arms, and so many of them lost their Lives at the first Assault, that the rest were reduc'd to such a Distance, that they could neither offend, nor be offended. The Fire-Arms quickly clear'd the Galleries; and Diego de Ordaz, who only came to make Discoveries, thought it not proper to engage himself too far, and perceiving that the Enemy besieg'd him at a Distance, reduc'd now to fight with their Tongues, as the only Weapons they could use, loading him with loud Threats and scurrilous Language, resolv'd to retreat, by opening a Passage with his Sword: So that having given Orders, and marching in the same Form in which he then was, he vigorously attack'd those who were posted between him and the Quarters, as he, at the same Time, did those who were in the Rear, or who appear'd upon the Tops of the Houses. He compass'd his Retreat with Difficulty, and not without the Expence of some Blood; for he himself, together with the greatest Part of his Men were wounded, and he left Eight dead upon the Spot, whom they could not possibly bring off. It is likely they were Tlascalans; because Mention is only made of one Spaniard, who behaved himself remarkably well that Day, and died discharging his Duty.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo gives a particular Account of his Behaviour, and says, that his Name was Lezcano. The rest of the Authors do not mention him at all, so that his true Name is not positively known, which deserv'd to be transmitted to Posterity, which nevertheless, under that Name, honours the Memory of that valiant Soldier. Cortez became sensible, by what had happen'd, that it was no Time now to endeavour at, or even to think of making any Proposals for an Accommodation, which would lessen his own Reputation, and augment the Insolence of the Seditious. He determin'd therefore to make it desir'd by the Enemy, rather than to propose it himself, and to make a Sally out into the City with the greatest Part of his Troops, in order to oblige them, by Dint of Hostilities, to seek for Peace. There was at that Time none by whose Means he could introduce the Treaty: As for Moteczuma, he was diffident of his own Authority, being apprehensive of the Disobedience of his Vassals. Among the Rebels no one either commanded or obey'd, or rather they all commanded, and none obey'd: A Mob, confus'd, ungovernable, without Distinction, or Discipline, promiscuously compos'd of Nobles and Plebeians. Cortez desir'd, with all his Heart, to follow the Path of Moderation, and was not altogether without Hopes of accomplishing his Desires, or bringing Matters to an Accommodation; but he thought it intirely necessary to be apply'd to by the Mutineers, rather than to take upon him to persuade them to it, in which he acted like a prudent and cautious Commander: For it is never safe to trust to disarmed Reason to appease the Fury of a seditious People; for Reason is never so well listen'd to as when it is powerfully supported, and Faction is an inexorable Monster, with an Infinity of Heads, but not one Ear.

C H A P. XIII.

The Mexicans assault the Spanish Quarters, and are repuls'd. CORTEZ makes two Sallies, in which, tho' the Enemy were both times defeated, and put to Flight with great Slaughter, yet, he distrusts his being able to reduce them.

THE Mexicans pursu'd Diego de Ordaz, esteeming his Retreat no better than as a Flight, following the Chace with a disorderly Fury, till the Artillery from the Quarters forcibly detain'd them, and with a terrible Slaughter oblig'd them to give back, as far as was necessary, to be out of the Reach of that Danger; but they halted in Sight, and by their Silence and the Diligence, with which they were putting themselves in Order, it was plainly perceiv'd that they were forming some new Design.

Their Intent was to assault the Quarters on every Side by main Force; and all the Streets thereabouts were immediately fill'd with People; after which the Drums and Shells made the Signal for the Attack. They immediately advanc'd with great Fury and Precipitation. Their Van-Guard was compos'd of Companies of Archers, that by clearing the Walls the rest might Approach. Their Discharge were so inexpressibly thick, in order to make Room for those who were appointed for the Assault; that the Defendants found themselves in no small Confusion, being extremely put to it to defend themselves, and repulse their Enemies at the same Time. The Quarters were almost cover'd, or in a Manner drowned with Arrows; which Expression ought not to be tax'd with being too Hyperbolic, since they were actually oblig'd to appoint People on Purpose to remove them, they were so offensive, the second Time, by barring the Way to the Ramparts. The Artillery and small Fire-Arms made a terrible Destruction of the Enemy; but they came so resolutely determin'd either to conquer or to dye, that they advanc'd in Swarms to fill up the Vacancy of those who fell, and carry'd on the Attack with an intrepid Obstinacy, trampling upon the Dead, and rushing over the Wounded, without the least Remorse. 3 Several Several put themselves under the very Cannon; and assaulted with incredible Resolution, making Use of their flinted Instruments to break the Gates, and pick the Walls: Some got upon their Companions Shoulders to come within the Reach of their Weapons; others made Ladders of their own Lances and Pikes to gain the Windows and Terraces; and all in general expos'd themselves to Fire and Sword like enrag'd Beasts. Notable Instances of a fearless Temerity, and which might have pass'd for gallant Actions, had true Valour perform'd that which, in Reality, was no other than a salvage Ferocity.

But they were at last repuls'd, and retir'd, for Cover, to the Cross-Streets, where they halted till the Night's Approach dispers'd them; more out of Regard to a Custom they had, never to fight in the Sun's Absence, than out of any apparent Hopes they gave of having given over the Enterprize. On the contrary, they had the Boldness, some Days after; once more to alarm the Spaniards, by setting Fire to their Quarters in different Parts; which they either did by applying it to the Doors and Windows, by the Help of the Night's Obscurity, or by shooting Arrows from a Distance with Artificial Fire, which last indeed seems most probable; for the Flame increas'd so suddenly, and took hold on the Buildings with such an impetuous Rage, that they were oblig'd, in order to prevent the Communication of the several Fires, to break down some Walls, and to toil afterwards in stopping up those Breaches they had made, and to put them in a Posture of Defence; a Fatigue which lasted the greatest Part of the Night.

But scarce did the first Beams of Light declare the Approach of the Morning, when the Enemy was discover'd, seemingly afraid to come within Reach of their Shot; for they only provok'd the Spaniards to sally forth from their Walls. They dar'd them to Battel with injurious Speeches, treating them as Cowards for lurking behind their Intrenchments; and Cortez, who had before resolv'd to make a Sally upon them that Day, took this Provocation for a good Opportunity to fire the Minds of his People. He prepar'd them with a short Discourse to resolve to revenge their Wrong, by chastising the Insolence of those Barbarians, and, without Delay, he form'd his whole Force into Three Bodies, each consisting of Spaniards and Tlascalans: Two of these Battalions he order'd for clearing the Cross Streets, and the Third, at the Head of which he himself march'd in Person with the choicest of his Troops, took the Street of Tacuba, where the greatest Body of the Enemy was posted. He drew up his Men, and distributed Arms as Necesssity requir'd; for he was to engage both in Front and Flank, following the Method which Diego de Ordaz had observ'd in his Retreat, esteeming that, which a little before had deserv'd his Applause, to be now worthy his Imitation; wherein he shew'd the Nobleness of his Mind, and that he was not ignorant how much those Superiors hazard, who disdain to follow the Footsteps of those who are inferior to them in Command, and how near they are to erring, who pretend to distinguish themselves from those who have been successful thro' their prudent Conduct. The Three Battalions engag'd at one Time, and the Enemy both gave and receiv'd the first Charges without losing Ground, or being in the least sensible of Danger, going so far as even to come to Handy-Blows. Their Clubs and Two-handed Swords were manag'd with a desperate Fury. Regardless of Death they broke in among the Pikes and Swords of the Spaniards, to gain a Stroke at the Price of Life. The Fire-Arms which were levell'd against the Galleries and Windows could not divert the Shower of Stones which incessantly came from thence, for they flung them without discovering themselves; and it was necessary to set some Houses on Fire, to put a Stop to that troublesome Hostility.

The Mexicans, at last, gave Way to the superior Valour of the Spaniards; but as they retreated they broke down the Bridges of the Streets, and shew'd themselves on the other Side; obliging the Spaniards to fill up the Ditches, still fighting all the while, before they could prosecute the Victory. Those who were detach'd to clear the Streets on the Sides, charg'd the Multitude that possess'd them with so much Resolution, that they secur'd the Retreat, and manag'd it so that they always kept the Enemy in Front, till having advanc'd as far as the Opening into a large Square, the Three Bodies join'd, and at the first Attack so dishearten'd the Indians, that they turn'd their Backs with great Precipitation and Confusion, treading one another under Foot, shewing the same Fury and Disorder in their Flight, as they had done in the Battle.

Cortez would not suffer his People to prosecute the Victory with a farther Slaughter of those Vassals of Moteczuma, already routed, and flying in the utmost Disorder, whether it was that his Heart relented at the Blood already spilt, and disdain'd intirely to destroy a vanquish'd Enemy, or that he thought he had chastiz'd their Presumption with sufficient Rigour. He therefore gather'd up his Troops, and retir'd without meeting with the least Opposition. He lost Ten or Twelve Soldiers, and had many wounded, chiefly by Stones or Arrows, but none dangerously. The Number that the Mexicans lost was so great, that the Bodies which they could not carry off, having first ting'd the Canals with their Blood, remain'd as a Spectacle of Horror in the Streets in incredible Heaps: The Engagement lasted all the Morning, and the Spaniards were sometimes very hardly put to it, and their scarce to be hop'd for Success was intirely owing to their Perseverance, Valour, and good Discipline.

There was none who could in particular be said to excel; they all in general acted with equal Bravery, as well Soldiers as Officers, fresh Actions of Valour succeeding each other so thick that the last still eras'd the Remembrance of those which preceded it. The Tlascalans behav'd themselves, by the generous Example set them by the Spaniards, valiantly, without Precipitation or Rashness; and Cortez conducted the whole Action like a courageous and prudent Commander, being present every where, but more especially where the Danger was greatest, his Sword always in the Face of his Enemy, his Eye on his own People, his Care wherever Occasion requir'd; leaving it in Doubt whether more was owing to his personal Bravery or to his consummate Military Skill, both which Virtues he possess'd in an eminent Degree, and are Qualities desirable without Distinction, and concur without Preference in great Commanders.

It was necessary to allow some Time for refreshing his tir'd Troops, and for the Cure of the Wounded, which Suspension lasted Three Days, or something more, during which Interval they only took Care of the Defence of the Quarters, having the Army of the Mutineers constantly in View, with whom they had some light Skirmishes, a Mixture of flying and fighting. In this Time Hernan Cortez artfully renew'd his Overtures of Peace by Means of some Mexicans, in the Service of Moteczuma, who went with several Proposals; but he was not negligent, during the Negotiation, but made all necessary Preparation. He order'd Four Towers of Wood to be built, which, with little Difficulty, mov'd with Wheels, to be us'd against the Enemy in Case there should be Occasion for a new Sally. Each of those Towers was capable of containing Twenty or Thirty Men, the Roof defended by thick Planks, sufficient to resist the Stones which might be cast from the Houses, the Front and Sides with Loop-Holes to discharge under Cover, in Imitation of the great Engines us'd in War, which cover Men to undermine the Walls of a Town, which Defence he thought, at that Juncture, very necessary to shelter his Soldiers, in the firing

firing of Houses, and breaking thro' the Trenches with which they were stopping up the Streets; and, if these portable Machines were not good for engaging, yet, the Novelty of them would be useful by amazing the Enemy. Of the Mexicans who were sent out with Proposals of Peace, some return'd ill-dispatch'd, and others remain'd among the Rebels, to the great Dissatisfaction of Motezuma, who earnestly desir'd the Reduction of his seditious Subjects, and conceal'd, under a Mask easy to be seen through, the Jealousy he had, lest they should intirely shake off their Obedience, and lose all Fear of his Authority. At this Time they were making new Preparations for War in the City. Those of the mutinous Nobility who had Vassals of their own, summon'd the People of their respective Districts: The Force of the Army continually increas'd; nor did they cease to provoke the Spaniards in their Quarters, who were now quite tir'd with bearing the troublesome Repetition of Menaces and Arrows, which tho' they were equally lost in the Air, did not fail to offend and weary out their Patience.

With this good Disposition of his People, the Opinion of his Captains, and the Approbation of Motezuma, General Cortez made a second Sally against the Mexicans: He took with him the greatest Part of the Spaniards, and about Two Thousand Tlascalans, some Pieces of Artillery, the Wooden Machines, with a sufficient Defence, and some Led Horses to be us'd upon all Occasions where the Breakings of the Ground did not render them useles. The seditious Mexicans were then in a profound Silence; but the Spaniards had scarce began their March, when the Difficulty of the Undertaking was quickly known by the sudden Shouts of an innumerable Multitude alternate with the hoarse and dismal Sound of their Drums and Sea-Shells. The Rebels did not wait till they were attack'd, but on the contrary they came up to the Spaniards with surprising Resolution, and much less Confusion than they were wont. They gave and receiv'd the first Charge, without Disorder, or Precipitation; but it was not long before they were sensible of the Damage they receiv'd, and retir'd by little and little, without turning their Backs to the first Entrenchments they had made in the Streets; in Defence of which they renew'd the Fight with so much Obstinacy, that it was necessary to advance some Pieces of Artillery to dislodge them. They had their Retreats very near, and in some the Bridges of the Canals were taken up, which increas'd the Difficulty, and there was no Way of engaging them from under Cover. This Day the Spaniards observ'd in their Conduct some very politick and considerate considerate Actions, and such as made it appear a War more than barely Popular. They discharg'd regularly, and in good Order, always lowering their Arm, that they might not miss their Shot by the Resistance of the Spanish Armour. They defended their Posts with Obstinacy, and abandon'd them without Confusion: They sent several Men into the Canals, that as they swam up and down they might push at the Spaniards, and wound them with their Pikes: They had got up huge Pieces of Rocks into their Galleries, to destroy the Wooden Towers, and perform'd it, breaking them all to Shatters: By these and many other Signs, it was easily perceiv'd that some One commanded them; for they animated and supported each other seasonably, and in the very Disorders of a seditious Multitude, they shew'd some Sort of Obedience and Discipline.

The Engagement lasted the greatest Part of the Day; the Spaniards and their Confederates were forc'd to gain the Ground from Trench to Trench: Much Dammage was done to the City; many Houses burn'd, and the Mexicans lost more Blood upon this Occasion than they had done in the Two preceding Rencontres, either that they advanc'd nearer to the Fire-Arms, or because they could not fly as they were accustomed, being hinder'd by their own Entrenchments.

The Night drew on apace; and Cortez, with Concern, finding himself oblig'd to the fruitless Dispute of gaining Posts which he could not maintain, retir'd to his Quarters, leaving the Sedition, in Reality, rather chastis'd than quell'd. He lost about Forty Soldiers, most of them Tlascalans, had above Fifty Spaniards sorely wounded, and himself shot with an Arrow in the left Hand; but his inward Wound was far the worst, by being sensible, upon this Occasion, that it was not possible to continue so unequal a War without running the Risque of losing both his Army and his Reputation. The first Shock he had yet felt, the Novelty of which went near his Heart, surpriz'd him, and almost made his Courage to stagger. He shut himself up under Pretence of his Wound, but with a Design to give himself up to Thought. The greatest Part of the Night he spent in Reflection: He was concern'd and vex'd to quit Mexico, and could find no Means of maintaining his Ground there. He endeavour'd to exert himself against the Difficulty, but found that Reason took Part with his Suspicions. His good Sense and Foresight would not agree with his natural Fire and Vigour: All was disputing without resolving: Dissatisfy'd with the Dictates of Prudence, or impatient at the Pains we are at to come to a Resolution before we can reap the Advantage.

C H A P. XIV.

MOTEZUMA exhorts CORTEZ to retire from Mexico, which he offers to do as soon as the Seditious have laid down their Arms. They return to attempt another Assault. MOTEZUMA speaks to them from the Wall, and is wounded, losing all Hopes of reducing them.

NOR did Motezuma pass his Night better, whose Thoughts waver'd with far greater Uneasiness, now wholly doubting the Fidelity of his Vassals; his Mind was assaulted by contrary Passions, of which some sooth'd, and others oppos'd his Inclinations: The Violence of Anger and Resentment, Moderation of Fear, and the Repugnancies of Pride. He was that Day on the highest Tower of the Palace, observing the Battle, and distinguish'd amongst the Rebels the Lord of Iztapalapa, and other Princes, who might aspire to the Empire. He saw them running here and there to every Part, animating the Combatants, and ordering the Action. He had not, as yet, suspected his Nobles would have engag'd in such manifest Outrages: His Anger and Concern began at once, and his Anger prevail'd; the first Motion of his Temper giving them up to Destruction, breathing nothing but Blood and Slaughter: But a little after reflecting how far the Evil was spread, and the Tumult now converted into Treason and Rebellion in all its Forms, he sunk down quite dispirited, remaining without Resolution to apply a Remedy, and every Impulse of his natural Ferocity gave Way to Fear and Weakness. Nothing appears so terrible to a Tyrant as the Thoughts of his Crown being in Danger; nor are any, generally speaking, so susceptible of Fear as those who are ambitious of being fear'd.

He reflected with Deliberation upon the different Means of re-establishing his sinking Authority, and none appear'd better than immediately to dispatch the Spaniards, to return to his Palace, and there to use Lenity towards the Revolters, before he proceeded to lift up the Hand of Justice. In the Morning he sent for Cortez, and dexterously enough communicated to him the Cause of his Concern. With an affected Security he aggravated and exclaim'd against the Insolence of his Nobles, trying to make him believe, that his Thoughts were more taken up about the Manner of chastising them, than with any Fear he had of their Revolt; and went on, saying; "That now the " Troubles of his Kingdom requir'd a speedy Remedy; and " that it was necessary to take away all Pretences from the Se-

 " ditious, and to make them sensible of their Error, before
 " he punish'd their Crime: That all Tumults did pretend a " Foundation upon some Appearances of Reason; and that in " the reducing of a Multitude, it was prudent to make Con" cessions at the Beginning, in order to command more ab" solutely afterward: That the Clamours of his Vassals had,
 " on their Side, an Excuse that was very plausible, and found" ed well, which was, the Liberty of their Prince, persuaded " that he was under an involuntary Confinement, and mista" ken in the Method by which they were to compass it: That " it was now come to that Pitch, that Cortez and his People " must unavoidably leave Mexico without Delay, that he him" self might, by his own Authority, subject the Rebels, and " extinguish the Fire, by removing the Cause." He repeated how much he had suffer'd for not violating his Word with the Spaniards, and touch'd slightly upon those Jealousies which gave him most Concern: But the Instances he made to Cortez not to oppose his Demands, were so submissive, that the Influences of Fear plainly discover'd themselves in the Earnestness of the Request.

Cortez himself was of Opinion, that it was convenient for him, in the present Juncture of Affairs, to retreat, with a Design, nevertheless, of resuming the Enterprize upon a better Foundation: And recollecting his Thoughts on that Point, which made the Proposal seem the less strange, he readily answer'd: "That it was both his Inclination and Opinion to obey
 " him with an intire Resignation; desiring only to do that " which should be most pleasing and agreeable to him, with" out entering into the Motives of his Resolution, or losing
 " Time in representing the Inconveniencies which he might " have foreseen and consider'd; for in Discussions of this Kind,
 " the Inferior always ought to give up his Judgment, the Will
 " of Princes being a sufficient Reason for their Actions. That " he should be much troubled to withdraw from him, with" out leaving him fully assur'd of the Obedience of his Vas-
 " sals; particularly, since that dangerous Circumstance of the " Nobility's having declar'd for the Populace requir'd greater " Precau-

“ Precautions, and his utmost Care : For when once the No“ bility break the Bonds of Duty and Loyalty, they have the “ greatest Attempts in View, and stick at nothing. But that “ it was not for him to offer Reasons to delay his March, since “ his Majesty had propos'd it as a necessary Remedy, as being “ sensible of the Infirmity and Humours under which his King“ dom labour'd : Upon which Supposition, and his own fix'd “ Resolution immediately to march with his Army for Zem“ poala, he humbly intreated his Majesty, that before his De“ parture he would oblige his Vassals to lay down their Arms; “ because it would be of bad Consequence that they should “ attribute to their Rebellion what they ow'd to their Sove“ reign's Goodness. That he propos'd this more out of Re“ spect to his Royal Authority than for any Trouble or Con“ cern the Obstinacy of the Rebels gave him ; for he desisted
 “ from farther chastizing them out of pure Regard to him, “ carrying on the Point of his Sword and in the Valour of his “ Troops every Thing that was necessary to secure his Re“ treat.”

Motezuma did not expect such a ready Compliance in the Answer of Cortez, but imagin'd he should have met with greater Resistance, which might have occasion'd him much Trouble in contending and disputing that Point upon which he had so fully deliberated and resolv'd. He made his Acknowledgement to Cortez with a great deal of Joy, and both his Voice and Countenance sufficiently express'd the Satisfaction of his Mind.

He offer'd to command the Revolters immediately to lay down their Arms, and approv'd of his Reflections, by which he thought his Vassals would appear less unworthy to capitulate with their Prince ; a Point which he had not consider'd before, yet still he was inwardly concern'd at his being forc'd to temporize so far with those who merited nothing but his Displeasure, nor was he very skilful in the Art of mixing Soverainty with Dissimulation. Before this Conference ended, an Alarm was sounded in the Quarters. Cortez immediately took his Leave, and hastening to take Care for the Defence, he found his People all preparing to resist a general Assault the Enemy was just going to begin on every Side. As the Garrison was always vigilant, they were receiv'd with the utmost Rigour of the Fire-Arms ; for those Rebels shut their Eyes to all Danger, and drove on each other with so much Precipitation, that their Van-Guard, in Appearance without their own proper Movement, were in an Instant at the Foot of the Wall. Their Bows

Bows and Slings which were left at a convenient Distance, began to repeat their Discharges, to beat off those who were upon the Ramparts to resist the Assault, which was push'd on and oppos'd with equal Resolution. In some Parts the Enemy got Footing within the very Works, and Cortez, who had form'd a Body of Reserve compos'd of Tlascalans and Spaniards in the principal Court, repair'd with new Succours to the Posts which were most expos'd, having Occasion for all his Activity, and all the Courage of his Troops, that the Defence might not slacken, nor the Enemy come to understand the Advantage which Numbers have over even Valour itself.

Motezuma being soon inform'd of the Conflict in which the Spaniards were engag'd, call'd Donna Marina, and sent her to Cortez to propose, " That according to the present State of Affairs, " and agreeable to what they had both agreed upon, it would " be very convenient that he should shew himself to his Vassals from the Wall, to command the seditious Populace to " retire, and the Nobles to make their personal Appearance in " his Presence, disarm'd, and there to represent what it was " that both the one and the other desir'd." Cortez did not dislike the Proposal, holding it necessary, at that Juncture, for his People to breathe a little, since there was but small Hopes of being able to overcome the Obstinacy of that inflexible Multitude. Motezuma instantly dispos'd himself to put his Design in Execution, with an impatient Concern to know the Minds of his Subjects, with Regard to his own Person. He caus'd himself to be adorn'd with his Royal Robes, call'd for his Crown and Imperial Mantle; not forgetting the Jewels which he was accusom'd to wear upon publick Occasions, nor other affected Formalities, which sufficiently publish'd his Diffidence and Apprehensions, by making it appear by all this more than ordinary Care, that he stood in Need of Pomp and exterior Show to gain the Respect of the Eye, and that the Assistance of Purple and Gold was necessary to cover and conceal the interior Weakness of Majesty. With all this Pomp and Grandeur, attended by the principal Mexicans who continu'd in his Service, he mounted the Terrace which was opposite to the great Avenue. The Garrison was drawn up in Ranks for him to pass thro', and one of the Mexicans of the Emperor's Equipage advancing to the Rails, with a loud Voice call'd out to the Rebels, to prepare themselves with Reverence and Attention, for the Great Motezuma had condescended to come forth in order to hear their Demands and shew them further Favour. At the hearing of his Name the Outcries ceas'd, Terror succeeded and got the better of Fury; and they remain'd motionless, seeming as if they were afraid even to breathe. Motezuma then shew'd himself to the expecting Multitude, with a Countenance of Severity mix'd with Lenity, which at once express'd both his Anger and his Fear. Many bent the Knee when they saw him, but the most Part humbled themselves so far as to touch the Earth with their Fore-heads, intermixing the Reason they had to fear him, with the Custom of, as it were, worshipping him. He first cast his Looks on all in general, and then upon the Nobles in particular, with a Shew of taking Notice of those he knew. He commanded that some should draw near, calling them by their Names. He honour'd them with the Title of Friends and Kinsmen, putting a Force on his Displeasure: He acknowledg'd, with a proper Decency of Expression, the Affection with which they desir'd his Liberty; and the Harangue he made them, tho' we find it differently related, was, according to the Report of the Majority, to the following Tenor.

I Am so far, my Vassals, from looking upon this Expression of your Zeal as a Crime, that I cannot deny my being inclin'd to excuse you. It was indeed, an Excess to take up Arms without my Leave; but it was an Excess of your Fidelity. You believ'd, and not without Appearance of some Reason, that I was detain'd by Force and Violence in this Palace of my Predecessors; and to relieve your Sovereign from Oppression is too great an Enterprize to be attempted without some Disorder: But no Laws are sufficient to restrain an Excess of Resentment and Grief within the Bounds of Moderation and Prudence: And notwithstanding the Occasion of this your Commotion be with small Foundation, since I am without any Manner of Violence among these Foreigners whom you treat as Enemies. I now see your Inclinations are good, tho' you are mistaken in your Method of proceeding. It is by my own voluntary Option that I have continu'd with them, and thought myself oblig'd to shew them this Favour, on Account of the Respect they have always paid me, and out of Duty to the Prince who sends them. They are now dispatch'd: I have now resolv'd that they shall depart my Court; and they are preparing immediately to quit the Country: But it is not reasonable that I should be sooner obey'd by them than by you, who are my natural Subjects; nor that their Courtesy should appear greater than your Duty. Lay down your Arms, and come to my Presence as you ought, that all Tumults and Disturbance ceasing, you may be convinc'd how much you are in my Favour, by the Pardon I am ready to give you.

Thus Motezuma concluded his Harangue; and no one was so bold to attempt making a Reply. Some beheld him with Astonishment and Confusion, to find a Request where they expected nothing but Indignation; others wept to see their Monarch so humble, or which sounds much worse, and far less became him, so humbled: But at the very Time of this Suspension, the Populace began again to be in Commotion, and in an Instant pass'd from Fear to Fury, easy at all Times to be led into Extremes: Nor did there want one to foment it, when they had elected a new Emperor, or at least had resolv'd on the Choice; for in our Historians we find it differently related. Their Disrespect immediately was converted into Contempt. They told him aloud, that he was no longer their King; and that he should quit the Diadem and Scepter for the Distaff and Spindle; giving him the opprobrious Names of pusillanimous, effeminate Coward, an abject, a vile Prisoner, and Slave to his Enemies: Their injurious Language was drown'd by loud and repeated Shouts; and he endeavour'd, by the Motions both of his Head and his Hands, to be heard, when the Multitude began to advance, and let fly their Arrows against him, whereby he became sensible of the utmost Insolence of his rebellious Vassals. Two Soldiers, which Cortez foreseeing this Danger, had plac'd at his Side, endeavour'd to cover him with their Bucklers; but all their Care was not sufficient to prevent his being touch'd by some Arrows, and very rigorously by a Stone which wounded him in the Head, breaking Part of his Temple, with which Blow he fell down senseless to the Ground; an Accident which exceedingly troubled Cortez, as being one of the most unseasonable Misfortunes that could have possibly happen'd. He instantly caus'd him to be carry'd to his Apartment, and, with fresh Resentment and Indignation, repair'd to the Defence of the Ramparts: But he found no Enemy on whom he could vent his Anger; for the Mexicans no sooner beheld their Emperor fall, by which they had Reason to believe that he was wounded, but they were so astonish'd at the Crime they had committed, that flying without knowing from whom, as imagining that the Vengeance of their Gods pursued them, they ran to hide themselves from Divine Wrath, with that Kind of Confusion, or terrifying Shame and Consternation, where with the Mind is wont to be oppress'd after the committing of enormous and heinous Sins.

Cortez immediately repair'd to Motezuma's Apartment, who soon after recover'd his Senses, and came to himself; but so impatient, and full of Indignation, that it was necessary to hold

hold him, in order to prevent him from doing himself a Mischief. It was impossible to dress his Wound, because he tore away whatever Medicines were apply'd, and he broke out into most furious Threats, which ended in Sighs and Lamentations: Rage did its utmost, but at last dwindled into Pusillanimity: Persuasion offended, and Consolation exasperated and anger'd him: He recover'd his Senses only to lose his Understanding. It appear'd necessary to leave him for a while, and allow some Time for Consideration, that he might get rid of the first Impressions of the Insult had been offer'd him. Overwhelm'd with excessive Grief, he was left to the Care of his Attendants, continually battling with the Violence of his Temper, and the Despondency of his Mind, without Spirit enough left even to think of attempting Vengeance upon the Traytors, but esteeming, as a most heroick Exploit, the Resolution of dying by his own Hands: A barbarous Recourse of cowardly Minds, who sink beneath Calamity, and are only valiant against that which can least oppose them.

C H A P. XV.

MOTEZUMA dies of his Wounds, obstinately refusing to receive Baptism. CORTEZ sends his Body to the Mexicans, who celebrate his Obsequies. His personal Qualities and Character.

MOTEZUMA persever'd in his Impatience, and at the same Time his Wounds grew worse; it being a common Observation, how great Influence the Passions of the Mind have over the Corruption of the Humours. The Wound in his Head was at first look'd upon as dangerous, and his inward Agitations quickly made it mortal; nor was it by any Means possible to apply the necessary Remedies till he grew so weak that he had not Force to resist. Those who attended him were no less put to it to oblige him to take some Nourishment, the want of which had already brought him very low; and he seem'd to have nothing of Strength or Vigour left, but only in his determinate Resolution of putting an End to his Life with his own Hands; his Despair increasing as his Strength decay'd. His Danger was known

known in Time ; and Cortez, who seldom left him because when he was present he moderated his Grief, and somewhat compos'd himself, us'd his utmost Endeavours, by pressing Instances, to persuade him to that which most of all imported him. He took all proper Opportunities to touch upon Religion, calling upon him with gentle and pathetick Arguments to a Detestation of his Errors, and to seek the Knowledge of Truth. Upon some Occasions he had shewn some sort of Inclination to the Rites and Precepts of the Catholick Faith, seem'd to be dissatisfy'd with the Absurdities of Idolatry, and began to give some Hopes of his Conversion ; but always put it off for some Reason of State, having a Regard to the Superstition of his Subjects, even tho' his own had left him, more out of Fear of raising a Commotion amongst them, than for any Reverence he of late bore to their Idols.

Cortez, on his Part, did all that the Duty of a Christian requir'd. He intreated him, with all possible Fervour and Tenderness, to acknowledge the true God ; and, by receiving Baptism, to secure to himself a glorious Eternity in the next World. He was press'd by Father Bartolomeo de Olmedo with Arguments of still greater Force and Energy ; nor were the Officers, who were most in that Prince's Favour, less sedulous in their Endeavours to work upon him. Donna Marina did not only interpret, but join'd Intreaties in the most persuasive Terms ; and in spite of all that Malice and Emulation can say, (for even in this Respect the Spaniards are charg'd with Neglect) no human Means was omitted to induce him to turn into the Path of Truth : But he would never return a rational Answer, but always remote from the Point ; now exclaiming against the Insult he had receiv'd ; anon breathing nothing but Threats of Vengeance ; then he would fall into Fits of Despair, conjuring Cortez to revenge his Injuries upon the Traytors. In this miserable Conflict of Mind he continu'd Three Days, and then surrender'd up to the Devil the eternal Possession of his Soul, employing the latest Moments of his Breath in impious Thoughts of sacrificing his Enemies to his Fury and Revenge, leaving to the World a terrible Example, how much the Passions are to be dreaded in the Hour of Death, as being always Enemies to Resignation, and more especially in the Great and Powerful, in whom they are generally more absolute and predominant, by Reason that the Custom of obeying those Passions prevails over the Vigour which is requisite to repress and subdue them.

The Concern which the Death of this Prince caus'd amongst the Spaniards was universal; for they all in general lov'd him with an equal Affection, some upon Account of his Liberality towards them; and others for his Gratitude and benevolent Disposition. But Cortez, who was far more oblig'd to him than all the rest, and whose Loss was incomparably greater, took this cruel Stroke so to Heart, that he was quite inconsolable; and notwithstanding he endeavour'd all he could to compose himself, that his People might not be discourag'd, he was not able to conceal his inward Grief, but was frequently observ'd to let fall some Tears which it was not in his Power to contain. He had founded the greatest Part of his Designs in the voluntary Subjection of that Prince. By his Death the best of his Hopes were intirely lost, and he found himself under the Necessity of forming a new Plan, in order to attain the Views he had propos'd. What most sensibly touch'd him was, his having died obstinate in his Errors; the last and greatest Aggravation of this Misfortune, and an essential Point which divided his Heart between Sorrow and Dread, all his Endeavours to prevent it being frustrated, and his Mind struck with Horror at that terrible Idea. His first Care was to call together all the Servants of the deceas'd Emperor, of whom he chose Six Persons of the greatest Note to carry out the Body into the City, in which Number were comprehended some Priests who had been taken Prisoners, all of them Eye-Witnesses of his Wound and Death. He order'd them, from him, to acquaint the Princes who were at the Head of the mutinous Populace “ That he had sent them the Corps of “ their late Sovereign murder'd by their Hands, which enor“ mous Crime, gave fresh Right to the Justice of his Arms.
“ That before his Death, he had frequently requested, and “ with most pressing Instances conjur'd him (as those Deputies “ well knew) to revenge his Wrongs, and to chastize them
“ for their abominable Rebellion: But that he look'd up“ on their Insurrection to have proceeded from the brutal “ Fury in the Dregs of the Populace, and an Insolence the
“ the Enormity whereof he hop'd those of better Sense and “ Rank would take into Consideration and punish. That “ therefore, for that Reason, he once more propos'd Peace, gi“ ving them Leave to send their Deputies to make Proposals “ towards an amicable Accommodation, assuring them, That “ he was ready to agree to any reasonable Conditions: But “ that at the same Time he would have them to understand, “ that if they did not immediately accept his Offer, and repent “ them

“ them of their Crime, they should not only be treated as “ Enemies, but as Rebels and Traytors to their Prince, ex“ perienicing the utmost Rigour of his Arms : For that Mō- “ tezuma, out of Respect to whom he had with-held, and mo“ derated his just Resentment, being now dead, he would lay “ waste, and intirely destroy their City ; and that they should,
 “ when too late, know by dear Experience the Difference be“ tween Hostilities, when little more than barely defensive ;
 “ and by which he had hitherto only endeavour’d to reduce “ them to Reason, and a declar’d War in which he lay under “ an Obligation to chastize them with the last Severity.”

The Six Mexicans immediately departed with this Message, bearing the Corps upon their Shoulders ; and at a small Distance from the Quarters, a Body of the Seditious advanc’d to meet them, not without some Signs of Reverence and Respect, as was observ’d from the Walls. When they discover’d what it was, they all follow’d the Corps, flinging away their Arms, and abandoning their Posts ; and in an Instant the City was fill’d with Outcries and Lamentations ; a sufficient Demonstration that that melancholy Object, which gave them a View of their treasonable Practices, had some Sort of Impression upon their obdurate Hearts. They had already elected a new Emperor, as was soon after known ; so that those Expressions of Grief could not be thought to proceed from a sincere Repentance, neither could those Returns of Loyalty, sound ill in the Ears of the Successor, who must needs look on them as due to the Name, and not to the Person of the Sovereign. The Outcries and Clamours of the People, who throng’d up and down in Swarms, lasted the whole Night ; repeating thro’ every Street the Name of Motezuma, with turbulent Uneasiness mix’d with Sorrow, which tho’ it express’d a Sort of relenting Reflection, yet still carry’d the same Face of Sedition as before.

Some say, that they dragg’d the Body about the Streets, and cut and mangled it all to Pieces, without sparing his Children and Wives : Others, that they expos’d it to the Derision and Contempt of the Common People, till one of his Servants, erecting an humble and irregular Pile of ill-collected Wood, in a little frequented, and less decent Place, he there reduc’d it to Ashes. What has been said may be believ’d of an enrag’d Populace, in whose Inhumanity what seems farthest from Decency and Reason carries the the greatest Face of Probability. But the Truth of the Matter is, that the Rebels receiv’d the Corps with Reverence ; shewing, both in the adorning it, and in the Funeral Pomp, that they were concern’d at his disastrous Death, and look'd upon it as an Accident undesign'd; or perhaps, by that exterior Shew of Respect, they thought either to appease or to deceive their false Deities. They convey'd him, the next Morning, with great Solemnity and Attendance, to the Mountain of Chapultepeque, where they were accusom'd to perform the Exequies, and to preserve the Ashes of their Kings; and upon this Occasion, the Outcries and Lamentations of the Multitude resounded with greater Force than was customary, as they themselves afterwards acknowledg'd and confirm'd, looking upon those Honours they had shewn to the Ashes of their deceas'd Monarch as an Act of Atonement, and a substantial Expiation of the Crime they had committed.

There have not wanted some Pens who have done all they could to charge Cortez with this Prince's Death; affirming, That he order'd him to be kill'd to free himself from the Trouble he gave him: Nay, One of our Writers says, That it was so reported, and neither defends nor denies it; an unpardonable Neglect, which without being a convincing Proof of his evil Design, is nevertheless very like Calumny. Perhaps the Mexicans might, some Years afterwards, affirm it, either to blacken the Characters of the Spaniards, and to make them hated by other People, or to blot out that Brand of Infamy from their own Nation: But at that Time it is certain that they neither said it, nor so much as imagin'd any such Thing; nor ought any Writers to give themselves the Liberty of publishing such ill-grounded Incoherencies: For how was it possible or consistent with Reason, that so considerate and vigilant a Person as Hernan Cortez, when he had upon his Back the whole Power of the Mexican Empire, should once think of parting with a Pledge in which consisted his greatest Security? Of what Advantage could the Death of a Prince, who was a Friend, and subjected, be towards the Conquest of a Kingdom, whose Inhabitants were all up in Arms, and declar'd Enemies? It is a Misfortune which generally attends all great Actions, to have them variously reported, and an easy Undertaking for the Envious to invent chimerical Circumstances, which notwithstanding they are not sufficient intirely to obscure the Truth, leave it nevertheless expos'd to Opinion and Ignorance, by submitting the essential Part of a History to the licentious Credulity of the Vulgar. Foreigners have given themselves abundance of Trouble in endeavouring to discredit the Conduct of Cortez in this Expedition: But the many Proofs he has given of his good Sense, plead boldly in his Justification, and clear him from Absurdities which which are so maliciously laid to his Charge, if the Nobleness of his Temper and well-known Generosity will not be allow'd sufficient to have kept him from acting such Atrocities. Let therefore Envy remain cover'd with its own Confusion; an odious Vice without Pleasure, a racking Torment while dissembled, a deformed Brand when known, the Glory of the Injured and the Infamy of the Injurers.

Moteczuma, as we have elsewhere observ'd, was a Prince of rare Talents; and excellent natural Endowments; his Presence graceful, agreeable, and majestick; of a quick Apprehension and clear Understanding; of an acute Penetration; and, in a Word, wanted nothing but Improvement and acquir'd Parts. His Valour advanc'd him to the highest Dignities in the Empire, and gave him the first Rank among his own People, before he obtain'd the Crown, and afterwards among Strangers gain'd him the Reputation of being the most deserving Prince of his Time. His Genius and Inclination was compleatly Martial: He understood the Arts of War; and whenever there was Occasion to take up Arms, the Camp was his Court. He gained in Person, and by his own Direction Nine Field Battles. He conquer'd several Provinces, and greatly extended the Limits of his Empire; quitting the Splendors of the Throne for the Applauses of the Field, esteeming the General's Staff as the securest Scepter. He was naturally munificent and liberal, and bestow'd many great Favours without any Manner of Ostentation, looking on Gifts as due Debts, and placing Magnificence among the first Duties of a Monarch. He was a Lover of Justice, and watch'd the Administration of his Ministers with a rigid Severity. He was temperate in his Diet, and moderate in his Use of Incentives to Sensuality. But these Virtues, as well of a Man, as of a King, were obscur'd, or rather quite lost among greater Vices, both of the Man, and of the King: His Temperance rather made him vicious than continent; for in his Time the Tribute of Concubines was introduc'd, Beauty throughout his whole Realm being a Slave to his deprav'd Appetite and disorderly Lusts, without so much as making Novelty an Excuse. Then his Justice degenerated to the contrary Extreme, and was often confounded with Cruelty; for he us'd Chastisement like Revenge; doing that with Rage, which might have been justifiable had it been done with Reason. His Liberality occasion'd greater Damage than it did Good; for he loaded his Kingdoms with Impositions and intolerable Tributes; and the abominable Fruit of his Tyranny and Oppression was consum'd by his Profusions and Extravagance.

He allow'd no Medium, nor admitted of any Distinction, betwixt Slavery and Vassalage; and placing his Policy in oppressing his Subjects, he was more pleas'd at the abject Slavery and Dread in which he held them, than at their patient Resignation to his Will. Pride was his capital and predominant Vice. Whenever Fortune favour'd him he attributed all to his own Merit, having a better Opinion of himself than he had of his Gods, notwithstanding he had been extremely given to his own superstitious Idolatry. He was honour'd, according to them, with frequent Visits from the Devil, who among those wretched Heathens appears in Visions, and converses with such of them who are arriv'd to a certain Degree in the Path of Perdition. He voluntarily subjected himself to Cortez, condescending to a Confinement of so long a Continuance directly contrary to all the Rules of the Haughtiness and Pride of his natural Disposition. It might reasonably have been doubted at that Time, what was the real Cause of such a Subjection: But the very Effects of it have since discover'd, that God took the Reins into his own Hand on Purpose to tame that Monster; making his unusual Gentleness instrumental to the first Introduction of the Spaniards, a Beginning from whence afterwards resulted the Conversion of those Heathen Nations. He left several Children; Two of his Sons, who accompany'd him in his Confinement, were kill'd by the Mexicans, when Cortez made his Retreat; he had Two others, with Three Daughters, which Ladies were afterwards converted and marry'd with Spaniards. But the most remarkable of them all was Don Pedro de Motézuma, who was also soon after converted to the Catholick Religion, and had that Name given him at his Baptism. He was next Heir to his Father, his Mother being Princess of the Province of Tula, and one of the Queens who resided in the Imperial Palace with Royal Dignity; which Princess likewise followed her Son's Example, and was baptiz'd by the Name of Donna Maria de Niagua Suchil, keeping up in those Surnames the Nobility of their Ancestors.

His Majesty bestow'd many Favours upon Don Pedro, giving him an Estate and considerable Rents in New Spain, with the Title of Count de Motézuma, whose legitimate Succession is still preserv'd in the Counts of that Title, which illustrious Family, by that Name retain'd the heroick Remembrance of their princely Original. Motézuma reign'd Seventeen Years. He was the Eleventh in the Number of the Emperors, and the Second of the Name of Motézuma. To conclude, he died in his

his Blindness amidst so many, and so efficacious Remedies. Such are the Decrees of Divine Providence, which tho' they affect the Heart, are beyond human Comprehension!

C H A P. XVI.

The Mexicans return to besiege the Spanish Quarters. CORTEZ makes a Sally. Gains a Temple where the Enemy was lodg'd. Defeats and puts them to Flight. Does considerable Damage to the City, with a Design to terrify them in order to make his Retreat.

DURING the Three Days that Motezuma lay ill of his Wounds, the Indians attempted nothing of any great Consequence, notwithstanding they had constantly some Bodies of Men in Sight, and made some slight Attacks which were easily repuls'd. It might have been thought that this Intermission proceeded from the Sense they had of their Crime, or from the Dread of their Sovereign's Indignation, whom they had offended in so outrageous a Manner; had it not been afterwards known that this faint Prosecution of the War was only because the Populace were all in Confusion and Disorder, without Leaders, the Nobility being all busied at the Inauguration of a new Emperor, who, as was soon after known, was Quitlavaca, King of Iztapalapa, and Second Elector of the Empire. This Prince surviv'd his Coronation but a few Days; and upon Account of his Indolence and Want of Application the very Memory of his Name is almost forgot among the Indians of that Country.

The Mexicans who went out with Motezuma's Body, and were intrusted with the Proposals for an Accommodation, did not return with an Answer. This Mark of Obstinacy, at the Beginning of a new Government, pointed out evil Consequences in the Sequel. Cortez was desirous of retreating with Reputation, and had already concerted with his Officers and Soldiers that their Departure should be very speedy, being fully convinc'd, that it was absolutely necessary to recruit himself with fresh Forces,

Forces, in order to return to Mexico with more Hopes, and upon a better Foundation, the Conquest of which he always look'd upon as a Thing which would certainly be, and which he now look'd upon as an indispensable Obligation in him to prosecute, since the Death of Motezuma; out of Respect and Consideration to whom he had kept his Resolutions within more moderate Bounds than he now thought himself oblig'd to do.

It was not long before the Indians explain'd what they had been contriving during that Suspension of Hostilities; for the next Morning after the Day on which they celebrated the Funeral Obsequies of Motezuma, they renew'd the War upon a better Footing, and with a greater Number of People. By Break of Day all the Streets thereabouts were fill'd, and the Towers of a great Temple garrison'd, which was but little distant from the Quarters, and where they could command Part of the Palace with their Slings and Arrows: That was a Post which Cortez himself would have fortify'd, had he been Master of Forces enough to divide them; but he would not be guilty of the Error of those who in order to prevent precarious Contingencies, are wanting in what immediately concerns them.

The Ascent to the upper Gallery of this Temple was by a Hundred Steps, upon the Pavement whereof some tolerably large Towers were erected. In this they had lodg'd about Five Hundred Men, chosen out of the Mexican Nobility and were so fully bent upon maintaining it, that they had provided themselves with Arms, Ammunitions, and all other Necessaries, for many Days.

Cortez found himself under an unavoidable Obligation to dislodge the Enemy from this commanding Eminence, the Advantages whereof once known and improv'd might produce very dangerous Consequences, and requir'd a vigorous Effort towards a speedy Remedy. The better to succeed in this Attempt, without hazarding his Reputation, he drew the greatest Part of his Garrison without the Wall, dividing them into such Squadrons as were necessary to defend the Avenues; and hinder the Enemy from receiving Reinforcements. The Attack of the Temple he committed to the Conduct of Captain Escobar, with his Company, and about a Hundred more choice Spaniards. They began the Engagement by possessing themselves of the Mouths of all the Streets, and at the same Time Escobar made his Attack, gaining the lower Porch, and Part of the Stairs, without Opposition; for the Indians suffer'd them purposely to advance so far, that they might have the Advantage of assaulting them them nearer, and when they saw their Opportunity, they lin'd the Rails of the Porch with Men, and gave the Charge by letting fly their Arrows and Darts with so much Fury, and at the same Time in such good Order, that Escobar was oblig'd to make a Stand, and to order the Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows to play against those who appear'd: But it was not possible for the Spaniards to withstand the second Charge, which was much more furious; for they had prepar'd huge Stones, and prodigious large Beams which they let tumble from the Top, which gaining Force by the Steepness of the Descent, forc'd them to give back a First, Second, and Third Time: Some of the Beams came down half burn'd, that they might do the greater Damage. An odd Imitation of our Fire-Arms; and it is to be suppos'd was thought a notable Contrivance amongst their Engineers. But however, the Spaniards were oblig'd to break their Ranks to avoid those rude Salutes; and when once they were put into Confusion, the Retreat was unavoidable.

Cortez, who with a Troop of Horse, was running to all Parts where they were engaging, saw this Disadvantage of his People; and consulting only the Impulses of his Valour, he dismounted; and having reinforc'd Escobar with some Tlascalans of the Body of Reserve, and those of his own Troop, he caus'd a Shield to be fasten'd to his wounded Arm, and with Sword in Hand advanc'd to the Stairs, with a Resolution so determin'd, that those who follow'd him being animated by his generous Example, became wholly insensible of the Danger. He happily soon overcame the Impediments which obstructed the Assault, gain'd the last Stair at the first Attack, and presently after the Rails of the upper Gallery, where they came to Handy-Blows with Swords and Clubs.

Those Mexicans were all Nobles; and it soon appear'd, by the Defence they made, what Difference the Spur of Reputation makes among Men. They suffer'd themselves to be cut to Pieces rather than surrender their Arms: Some cast themselves headlong from the Rails, persuad'd that a voluntary Death was by far the most honourable. The Priests, and those who attended the Service of the Temple, after calling upon the Mexicans to defend their Gods, died valiantly fighting: And in a very little Time Cortez intirely gain'd the Post, with the Slaughter of all those Mexican Nobles, without losing one Man, or having many wounded.

The Attempt and Resolution of Two valiant Indians, in the very Heat of the Engagement, was very remarkable; and the intrepid Boldness with which they endeavour'd to execute their Design, ought not to be pass'd over in Silence. They had resolv'd to sacrifice their Lives for the Benefit of their Country, believing that they should finish the War by their Deaths; and to this Purpose they had both agreed to precipitate themselves from the Rails, on that Side where there were no Stairs, and to carry Cortez along with them. They stood together watching an Opportunity; and immediately, when they saw him near the Precipice, they flung down their Arms, and approach'd him, like Deserters coming to surrender; and being before him, they bent their Knees in the Posture of Suppliants, when all on a Suddain they seiz'd him, and us'd their utmost Efforts to force him to the Precipice; but he, not without Difficulty, broke loose, and got clear of them, when at the same Instant they threw themselves headlong to the Ground, and were crush'd to Pieces. Cortez remain'd rather astonish'd than mov'd, yet was sensible of the imminent Danger he had been in, by what he saw was become of his adventurous Aggressors; but still he was not much displeas'd at their Boldness, upon Account of the Greatness of the Attempt.

Some Circumstances occur'd in this Action at the Temple, which made the Reduction therefore much easier than it would otherwise have been. The Indians were confounded and terrify'd to see themselves attack'd by a greater Number than ordinary, and by the Spanish Captain himself, whom they look'd upon as invincible. In the Defence of the Stairs they were rather precipitate and confus'd, than regularly diligent; and the Beams which they cast down cross-ways, and wherein indeed consisted the best Part of their Defence, were observ'd always to fall Point foremost, and so pass'd on thro' the Assailants, without hurting any of them; a Thing which too frequently happen'd to be look'd upon as barely casual: And there are some who relate it as one of those Miracles which Divine Providence wrought in that Conquest. All this might nevertheless be owing to their Confusion: But however it was, it is certain that this one Circumstance very much facilitated the Success of that Attack; and considering how much is to be attributed to God's Assistance throughout the whole Course of this War, it will not be very much out of the Way, for once, to make the Wonderful and the Miraculous equivocal. Cortez immediately took Care to have convey'd to the Quarters all the Provisions which the Indians had deposited in the Store-Rooms of the Temple, which being in very considerable Quantities, prov'd a welcome and necessary Supply upon that Occasion. He then order'd that the Temple, the Towers, and some Houses which were contiguous, tigious, should be set on fire and destroy'd, that his Artillery might command all that Eminence: The Management of this he committed to the Tlascalans, who instantly put it in Execution; and turning his Eyes towards the Part, where the rest of his People were engag'd, he perceiv'd that the greatest Force of the Enemies was in the Street of Tacuba, where the Spaniards were warmly charg'd, and hard put to it in defending that important Avenue; upon which he immediately mounted his Horse, and putting the Reins of his Bridle over his wounded Arm, he took a Lance in the other Hand; and hasten'd to their Assistance, ordering the rest of the Horse to follow him, together with Escobar, and those under his Command. The Cavalry pass'd on before, breaking thro' the Multitude, wounding, oversetting, and trampling them under Foot on every Side, without losing one Stroke, or ever being forgetful of their own Defence. The Action was very bloody: For such of the Indians who withdrew on either Side to avoid the Shock of the Cavalry, fell in, already half vanquish'd, with the Infantry, who found but little Difficulty in compleating their Defeat. But Cortez, somewhat inconsiderately, advanc'd before the rest of his Troops, suffering himself to be hurry'd away too impetuously by the Fire which animated his fearless Breast; and when he began to recollect himself, and to consider his Error, he perceiv'd that he could not retire, by Reason that he found a numerous Throng of the flying Enemy bearing down upon him, owing the present Danger his Life was in to the Success of his own Troops.

In this perillous Circumstance, he resolv'd to take another Street, hoping he should there meet with less Opposition; and in advancing a few Paces, he fell into a confus'd Body of Indians, who were dragging along his intimate Friend Andres de Duero, whom they had taken Prisoner by the unhappy Stumbling of his Horse, and who, to avoid being hack'd to Pieces, patiently suffer'd himself to be led away to the Sacrifice. Cortez intrepidly charg'd that disorderly Convoy, and breaking thro' the foremost, trampled under his Horse's Feet all who stood in his Way, insomuch that his Friend had an Opportunity to disengage himself from those who held him, and to make Use of a Dagger or Poinard they had, thro' Negligence, overlook'd when they disarm'd him, with which he made Way by the Deaths of several of the Enemy, so as to recover his Lance and Horse, when the Two Friends joining, they pass'd the Street on a full Gallop, oversetting whole Drovers of their Opposers, till they had got safe to their Troops. This Action Cortez always celebrated, celebrated, looking upon it as one of the most fortunate Adventures of his Life, by Reason that an Opportunity of saving his Friend should so luckily fall in his Way at a Juncture when he was wholly dubious of his own Safety : But Fortune, taking the Word in its true, proper, and Catholick Signification, was so remarkably favourable to him in whatsoever he took in Hand, that his very Oversights and Inadvertencies seldom or never fail'd of turning to his Advantage.

The Enemy was now retiring on every Side ; but it was not thought by any Means advisable to engage any farther, by Reason it was not possible to follow the Chace, without leaving the Quarters expos'd. A Signal therefore was made for the Retreat ; and notwithstanding they return'd very much fatigu'd with that tedious Encounter, it was without Loss, nor any other Dammage than that of a few Soldiers wounded ; which was a Circumstance which gave a greater Relish to their Repose, the Thoughts of their cheap and successful Victory quickly making them forget the Fatigues they had undergone in the Battle. This Day a considerable Number of Houses were consum'd with Fire, and such a Multitude of the Enemy lost their Lives, that it was hop'd that they would have been terrify'd from attempting any new Insults upon the Quarters. Some affirm this Sally to have been made before the Death of Moteczuma : But it was after, according to the Relation given by Cortez himself, whom we follow without any farther Examination, this not being a Case in which the exact Time of its happening can be of very great Importance. The Success at the Attack of that Temple was chiefly owing to the General's own Valour, for by his single Resolution and Example he render'd superable those Difficulties which had put all the rest to a Stand. In that Action he Twice forgot of what Importance his Life was to the Cause, exposing his Person to the greatest Dangers with much more Courage than Consideration ; an Excess of Martial Vigour, which notwithstanding it was attended with Success, merits rather to be admir'd than commended.

The Mexicans made such great Account of that Exploit of Cortez in storming and destroying the Temple, that they painted it after their Manner ; and some Pieces afterwards came to Light, in which the whole Action was fully represented ; as the attacking the Stairs ; the Encounter in the upper Porch ; and lastly their Defeat, and how they abandon'd the Post to their Enemies the Spaniards, together with the burning that Edifice, the Towers, circumjacent Houses, &c. without omitting the minutest Circumstance ; those Pictures being, as we may say, say, their Histories and Chronicles, which they held in high Veneration, and upon the Authority whereof they laid a very great Stress, deeming it a Crime little less than Sacrilege to deceive or defraud Posterity. But in this Particular it was very observable, that they were not altogether free from a malicious Vanity, and introduc'd some additional Fictions of their own, with the View of enhancing the Glory of their Nation; for they represented many Spaniards lying dead, some precipitating themselves, or thrown headlong down from the Eminence, and others sorely wounded, destroying, as may be said, with the Pencil those whom they were not able to injure with their Weapons; and endeavouring to palliate their Defeat by exposing their Loss in such Colours as might make the Advantage their Enemies obtain'd over them appear like a dear-bought Victory; a Want of Exactness, or rather of Sincerity, from which Writers are not always free, amongst whom this Sort of Concern, this Partiality, with which they relate Facts and Passages, and wrest the intervening Circumstances according to the Inclination which biasses their Pens, is become a familiar, and, in a manner, habitual Vice; insomuch that there are few Histories to be met with wherein, upon Perusal, the Country, Principles, and Inclinations of the Author are not to be discover'd. Plutarch, in his Treatise of the Glory of the Athenians, finds no small Parity, or Affinity, between History and Painting; as being both the One and the Other, lively Descriptions and Representations of Things and Actions. But this Resemblance, Affinity, or Similitude between the Pencil and the Pen is never so obvious and just as when, in History, the Places where the Facts were transacted are gloss'd with those Kinds of artificial Strokes which pass for Ornaments to the Work, and are, in Reality, no other than the Perspectives in Painting, and may be properly call'd the Distances of Truth.

C H A P. XVII.

The Mexicans propose Peace ; but with the View of distressing the Spaniards by Want of Provisions. Their Disingenuity is discover'd. CORTEZ holds a Consultation with his Officers, and it is resolv'd to leave Mexico that Night.

TH E Day following the Mexicans demanded a Parley, to which Cortez consented, not without Hopes of coming to some reasonable Terms of Accommodation. The General went to hear their Proposals from the Wall ; and some of the Nobles drawing near, with few Attendants, they, on the Part of the new Emperor, propos'd, " That he, and all his People, should immediately prepare to " set out, and direct their March to the Sea Side where their " great Canoes (so they call'd the Ships) were waiting for them ; " assuring him, That there should be a Cessation from all Ho- " stilities for as much Time as was necessary for him to make " himself ready for his Departure. Adding, That if he did " not instantly determine to come to that Resolution, he might " absolutely depend upon it, that both himself and all who " were with him should inevitably perish ; for that they were " now convinc'd by Experience that the Spaniards were not " Immortal ; and that, tho' the Death of every Spaniard should " cost them the lives of Twenty Thousand Men, there would " still remain a numerous Multitude to sing the conclusive " Victory." Cortez reply'd, " That the Spaniards never pre- " sum'd to say or think themselves to be Immortal, but valu'd " themselves upon being Men of more Valour and Resolu- " tion than other Mortals ; and in particular knew themselves " to be so far superior, in every Respect, to their Nation, that " without any greater Force than what he then had with him, " he had Courage and Determination enough to undertake the " total Destruction, not only of their City, but of the whole " Empire : But that being mov'd at the Calamities they had al- " ready suffer'd thro' their own Obstinacy, he was determin'd " to depart, since the Subject of his Embassy, and by Conse" quence

“ quence, all the Business he had there was at an End by the “ Death of the Great Moteczuma, whose Bounties and Friend“ ship had detain’d him at Mexico, and that he would put that “ his Design in Execution, without the least Delay, as soon as “ some Articles, which were necessary for the Disposition of “ his March, should be mutually agreed upon.” The Deputies gave Signs of being well satisfy’d, and made as if they thought that Dispatch sufficient, and in Reality they desir’d no better Answer: But there lay hid a Snake in the Grass; those Overtures of Peace they had been making being attended with per-fidious Views.

The new Emperor had call’d a Council of his Ministers and Grandees to debate upon Matters relating to the present War; and after several Conferences, it was resolv’d, That, to avoid the great Damage they receiv’d from the Spanish Arms, the lamentable Slaughter of their People, and the Ruin of their City, the best Method would be to keep them close block’d up, in order to distress them by Famine; not that they suppos’d the Spaniards would surrender themselves, but in order to weaken them, that when they were dispirited and wanted Strength, they might attack them with more Advantage; having invented this new Way of reducing an Enemy, till then a Novelty, and utterly unknown amongst their Stratagems of War.

Their Design, in setting on Foot those Overtures of Peace, was only in order to obtain the Suspension of Arms they desir’d; flattering themselves, that they might be able to protract the Treaty with various Proposals, till the small Reserve of Provisions they had laid up in the Quarters was consum’d; to which Purpose Orders were given that all possible Care should be taken to hinder them from Relief, blocking up, at a Distance, with Works and Bodies of Men, all the Ways by which the Besieged might attempt to make their Escape; causing likewise the Passage to the Causey, which led towards the Road to Vera Cruz, thinking it no longer any ways convenient to suffer them to depart the City, lest, at this Juncture, when the Provinces were little satisfy’d with the present Government, they might foment the Malecontents to a Rebellion, or reinforce themselves by an Army of Tlascalans.

Some of the Assembly call’d to Mind several Persons of great Distinction who were Prisoners in the Spanish Quarters, reflecting upon what they must suffer, since, of Necessity they would perish with Hunger before that Calamity could affect the Enemy: But they were all so zealous for the publick Cause, that, after some Debates, they unanimously voted, that those Prisoners

soners would be eternally happy, and did no more than discharge their Duty, if they sacrific'd their Lives for the Benefit of their Country; and it is not unlikely that they fear'd the worse upon Account of Motexuma's Three Sons who were with them, and whose Deaths would be no ways unwelcome to that Assembly; the eldest being a hopeful young Prince, capable of wearing the Crown, highly esteem'd by the People, and the only Person of whom the new Emperor had Reason to be jealous: A pitiful Weakness in such corrupt and inconsiderate Ministers, who, while they make believe that they are labouring for the Publick Good, are, under that Cloak, gratifying their own private Passions!

But what most of all concern'd them in general, was the Fate of the Chief of their idolatrous Sacerdotes, who was likewise in the same Prison with those above-mention'd; for he was universally reverenc'd as the Second Person in the Empire, and they held it as Sacrilege, and an unpardonable Offence against their false Deities to suffer him to perish. To procure his Liberty they made use of a very notable Piece of Policy. The same Deputies return'd again that Evening to demand another Conference, and propos'd on the Part of their Sovereign, "That in order to prevent any Disputes which might retard the Treaty, it would not be improper for them to send some one of their Mexican Prisoners to the Emperor with sufficient Instructions to give an Account of what was to be capitulated." This Proposal, which carry'd with it no ill Sound, nor was it attended with any great Difficulty, was readily enough agreed to; and the Deputies no sooner found it admitted, but they artfully let drop, as by Way of friendly Advice, that none would be properer to be entrusted with that Negotiation than a certain ancient Priest whom they held confin'd, because he was an intelligent Person, able to explain all Points, and to remove all Difficulties which might be started, which specious and well-manag'd Pretext suffic'd for the obtaining what they desir'd: Not that Cortez was ignorant of the artificial Carelessness of the Proposal; but in Competition with the great Importance it was to the Common Cause to sound the Minds of those People, he esteem'd it as a small Matter to part with a Prisoner who was both troublesome and detestable.

Soon after the Priest was dismiss'd, fully instructed by the General in some Demands easy to be granted, as concerning Measures for the Commodiousness of their March, intending afterwards (in Case he return'd) to employ him farther as to what was to be agreed upon in Relation to the laying down their

their Arms, the reciprocal Hostages, and several other Matters of greater Consequence : But it was to no Manner of Purpose for them to wait for his Return, for they were very soon undeceiv'd. The Centinels discover'd that the Enemy had besieg'd, or rather block'd up the Quarters at a much greater Distance than they were wont ; that they appear'd more wary and circumspect than ordinary, diligently casting up Trenches and other Works to defend the Passage of the Canals ; and that they had detach'd some Bodies of Men to the Lake who were breaking down the Bridges of the principal Causey, and cutting off all Communication with the Road which leads to Tlascala ; a Proceeding which fully discover'd the Artifice of their Designs.

This Intelligence Cortez receiv'd with some Concern ; but inur'd to overcome greater Difficulties, he re-assum'd his natural Calmness ; and upon his first Reflection, which always pointed directly at the Remedy, he order'd a Bridge of Beams and Planks to be made, wherewith to cover the Opening of the Causey, capable of bearing the Weight of the Artillery, and so contriv'd that it might, without much Difficulty, be carry'd by Forty Men. And without losing more Time than what was necessary for the compleating of this Work, he assembled his Captains to consult with them and to take their Opinion concerning the Retreat, whether it should be made by Day or by Night. In the proposing of this Point he carry'd himself with an intire Indifferency, either because he had not yet come to any Resolution, or because he did not care to charge himself with the Uncertainty of the Success. Their Opinions were divided, some being for retreating by Night, others by Day, and both Parties had their Reasons pro & contra.

Those who were of the first of these Opinions said, “ That “ Valour and Prudence not being inconsistent with each other,
 “ they ought to chuse the Way which was most secure : That
 “ the Mexicans, whether out of Custom, or Superstition, were “ always wont to lay aside their Arms on the Night's Ap“ proach ; and it was to be suppos'd that they would be “ now less vigilant than ordinary upon Account of the Nego“ ciation for Peace, which they imagin'd was carrying on and “ accepted on our Side : And if their Intention was to disturb “ them in their March, as the Preparations they were making “ seem'd to promise, it was to be consider'd how much they “ ought to dread an Engagement in the very Passage of the “ Lake where they could neither draw up their Ranks, nor “ make Use of the Cavalry, their Flanks all the while expos'd

“ to the Enemies Boats, oblig’d to force their Way in the “ Front, and defend themselves in the Rear.” The others, on the contrary, maintain’d, “ That it was by no Means “ practicable to begin a March by Night, with Baggage and “ Artillery, by an uncertain Road, rais’d upon the Waters,
 “ when the Season itself, cloudy and rainy as it then was, suffi“ ciently foretold the Success they might expect from so ill“ contriv’d a Resolution. That the Attempt of moving an “ Army, with all its Impediments, and with the Trouble of “ laying Bridges to make the Passage free, was not an Under“ taking to be effected without some Detention and much “ Noise; neither in War were the merry Stories of an Enemy’s “ Negligence to be depended upon, it being what one may “ indeed sometimes reap an Advantage from, but ought never “ to be taken for granted. That the imaginary Custom of “ the Mexicans never being in Arms by Night, which they “ look’d upon as infallible, notwithstanding they had seen the “ contrary in their setting Fire to the Quarters, and possessing “ themselves of the Temple, was not sufficient Authority to “ induce them to believe that they had wholly abandon’d the “ only Opportunity they ought to secure; adding, That they “ should always hold it far less inconvenient to march out at “ a Time when they might see the Dangers they had to en“ counter, than to make a Retreat with the Appearances of a “ Flight, and by so doing to come with little Credit and less “ Honour, to seek the Protection of their Confederates, who “ perhaps might despise their Friendship, when they had once “ lost the Opinion they had conceiv’d of their Valour; or at “ least it would be but very indifferent Policy to stand in Need “ of Friends, and to apply to them with a baffled and for“ feited Reputation.”

However the Proposal of making the Retreat by Night had most Votes, and Cortez gave Way to the Majority; probably suffering himself to be prevail’d with for some reserv’d and private Reason. They all agreed to hasten the March without farther Delay, and in Conclusion, resolv’d that it should be put in Execution that very Night, in order to avoid giving the Enemy Time to contrive new Measures for obstructing the Road of the Causey with any Works, or Trenches, such as they us’d in the Passage of their Canals. The building of the before-mention’d portable Bridge went on vigorously; and notwithstanding it may be believ’d that Cortez intended to have made Two others, there being Three Canals open’d in the Causey, they had not sufficient Time for the Work, nor was it thought absolutely necessary, as supposing, that they could remove the Bridge from one Canal to another when the Army had pass'd the first : Suppositions, in which Men are ordinarily too late made sensible of the Difference. there is between Speculation and Practice.

It is not to be deny'd but that General Cortez, in the Controversy there was among his Officers upon this Occasion; departed himself with a more indifferent Neutrality, and much less Activity than he was accusom'd to do. It was certain that he came to the Council somewhat inclin'd to the same Opinion which had been resolv'd upon, having given Ear to the vain Prediction of a Sort of an Astrologer, who, as he was going in, advis'd him in mysterious Terms to march away that very Night, for that he should lose the greatest Part of his Army if he suffer'd a certain favourable Constellation to pass, which was very near terminating in another Aspect, Unfortunate. This Diviner was a Spaniard, a private Centinel, and call'd Botello, chiefly known in the Army by the Name of the Necromancer, to which Appellation he answer'd without the least Concern; esteeming that Epithet as an allowing of his Abilities. As to the rest, he was an ignorant Fellow without Learning or Principles, who mightily valued himself upon penetrating into future Events; but he was neither so foolishly ignorant as they who really make a Study of those Diabolical Arts, and attain to a Perfection in them, nor so innocent and blameless as not to make Use of some Characters, Numbers, Words or Charms, such as contain within themselves, an abominable Affinity and Stipulation with the Devil, the Inventor. Cortez generally laugh'd at his Prognosticks, despising the Man for the Sake of his Profession; and even then heard him with the like Contempt; but he committed a Fault in listening to him at all, a Fault which was little less than if he had even consulted him; and when he should have had Recourse to his own Prudence, in order to have chosen the properest and most wholesome Method of proceeding, he was influenc'd by those very Prognostications which he had so much despis'd. A pernicious Sort of People, and dangerous Observations which considerate Persons ought always to avoid and abhor, and more particularly those who command; for at the same Time that they are sensible of the Vanity thereof, they suffer their Minds to be prepossess'd with something which inclines them either to Fear or Security, and when the Occasion comes for resolving the Impression which those Whim-

fies have made upon the Imagination, they revolt against the Understanding, and always in some Degree prejudice Reason.

The Spaniards march out privately. At the Entrance of the Causey are discover'd by the Indians, who attack them with their whole Power both by Land and Water; They get clear at last with great Difficulty, and considerable Loss, and reach the Town of Tacuba.

TH E very same Evening the General dispatch'd another Mexican as his Embassador to the City, with Pretence of continuing the Treaty begun by the before-mention'd Priest: This Feint was a Thing which was thought necessary to amuse the Enemy: The Instructions that Messenger carry'd, were to assure them of the Sincerity of their Intentions in that Negotiation, and that all Things should be got ready for their Departure within Eight Days Time at farthest. Cortez in the mean while was diligently disposing Matters for them to begin their March, the Shortness of the prefix'd Time making every Moment precious.

He distributed his Orders, and gave his Captains the necessary Instructions against all Accidents which might happen upon the March with all imaginable Precaution. He form'd his Van-guard of Two Hundred Spanish Soldiers, with the choicest of the Tlascalans, and about Twenty Horse, under the Conduct of the Captains Gonzalo de Sandoval, Francisco de Azbedo, Diego de Ordaz, Francisco de Lugo, and Andrès de Tapia. He gave the Command of the Rear Guard, with a greater Number both of Horse and Foot, to Pedro de Alvarado, Juan Velasquez de Leon, and other Captains of those who came with Narvaez. In the main Body, or Center, he plac'd the Prisoners, Artillery, and Baggage with the rest of his Army, reserving with himself, to be employed as Necessity should require, One Hundred choice Men, with the Captains Alvaro Davila, Christoval de Olid, and Bernardin Vasquez de Tapia. Things thus being thus dispos'd, he made a short Speech to his Soldiers, laying before them the Difficulties and Dangers of the Undertaking: Upon which he enlarg'd a little the more, because it was a current Opinion among them; that the Mexicans never engag'd by Night, and it was necessary to inspire them with Distrust, lest they should fall into an over-great Security, a dangerous flattering Enemy in all Military Actions, inclining the Mind to a certain Carelessness, which seldom fails of producing fatal Consequences; whereas a prudent Fear is always wont to prevent a shameful one.

He next caus'd all the Gold and Silver, Jewels and precious Stones, which were in the Custody of Christoval de Guzman, Groom of his Chamber, to be brought into his Apartment; and out of it he separated the Fifth belonging to the King, in those Things which were most valuable, and least bulky, of which he made a formal Delivery to those Officers who had Care of the Accounts and Provisions of the Army; giving a Mare of his own, and some wounded Horses for the Carriage thereof, in order to spare the Indians who might be, in other Respects, serviceable upon that Occasion. The Remainder, according to what Computation could be made, amounted to the Value of upwards of Seven Hundred Thousand Pieces of Eight, all which Wealth he left with little or no Reluctancy, protesting publickly, "That it was no Time to be embarrass'd; and that it would be a Shame to employ those Hands so unworthily which ought to be left free for the Defence of Life, and Reputation." But finding the Soldiers not so well contented with this inexcusable Loss, he added, as he was going away; "That they ought not to look upon their Retreat from thence as an intire abandoning of that acquir'd Treasure, and their main Design, but as a necessary and indispensable Disposition in order to return to that Enterprize with a greater Force, after the same Manner as a Man draws back his Arm in order to give the greater Blow." And withal gave them to understand, that he should not think it a mighty Crime in them to take away as much of that Wealth as they conveniently could; which was the very same Thing in Effect, as to leave Moderation to the Discretion of Avarice: Nevertheless the greatest Part of them, notwithstanding they saw this abandon'd Treasure in their Power, took Care to go light and ready for whatever might offer, tho' indeed there were some, and particularly those who came with Narvaez, who gave themselves up to Pillage, without the least Consideration, finding Fault with the Narrowness of their Knap-Sacks, and the small Depth of their Pockets, loading their Shoulders beyond what they were well able to bear; a Liberty in which, to Appearance, all the Military Care and Circumspection of Cortéz were asleep: For he could not possibly be ignorant, that Gold to a Soldier is not only an outward Embarrassment when there is Occasion to engage, but likewise an Impediment, which never fails of disturbing the Mind: It being much easier for those who have not a very great Regard for their Duty, to part with their Honour than with their Prize.

We have no other Excuse to make for him, but that he was persuaded that he should be able to execute his March without meeting with any Opposition; and if this Security, which does not seem to have been his natural Disposition, had any Relation to the Prediction of the Astrologer, after first acknowledging the Error he was guilty of in hearkening to him, this must not be look'd upon as a Second Error, but as an Inconvenience attending the First.

It was little less than Midnight when they march'd out of their Quarters, without the Centinels or advanc'd Guards finding any Thing to give them the least Suspicion: And notwithstanding both the Wetness of the Weather, and the Darkness of the Night favour'd their Intention of marching cautiously, and free them from any Jealousy of the Enemy's continuing Abroad in their Works, they so punctually observ'd Silence and Circumspection, that Fear itself could not have wrought what Obedience and Discipline did in those Soldiers. The portable Bridge went along with the Vanguard, and those who had the Charge of it, lay'd it over the first Canal; but the Weight of the Horse and the Artillery made it stick so fast in the Stones which supported it, that they were by no Means able to remove it to the other Canals, as they had design'd; nor had they indeed an Opportunity to do it; for before the Army had all pass'd the first Breach of the Causey, they were oblig'd to take to their Arms with the greatest Precipitation, being assaulted on every Side when they least of all suspected any such Matter. The Subtily with which those Barbarians dispos'd their Enterprize was very worthy of Admiration. They observ'd with a vigilant Dissimulation the Motions of their Enemies. They assembled and distributed without Noise the unmanageable Multitude of their Troops. They took Advantage of the Silence and Darkness of the Night to compass their Intention of drawing near without being discover'd. They cover'd the whole Length of the Lake on each Side of the Causey with arm'd Canoas; beginning the Attack with so little Confusion and such good Order,

Order, that the Spaniards heard their Shouts, and the warlike Sound of their Shells, almost at the same Time that they felt the Sharpness of their Arrows.

Cortez and his whole Army had undoubtedly been destroy'd, if the Indians had observ'd the same good Order in the Heat of the Engagement as they did in the Beginning of the Attack: But to them Moderation and Discipline were such a Constraint, that when once they began to be enrag'd, Obedience ceas'd, and Custom prevail'd, charging in Heaps upon that Part where they perceiv'd the Bulk of the Army; pressing upon each other after such a Manner, that their Canoas were broke to Pieces by striking upon the Causey; and the rude Shocks of those who were furiously endeavouring to advance, prov'd, as we may express it, a Second Rock upon which they split. The Spaniards made terrible Destruction among that naked and disorderly Multitude, but they had not Strength sufficient to hold out such incessant Usage of their Swords and Spears: Nor was it long before they found themselves likewise attack'd in Front, and were oblig'd to turn their Faces towards that Part where the Danger grew most pressing; for the Indians who were at a Distance, or who could not bear the Tedioufness of their Oars, flung themselves into the Water, and with their accustomed Fury and Confusion, climb'd up and got upon the Causey in such Numbers, that they throng'd one another so that they were not able to make Use of their Arms, which new Piece of Temerity had, upon this Occasion, the Circumstances of a Relief; for they were easily routed, and all of them in a Manner being kill'd, their Bodies were sufficient to fill up the Canal, with no other Trouble than the flinging them in, where they serv'd to supply the Want of a Bridge for the Army to pass over. After this Manner some of our Writers relate it; tho' others say, That they luckily found a Beam of sufficient Breadth, which the Enemy had left whole in the Second Bridge, on which the Soldiers pass'd over in Files, guiding the Horses thro' the Water by the Bridles. After what Manner soever it happen'd, for it is not easy to reconcile these different Accounts, nor indeed do all of them deserve Reflection; they overcame the Difficulty of this Pass by their indefatigable Industry and Perseverance, and the Vanguard prosecuted their March without being much retarded by the last Canal; for the Water being shallower by the Neighbourhood of the Shore, they could easily wade thro' the Remainder of the Lake; esteeming it as a particular Piece of good Fortune, that the Enemy, out of such Multitudes of People as they had to spare, had not sent any Troops to the other Side; for that would have occasion'd occasion'd a new, and far more dangerous Dispute for those who were making to the Shore. wounded, and half spent with the Water above their Middle: But this came not within the Compass of their Consideration, neither, probably, did they discover the Army's March till it was too late; or what may be most likely, their Confusion and Disorder was so great, that they did not immediately resolve upon opposing the Retreat.

Cortez pass'd with the first Body of his People, and ordering Juan de Xaramillo to take Care to form them as fast as they arriv'd, he return'd without Delay to the Causey, with the Captains Gonzalo de Sandoval, Christoval de Olid, Alonso Davila, Francisco de Morla, and Gonzalo Dominguez. He enter'd into the Engagement, animating those who fought, as well by his Presence as by his Example: He reinforc'd his Troops with as many Soldiers as he thought necessary to stop the Enemy, by lining Two Avenues of the Causey, and order'd the rest to file off from the Center, causing the Artillery to be thrown into the Water to free the Passage, and facilitate the March. His Valour did very much in this Dispute; but what his Mind suffer'd was much more, when in the Midst of this frightful Obscurity he heard the Voices of Spaniards calling upon God in the last Moments of their Life, whose Lamentations confusedly mix'd with the Shouts and Threats of the Indians, caus'd another terrible Conflict in his Breast between the Impulses of Anger and the Motions of Pity and Compassion.

These melancholy Sounds came from the Part which was next the City, where it was wholly impracticable to think of giving them any Relief, by Reason the Enemies, who were rowing up and down upon the Lake, had taken Care to destroy the Bridge which Cortez had caus'd to be laid across the Canal before the Rear-Guard had all pass'd, and there it was the Spaniards suffer'd most; for the chief Body of the Mexicans clos'd with them, obliging them to retreat to the Causey, cutting in Pieces all the hindermost and least circumspect, who, for the most Part, were of the Number of those who were wanting in their Duty, and had evaded entering into the Fight for the sake of the Gold which they had brought from the Quarters. These died ignominiously, hugging and embracing the miserable Load which made them Cowards in the Engagement, and tardy in their Flight, not only losing their own worthless Lives, but blemishing the Character of their Nation, and bringing an unjust Reflection upon the whole Expedition, for they pass'd in the Account of the Dead, as Men who had sold their Lives at a dearer dearer Rate, whereas in Equity and Reason Cowards ought not to be counted in the Number of the Conquer'd.

Cortez at last retir'd with all he could pick up of the Rear-Guard, and as he was penetrating thro' the Second Space of the Causey, with little or no Opposition, he was join'd by Pedro de Alvarado, who ow'd his Life to little less than a down-right Miracle of Activity and Resolution: For having found himself closely beset on every Side, his Horse kill'd under him, and one of the Canals still before him in his Way, he fix'd his Lance, or Spear, in the Bottom of the Lake, and forcibly raising his Body by a notable Spring of his Feet, poizing and supporting his Weight in the Air by the Strength of his Arms, with a desperate Leap cast himself on the other Side: A surprizingly bold Action, and which has since been look'd upon as something surpassing Nature; and Alvarado himself, when he afterwards reflected upon the enormous Distance, and the Success he had met with in the Attempt, easily became sensible of the Disproportion there was between the Fact itself and the Feasibility of performing it. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, in his History, seems to doubt of the Truth of this unaccountable Leap, making no Scruple of treating it as a mere Fiction, and indeed actually contradicts the whole, tho' he does not express himself after a very regular Manner; for at first he slightly passes over this Circumstance, and anon returns to it again, with the Diffidence of one who is afraid of being in the wrong, and at the same Time repents his having given into the Belief of it with too much Facility. But in our Opinion it is scarce reasonable, or even probable, that, upon this Occasion, Alvarado should feign such a strange Sort of a Story, and father upon himself an Action which, if ever so much taken for granted, would at the best only give an Opinion of his Agility, but could add no Manner of Reputation to his Valour. As for our Parts, we relate no more than what has been credited and affirm'd by Writers, and authoriz'd by Tradition, that Place being still known under the Denomination of El Salto de Alvarado, or Alvarado's Leap; nor do we find any mighty great Difficulty in believing that, upon this Occasion, as in several others, it might possibly be true tho' somewhat improbable: And considering the Extremity to which Pedro de Alvarado then found himself reduc'd, it appears less wonderful, as being not so much an Action absolutely beyond the Power of a Man to perform, as an extraordinary Effort of a Person driven to the last Necessity.

CORTEZ marches the Road towards Tlascala. Some Troops from the circumjacent Towns follow the Army at a Distance, till being join'd by the Mexicans, who likewise pursue him, they attack his Rear, and oblige him to take Refuge in a Temple.

TH E Army gain'd the firm Land with the first Appearance of the Day, and halted near Tacuba, not without some Jealousy of that Town, which was very populous, and a Friend to the Mexicans; but they took Care not immediately to quit the Neighbourhood of the Lake, that they might give Time to those who could escape from the Battle to save themselves: Nor was that Proceeding unnecessary; for several Spaniards and Tlascalans found the Advantage of that Stop, who by their Valour and good Management got off by swimming to the Shore, where they hid themselves in the Fields of Maiz thereabouts till the Morning.

These gave the General an Account that the last Division of the Rear-Guard was intirely cut off, and Cortez having drawn up his Troops, found that he had lost about Two Hundred Spaniards, more than One Thousand Tlascalans, Forty Six Horses, and all the Mexican Prisoners, which last, without being able to make themselves known in the Confusion of the Night, were treated as Enemies by those of their own Nation. The Spaniards were fatigu'd and discourag'd, their Numbers diminish'd, and the Artillery all lost, expecting every Moment to be attack'd, and the Place of their Retreat far off; and among so many Motives of Concern, their Misfortune receiv'd a greater Addition by the Loss of some principal Captains, in which Number those of the greatest Note were, Amador de Larez, Francisco de Morla, and Francisco de Salcedo, who lost their Lives, discharging their Duties with extraordinary Valour. Juan Velasquez de Leon, who retreated in the very last of the Rear-Guard, likewise lost his Life oppress'd by Multitudes, shewing an invincible Courage even to his latest Gasps: A Loss which was generally lamented; for all Men respected him, as the Second Person son in the Army. He was an Officer of very great Use, as well for his Advice as for his Readiness to execute. His Temper was somewhat reserv'd, but steady in all his Actions; grave without being disagreeable, formal, or precisely tedious; on all Occasions a strict Lover of Truth, and had a Mind so noble and generous, that he followed Cortez and forsook his Kinsman Diego Velasquez, merely because he look'd upon the Proceedings of the one too rash and unreasonable, and found those of the other to be just and honourable. He died with the Character of a Person very necessary in this Conquest, much mis'd, often remember'd, and universally regretted.

Cortez sat down upon a Stone to rest himself a little, while his Captains were putting the Troops in Order, and disposing them to prosecute their March. He found himself so oppress'd with inward Concern, that he never more than now stood in Need of all his Magnanimity and Resolution to temper his Grief, and suit it to the present Posture of Affairs. He summon'd up, and endeavour'd to support himself with his innate Constancy, begging a Truce of his melancholy Reflections: But at the same Time that he gave his Orders, animated his People, and exerted himself with his wonted Alacrity and peculiar Vivacity, his Eyes let fall Tears, which he was no more able to retain than he was able to conceal them from those who were about him; a manly Weakness, which, as it feelingly express'd a tender Concern for the common Cause, could not be said to cast any manner of Blemish upon his Character. It must certainly have been an Object well worth seeing, to behold that renowned Leader so sensibly touch'd, without the least Abatement or Slackening of his undaunted Resolution, and his Countenance all bath'd in Tears without losing any Part of the Air of a Conqueror.

He inquir'd for the Astrologer, whether in order to reprimand him for the Part he had in hastening the March, or to divert his Melancholy by rallying him upon his Science; but he was told that he was kill'd in the first Assault of the Causey, it happening to that Wretch after the same Manner as we ordinarily see verify'd in those of his Profession: We speak not of those who really understand the Foundation of that Art, making Use of the same by the Rules of Reason; but of those who take upon them to judge and foretel what is to come: A Sett of Men, who, for the Generality live wretchedly and die miserably; ever solicitous about other People's Happiness, and always unhappy themselves; insomuch, that one of the Classic Authors takes upon him to say, That the very Inclination to a vain Observation of the Stars, is a sufficient Argument to induce one to believe that the Person who has that Curiosity was born under an evil Planet.

But in the Midst of these Misfortunes, it was no small Consolation to Hernan Cortez and the whole Army, that Donna Marina and Geronimo de Aguilar had found Means to escape from the Battle, in the terrible Confusion of that Night, they being the principal Instruments of that Conquest, and no less necessary at that Time than they had been before; for without them it was altogether impossible to stir up and engage the Minds of the Nations they were going to seek: Nor was it less happy, that the Mexicans gave over following the Chace; for they gave Time to the Spaniards to breathe after their Fatigue, and the Horse had Leisure to march with the disabled Men behind them; and the Army likewise after a less hasty Manner. This Stop of theirs proceeded from an unthought-of Accident, which may be attributed to the Providence of God. The Sons of Motezuma, who had attended their Father during his Continuance in the Quarters, together with all the Mexican Prisoners who were left under Convoy along with the Baggage, were unfortunately kill'd by the Enemy; and in the Morning when the Indians, allur'd by the Spoils of the Dead, beheld, pierc'd thro' with their own Arrows, the Bodies of those unhappy Princes, whom they reverenc'd with that same Kind of Adoration they once did their deceased Father; when they beheld, I say, that mortifying Object, they stood amaz'd, stupify'd, and confounded, without daring to pronounce the Cause of their Astonishment. Those who first saw it drew back that others might approach, and all in general were absolutely mute, expressing their Surprize by Silence. However, it was not long before the News was carry'd thro' the Troops, and they were all seiz'd with Fear and Amazement; the Use of their Senses and Faculties being for some time suspended, with that Kind of sudden Terror, which the Ancients call'd Panick Fear. The Mexican Chiefs resolv'd to send an Account of this Accident to the new Emperor; and he, who was forc'd to affect a Concern out of Compliance with those who sincerely express'd theirs without feigning, commanded the Army to halt; beginning the Ceremony of the Funeral Outcries and Lamentations which us'd to precede the Obsequies, whilst the Priests, follow'd by all who had remain'd in the City, came to receive the Royal Bodies, in order to conduct them to the Burying-place of their Ancestors. It was to the Death of those Two Princes that the Spaniards were indebted for the first Recovery from their Confusion, fusion, and that seasonable Respite: But they lamented their untimely Fate as one of the greatest Losses that could have befallen them, and particularly Cortez, who, in those Princes, lov'd and respected the Memory of their Father, and Part of his Hopes had founded in the Right of the Elder.

Cortez in the mean while directed his March towards Tlascala, with Guides of that Nation, his Army continually in Battle Array, as not being without Suspicion of the Enemy's Delay; since upon such Occasions Diffidence and Fear is oftner attended with Success than is a too confident Security. They were not long in that Uncertainty before some Bands of arm'd Indians, who follow'd them in the Rear, without approaching within Shot. These were the Inhabitants of Tacuba, Escapuzalco, and Tenecuya, whom the Mexicans had summon'd out to observe the Spaniards on the March, till such time as they had discharg'd themselves of their Duty towards the Sons of Motezuma. A politick Contrivance in those barbarous People! However, these were but a small Annoyance to the Spaniards upon the Road; for they always kept at a Distance: So that they only offended with their scurrilous Language and Shouts: But they continu'd this Kind of harmless Hostility till the whole Multitude of the Mexicans came up, at which Time they all instantly united, and advancing with their accustomed Swiftnes, made so brisk and so resolute an Attack upon their Rear, that they were all oblig'd to face about to repulse them. Cortez extended his Front where he posted his Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows, being oblig'd to engage in the open Field, without having any Place of Security to retire to. As many of the Indians as had Courage enough to venture near, died, without any Discouragement to the rest. The Horse sally'd out to skirmish, and made a very great Slaughter: But the Number of the Enemies continually increas'd, and their Arrows and Slings did considerable Dammage from afar. The Spaniards were tir'd with such powerful Resistance, with scarce any Hopes of repulsing that enormous Multitude; and now their Valour began to slacken for Want of Strength; when Cortez, who behav'd himself in the Battle like a Soldier, without forgetting the Duty of a General, observ'd a certain rising Ground at no great Distance from thence, which commanded the whole circumjacent Plain. Upon the Top of that Eminence was a tower'd Building which appear'd like a Fortrefs, or at least the Exigence in which he found himself, made him fancy it as such. He resolv'd to possess himself of this Post for the Advantage of its Situation; and to that Purpose he detach'd a Party of Men to advance to reconnoitre, and himself soon after mov'd with the Gros in order to gain it, which yet he did not find could be effected without Difficulty, being oblig'd to face the Enemy all the while they were ascending the Hill, and to place some Companies of Harquebusiers to defend the Avenues; but they happily compass'd their Design, possessing themselves of the Tower without Resistance, and in that found all the Advantages which, at that Time, their Imagination could frame.

It was a Temple dedicated to the Sylvan Deities, or Idols of the Woods, to which those Barbarians recommended the Product of their Harvests. The Priests and Servants who attended the abominable Worship of that Place, had quitted it, flying from the Neighbourhood of War, as People of a different Profession.

The Court of this Temple was sufficiently capacious, encompass'd with a Wall, after their Manner of building, which, together with the Towers wherewith it was flank'd, render'd it tolerably defencible. Under the Shelter of these Works, which amongst those People was look'd upon as an inexpugnable Fortrefs, the Spaniards began to breathe. They lifted up their Eyes and Hearts towards Heaven, receiving this timely Relief from the imminent Perils to which they had been expos'd, as an immediate Act of Divine Providence: Nor did this pious Reflection cease to remain with them even after the Danger was all over; for in Memory of the signal Service that Temple did them, in affording them Shelter in an Exigence wherein they were near being reduc'd to the last Extremity, they erected afterwards in that very Place a Hermitage, with the Invocation of the Blessed Virgin, which is known to this Day by the Name of Nuestra Señora de los Remedios, where People daily find Relief in their Necessities; and where, in the Devotion of the Faithful, who are Inhabitants of those Parts, may be seen the Acknowledgment and grateful Remembrance they retain of so great a Benefit.

The Enemy did not dare to mount the Hill, nor did they give any Signs of their intending an Assault: But they approach'd within Musket Shot, begirting the Eminence on all Parts, and made some Advances to shoot their Arrows, wounding, for the most Part, the Air, and sometimes the Walls, as if it were to chastize them for opposing their Vengeance. In the mean Time nothing was to be heard but barbarous Shouts and Menaces, whereby they endeavour'd to conceal the Defects of their Valour, and which serv'd only to discover their Weakness. They were, with little Trouble, kept off till the Evening began began to approach, at which Time they all retir'd, and took the Road towards Mexico; whether it was to comply with the Observation of their Custom, of retiring with the Sun, or that they found themselves tir'd with having been in a Manner continually engag'd from Midnight till then. It was discover'd from the Top of the Towers, that they halted in the Middle of the Plain, and dividing into several Bodies, and seemingly endeavour'd to conceal themselves, as if they had not given sufficient Evidence of their Intention, and publish'd, by the Manner of their Retreat, that they left the Dispute in Suspence.

Cortez dispos'd every Thing in his Quarters with all the Care and Circumspection that a Night so unsecure, and a Post so threaten'd oblig'd him. He order'd the Guards and Centinels to be sooner reliev'd than ordinary, that all might have their Share of Rest. They made some Fires, as well because the Coldness of the Season requir'd this Relief, as to consume the Arrows of the Mexicans, thereby to deprive the Enemies of that Ammunition.

He gave a small Refreshment to the People of the Provisions found in the Temple, and what the Indians had sav'd with the Baggage. Particular Care was taken of the Cure of the Wounded, which was attended with no small Difficulties in a Place where all Necessaries were wanting; but they apply'd such Remedies as the Place afforded, and which in some Measure supply'd the Want of more proper Medicines, by asswaging their Pain, and the Horse-Cloths serv'd for Lint and Bandage.

Cortez took Care of all, but still without forgetting the Danger to which he lay expos'd; and before he would retire to take the least Repose, he assembled his Officers to consult with them what was to be done in this Juncture. He had already resolv'd within himself, but he always evaded deciding in hazardous Matters, and he was a great Master at bringing People over to resolve for the best, without shewing his own Opinion, or making Use of his Authority. He then propos'd different Methods which might be taken, with the several Inconveniencies attending them, leaving them to judge between the Possible and the Difficult. He began by intimating, "That the Trouble in which they " had been all that Evening, and the preceding Night, was not to " be undergone the Second Time; neither could they ever again
 " without apparent Rashness, attempt to undertake a March,
 " fighting all the while with an Army so extremely superior
 " to them in Number, oblig'd, in so indispensable a Manner,
 " at one and the same Time, to employ both their Hands and " Feet at such Disadvantage: That to avoid being again forc'd

“ to a Resolution so dangerous and accompany’d with so many “ insuperable Inconveniencies, he had some Thoughts of at“ tacking the Enemy in their Lodgment under Favour of the “ Night ; but he was of Opinion, that it would be but a fruitless “ Labour, since, at the best, they should only oblige the Multi“ tude to disperse for the present, who would not fail to join again,
 “ from which Method of theirs had proceeded the Tedioufness
 “ of that War: That he had thought afterwards of maintain“ ing that Post, till such Time as the Mexicans should be tir’d “ with keeping the Field ; but that the Want of Provisions, “ which they already suffer’d, likewise render’d that Method “ impracticable.” And lastly he told them, (and this was what he had determin’d upon,) “ That he had been thinking whether “ or no it would not be the best Way to march that same Night,
 “ and get Two or Three Leagues from thence by Morning,
 “ that the Enemy, according to their Custom, not moving “ till Sun-rising, they should have the Opportunity of gaining “ Ground without any farther Trouble ; so that in Case the “ Mexicans should resolve to follow the Pursuit, they would not “ be able to overtake them before they had sufficiently tir’d “ themselves, and it would be easier to continue their Retreat “ with a less vigorous Opposition. But considering that the “ Troops were in so bad a Condition, weary’d and near spent,
 “ it would be a Piece of unreasonable Inhumanity to put “ them, without new Cause, upon the Fatigue of an unsea“ sonable March, in a dark Night, and uncertain Road, not“ withstanding the present Exigence they were in, requir’d ex“ traordinary Remedies, and a speedy Resolution ; and in a “ Case where nothing was secure, they were to weigh the se“ veral Difficulties, and to chuse that which was attended by “ the fewest Inconveniencies.”

He had scarce finish’d his Discourse, when all the Captains agreed, That no other Resolution was practicable, and that they ran the least Hazard in resolving to proceed on their March without any further Delay than what was absolutely necessary, meaning some Hours of Rest to refresh the People ; so that the March was resolv’d upon at Midnight ; in which Cortez conform’d himself to what was really his own Opinion, tho’ he treated it as the Opinion of others : A subtil Piece of Policy which he was accustomed to make Use of, in order to prevent Disputes when the Affair was urgent, and admitted of no Delay, and which only those can practise who understand the Art of Deciding by asking Advice, and which is attain’d by leaving nothing for others to reason upon when the Proposal is made.

C H A P. XX.

The Spaniards continue their Retreat. They undergo great Fatigue and Difficulties. The Army reaches the Valley of Otumba, where, in a pitch'd Battle, the whole Power of Mexico is utterly defeated.

ALITTLE before the appointed Hour the Troops were all ready assembled, having slept with Concern, and wak'd without Difficulty. The Order to march, and the Reason for so doing, were given at the same Time; upon which they all diligently prepar'd for their setting out, sensible of the Necessity, and praising the Resolution. General Cortez order'd, that as a Blind to conceal from the Enemy their Motion, they should leave all the Fires burning, and giving to Diego de Ordaz the Charge of the Van-Guard, with some trusty and intelligent Guides, he plac'd his chief Strength in the Rear, where he himself remain'd, that he might be nearer the Danger, and by his well-known Care and Vigilance, be a Security to those who pass'd before. They set forward with all necessary Silence and Caution, and then ordering the Guides at first to keep at some Distance from the High Road, and to reassume it in the Morning, they march'd a little more than Half a League continuing their Circumspection and Vigilance, notwithstanding the Silence they kept and the Darkness of the Night. But having pass'd the Plain, upon their entring into a broken and hilly Ground, the advanc'd Guard fell into an Ambush, which the very People who endeavour'd to hide themselves, knew not how to conceal, for they gave Notice of the Danger beforehand, both by Shouts and Stones; and divers Troops of Indians came pouring down from the Eminences, and rushing out from among the Bushes, and confusedly, and without Order, attack'd on the Flanks; and notwithstanding they were not so numerous as to oblige the Army to halt, yet the Spaniards were necessitated to interrupt their March every now and then in order to beat off the most daring of the Enemy who ventur'd nearest, to break thro' several Ambuscades, and to dispute divers narrow Passes. The Spaniards were apprehensive at first that it was a Second Attack of the whole Army which which they had left on the other Side of the Temple ; and some of our Writers report this Action as a Pursuit of the Groſs of the Mexicans : But these intermitted and loose Attacks were not agreeable to their Manner of fighting, nor does it answer what they afterwards did : And in our Opinion, they were the Militia of the neighbouring Towns, who, by previous Orders receiv'd from Court, endeavour'd to disturb the Army's March, posting themselves in the broken Parts of the Road : For if the Mexicans had discover'd the Retreat, they would have come all in a Body as they were accusom'd to do ; They would, with their united Force, have begun the Attack in the Rear, and not have divided themselves into small Companies, converting the War into a few light Skirmishes.

With this Kind of Opposition, which was rather troublesome than dangerous, the Army advanc'd Two Leagues ; and a little before Day, they halted in another Temple, less capacious, and situated upon an Eminence not altogether so high as the former, but of sufficient Height to view the Country round about, and by the Number of Enemies they should discover, to judge of what Measures and Resolutions were properest to be taken for their Security. The Light of the Morning did not only discover what Sort of Indians they had to deal with, but likewise the Disorder in which they were ; and finding that what they had suspected for a new Charge of the Enemy's Army, was no more than the Insults of a despicable Herd of Peasants, they renew'd their March without farther Delay, with the Intent of advancing as far before the Enemy as possibly they could, in order to avoid, or at least to render more difficult, the Pursuit of the Mexicans.

The Indian Peasants continued their Shouts, still following them at a Distance, like frightned Dogs, which by barking express their impotent Rage ; till having advanc'd about Two Leagues farther, they discover'd a Village advantageously situated, and, as they believ'd, well peopled. Cortez pitch'd upon this Place for his Quarters, and gave Orders to his Officers to possess themselves of it by Force, if they could not by fair Means ; but they found it wholly forsaken by the Inhabitants, together with some Provisions which they could not carry off ; an Article which, at that Juncture, was very welcome, and no less necessary for the recruiting their exhausted Strength, than was so seasonable a Resting-place. Here the Army stay'd a Day, and some say Two ; the Condition of the Wounded being such, that they could not proceed sooner. They made Two Marches more through a Country still more rocky and barren, barren, always out of the great Road, and somewhat doubtful whether their Guides went right. They had no Cover, under which to pass the Night; nor did the Persecution of those Indians cease, who continually kept in Sight; or perhaps they might be others, who came out upon the first Order to follow them thro' their respective Districts. But above all other Inconveniencies in these Marches they suffer'd Hunger and Thirst to that Degree, that they wanted little of being quite dispirited. The Officers and Soldiers animated each other; and Patience, ambitious of vying with Valour, us'd its utmost Efforts to withstand those severe Tryals. They were forc'd to have Recourse to the Herbs and Roots of the Field for Sustainance, without examining whether they were venomous or harmless, tho' such as were the most prudent govern'd themselves by the Knowledge and Example of the Tlascalans. One of the wounded Horses died, and the Want they had of that Creature's Service in the Army was forgot with Joy, for it was divided, as a particular Regale, among those who were in the greatest Extremity, who celebrated the Feast by inviting their best Friends to partake of that dainty Food. A relishing Banquet at that Time, at which all Scruples of Stomach gave Way to Necessity.

The last of these Two Marches terminated in a little Village, whose Inhabitants, without abandoning their Dwelling like the others, gave them free Entrance; neither were they wanting in their Assistance to them with a seeming Cheerfulness and Sedulity in every Thing they were order'd, which Obsequiousness and unexpected Entertainment was a new Stratagem of the Mexicans, that their Enemies might come less prepar'd to the Snare which they had provided for them. These Villagers freely shew'd their Stores of Provision, and from other neighbouring Villages procur'd what was sufficient to make the fatigued Spaniards forget their past Sufferings. Early in the Morning the Army was all ready dispos'd to ascend the Mountain which, on the other Side, declin'd into the Valley of Otumba, thro' which they must of Necessity pass to take the Road that leads to Tlascala. Here they observ'd some Alteration in the Indians who followed their March; for their Shouts and Scoffs express'd rather a joyful Satisfaction than Indignation: And Donna Marina took Notice that they frequently said, Go on Tyrants! go on, for you will quickly arrive at the Place where you will all perish. These Expressions gave them Occasion to reflect; for those Words were too often repeated not to import something particular. Some began to doubt that these

Indians,

Indians confiding in the Tlascalans, rejoic'd at the Danger to which the Spaniards were marching; as having receiv'd some Notice that there had happen'd a Change in the Fidelity, or Affection of that Nation. But Cortez, and those of better Judgment and Penetration, look'd upon this Novelty as no other than a Token of some Ambush that was then nearer than Tlascala; for there wanted not Examples of the Simplicity and Easiness with which the Indians were wont to publish the very Thing which they endeavour'd to conceal.

They continued their March, forewarn'd now, and their Minds dispos'd for entering upon fresh Action, when the advanc'd Guard, having reach'd the Mountain Top, came back with an Account that the Enemies had possess'd themselves of all the Valley, barring up the Passage to the Road whither they were directing their Course with a most formidable Multitude. It was the same Body of Mexicans which they had left at the first Temple, re-inforc'd with new Troops and other Commanders. They discover'd in the Morning, as may be presum'd by the succeeding Circumstances, the unseasonable Retreat of the Spaniards; and notwithstanding they did not doubt but that they should be able to follow the Pursuit, yet they fear'd, very considerably, by the Experience of that Night, that it would not be possible to destroy them before they reach'd the Tlascalan Territories, if they went on securing the advantageous Posts of the Mountains: For which Reason they sent Dispatches to Mexico for Re-inforcement, that an Affair of so much Importance might not miscarry for want of necessary Force, which Proposal was so well receiv'd in the City, that all the Nobility instantly set out, follow'd by the rest of the Troops which they had assembled, to join the Army; and in the small Space of Three or Four Days they divided themselves by different Roads, marching under Shelter of the Mountains with such Expedition, that they got thither before the Spaniards, and fill'd the whole Valley of Otumba, which was a very spacious Plain, where they might, undiscover'd, wait for the Spaniards their Enemies, and attack them without embarrassing each other for want of Room. Notably well consider'd, and the Resolution as well executed; both which might have been envy'd in Leaders of greater Experience, and People better disciplin'd and less barbarous.

Upon the first Intelligence it was not suspected that they were the Mexicans; but on the contrary, they believ'd, as they were going up the Hill, that the dispers'd Troops, with their accustom'd Levity and Impotence, had united themselves in order to defend some Pass; but upon gaining the Summit, they discover'd a very powerful Army, and in much better Order than any they had seen before, whose Front took up the whole Breadth of the Valley, whose Depth the Eye could not reach, and which was the last Effort of the Mexican Power, compos'd of various Nations, as the Diversity and Distance of the several Colours and Standards denoted. The Captain-General of the Empire was distinguish'd in the Center of the Multitude, born up upon Men's Shoulders, in a Litter most sumptuously adorn'd, in such Manner, that being to be seen by all, and a Witness of every one's Behaviour, his Orders must be punctually executed. Upon his Chair, or Litter, stood erected the Royal Standard of Mexico, which was not intrusted to any other Hand but his, and could only be brought into the Field in Cases of the greatest Exigence and Importance. The Form of this Standard was a Net of Massy Gold, hanging on a Pike, and crown'd with a Plume of Feathers of various Colours, both which was a Sort of mysterious Superiority above the rest of Hieroglyphicks of the lesser Ensigns. The wavering and confus'd Motion of such different Arms and Feathers appear'd beautiful amidst the Horror of so many Objects of War and Destruction. The Spanish Army perceiving the fresh Danger for which they were to prepare their Minds and Arms, Cortez began to examine the Countenances of his People with that natural Alacrity which influenc'd their Hearts far better than Words; and finding them inspir'd, rather with a Martial and generous Resentment than with Fear and Consternation, "Our Case is now such, said he, that we must either die or conquer: The Cause of our God fight for us." Nor had he Time to say any more; for the Soldiers themselves interrupted him, crying out for the Word of Command, in order to engage, upon which he only stay'd to give them some few necessary Precautions, such as the present Occasion requir'd; and, as he was accus'tom'd, invoking St. James, and St. Peter, he advanc'd with his Front extended, and united the Body of the Army with the Wings of the Horse, who were appointed to defend the Flank, and secure the Rear. The Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows made their first Discharges so opportunely, that the Enemy had scarce Time to make Use of their missive Weapons. The Swords and Lances did still greater Dammage, the Horse taking Care, at the same Time, to break and put to flight those Troops which endeavour'd to pass beyond them in order to inclose their Army and attack their Rear. They gain'd some Ground by this first Charge. The Spaniards gave no Stroke without a Wound, nor any Wound which needed a second Blow. The Tlascalans threw themselves into the thickest of the Battle, with an insatiable Thirst after Mexican Blood; and all had such Command of their Passions, that they kill'd by Choice; first seeking out those who appear'd to be Leaders. But the Mexicans fought with great Obstinacy, advancing, tho' not with the best Order, yet with surprizing Resolution to supply the Places of those who fell; and the Spaniards were fatigu'd with the Slaughter of them, for the Battle was continually renewing with fresh Men. Their whole Army seem'd to give Way whenever the Cavalry charg'd them, or the Fire-Arms advanc'd; but they return'd with new Vigour to recover their lost Ground, the Multitude moving from Place to Place with such Celerity, that the whole Field appear'd like a stormy Sea of Men; the perpetual Flux and Reflux seeming to authorize that Simile.

Cortez fought on Horseback, continually relieving, with his Troop, where the greatest Strefs lay, carrying Death and Terror upon the Point of his Lance, wheresoever he came. But the obstinate Resistance of the Indians gave him no small Concern; for it was not possibly to be hop'd, but that the Strength of his Men must abate with such unintermitting Action; and reflecting upon the Measures he might take to advantage himself, or to make his Way to the Road, he was relieved in this Perplexity by one of those Observations which he was accusom'd to lay up in his Mind to make Use of upon Occasion. He remember'd to have heard among the Mexicans, that the whole Fortune of their Battles depended upon the Standard Royal, the gaining or losing of which decided the Fortune of the Day on either Side: And being not insensible into what Disorder and Confusion the Enemy was always put by the Charge of the Cavalry; he took a Resolution to make an extraordinary Effort for the gaining of the Imperial Standard, which he could very well distinguish. To this Effect he call'd for the Captains Gonzalo de Sandoval, Pedro de Alvarado, Christoval de Olid, and Alonzo Davila, to follow and secure his Rear, together with the rest of the Horse which generally attended him. Having encourag'd them with a short Harangue, and given the necessary Instructions how they were to proceed, he advanc'd with little more than half Speed, and attack'd on that Part which appear'd weakest, and least distant from the Center. The Indians gave back, dreading, as they always did, the Shock of the Cavalry; and before they could recover themselves to make a second Motion, the Spaniards threw themselves upon the confus'd and disorder'd Multitude with such Vigour, and in such good Order, that breaking and treading under Foot whole Battalions, they, without much Opposition, arriv'd at the Place where the Imperial Standard was defended by the Band of Nobles who were appointed for its Guard: And while the Captains were clearing themselves of that numerous Attendance, Cortez spurr'd on his Horse, and clos'd with the Captain-General of the Mexicans, who, at the first Stroke of his Lance, fell dangerously wounded, on the other Side of his Litter: He was soon forsaken by his Guard, and left almost alone, when Juan de Salamanca, a private Gentleman, leap'd from his Horse, put an End to the little Life he had left, and seizing the Standard, gave it into the Hands of Cortez. This Juan de Salamanca was a Person of some Distinction in the Army, and for having, upon that Occasion, done his General such a Picce of Service, the Emperor conferr'd some Favours upon him, giving him for the Crest, or Device, of his Arms the Plume of Feathers which crown'd the Mexican Standard.

Scarce did these Barbarians behold the Imperial Standard in the Power of the Spaniards, when they struck all the rest of their Colours: And throwing down their Arms, they betook themselves to a precipitate Flight, seeking for Shelter in the adjacent Woods and Fields of Maiz. The neighbouring Mountains were all cover'd with the terrify'd Remnants of the Mexican Army; and in a few Moments the Field of Battle remain'd to the victorious Spaniards, who pursu'd their Victory with all the Rigour of War, and made a most terrible Destruction of the Fugitives. It was absolutely necessary to ruin and disperse them, that they might not return to unite again: Anger and Resentment urg'd what Conveniency dictated. On our Side some were wounded, of which Number Two or Three Spaniards died at Tlascala; and Cortez himself receiv'd a Blow on his Head with a Stone, so violent that it batter'd his Head-piece, and made a small Fraction in his Skull; but the Hurt done by the Contusion was still greater. The Spoil was given to the Soldiers, which was very considerable; for the Mexicans came provided with costly Jewels and Ornaments as to an assur'd Triumph. The History says, that Twenty Thousand Indians lost their Lives in this Battle. Matters, upon such Occasions, are generally stretch'd; but whoever will believe that the routed Army consisted of above Two Hundred Thousand Men, will find less Improbability in the Greatness of the former Number. All Writers, as well Strangers as those of our own Nation, relate this Victory as one of the greatest that was obtain'd in the Two America's. And if it were certain, that Santiago, or

St. James the Apostle, fought visibly for his Spaniard, as some Prisoners affirm'd, the Slaughter of those People would appear more credible, or less surprizing, although, in Truth, it was not necessary to have Recourse to a visible Miracle, where there appear'd so many Evidences of the immediate Hand of God upon several Occasions; to whose Power the Successes of Armies ought ever to be attributed, with especial Consideration, since He has proclaim'd himself to be the Lord of Hosts; that Mortals may be sensible that it behoves them to hope for Victory at his Divine Hands, and to acknowledge it to be only at his Heavenly Disposal, without making any Account of their own Strength, tho' ever so great: For sometimes he chastises Injuries by assisting the less powerful; neither should any offer to confide in the Goodness of their Cause; for at other Times he corrects those whom he most favours, giving the Charge of the Stroke to an impious and unworthy Hand.

MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN.

C H A P. I.

The Army marches into the Province of Tlascalala, and quarters in Gualipar; the Caziques and Senators come to visit Cortez: they celebrate his Entry into their City with publick Rejoycings; and Cortez, by fresh Experience, finds he had secured the Affections of those People.

CORTEZ gave Orders for assembling his Troops, which were scattered up and down for the sake of pillaging. The Soldiers took their Posts, and pursued their March, not without suspicion of the Enemy's rallying, for they observed several Bodies of Men on the tops of the Mountains: But it being impossible that day to get clear of the Mexican Confines, and withal necessary to take care of the Wounded, they possessed themselves of some Houses, where they passed the Night, as in a Place of no great Security, and the next Day they found the Roads free from Enemies, the neighbouring Plains securing them from all danger of Ambuscades: However they still perceived signs of their being in an Enemy's Country, by the Cries and distant Menaces of the Mexicans, who after that manner took leave of those they could not stop.

A little after, they discovered and entered the Bounds of Tlascala, known to this day by some Remains of that famous Wall, which was built by the ancient Inhabitants to defend the Frontiers of their Country, joining together the Hills that bordered it in all those Places which Nature had not made inaccessible. The whole Army express'd their Joy by Acclamations, upon their entering the Territories of this Republick. The Tlascalans threw themselves upon their Faces to kiss the Earth, like disconsolate Children returned to the Lap of their Mother. The Spaniards made their thankful Acknowledgments to Heaven for this Repose after all their Fatigues, and they all lay down near a Fountain, whose Water at that time gained the Reputation of being delicate and wholesome, from the Praises the Spaniards gave it, which have been particularly mentioned by several Writers; whether it were that their violent Thirst made it seem the more refreshing, or that they could now allay it in Peace and Security.

IN this place Hernan Cortez made a short Discourse, telling them of what Importance it was to preserve the Friendship of the Tlascalans, by their Kindness and Civility; and that when they came into the City, they should look upon the giving offence to any one Inhabitant, as a Matter that might endanger their common Safety: he afterwards resolved to stop by the way to gain Intelligence, and dispose Matters for his Entry with the knowledge and permission of the Senate; and accordingly at Noon he halted at Gualipar, a considerable Town in those days. The Inhabitants met them at some distance, to show their Good-will, offering their Houses, and whatever else they had occasion for, with so much Respect and Submission, that the most Jealous acknowledged there could be no room to suspect a People of Artifice, who gave such Proofs of their Sincerity. Cortez accepted the Invitation, and quartered his Soldiers with all the caution that was necessary, to be perfectly secure.

IMMEDIATELY after which, he deliberated about sending two Tlascalans with an Account to the Senate of his Retreat and Success: But before he could do this, Fame carry'd the News of his Victory; and almost at the same time came his great Friend Magiscatzin, the blind Xicotencal, with his Son and others, to visit him on the part of the Republick. Magiscatzin advanced before the rest, casting himself into his Arms, and then stepping back, that he might behold and admire him, as one that scarce believed he had the Happiness to see him alive. The blind Xicotencal, guided by the Sound, made his way with his Hands, shewing his Affection after a more tender manner, desirous to inform himself by the Touch, and showing his Satisfaction by a Flood of Tears, the only way by which his Eyes could testify his Joy. The rest came after, whilst the first went to congratulate the Captains and Soldiers of their acquaintance. On this occasion, Xicotencal the Younger distinguished himself, by appearing somewhat dissatisfy'd, and reserved in his Compliments; and altho' it was attributed at that time to the Ruggedness of a military Man, it soon appeared that he preserved in his Mind the Distrust of a reconciled Friend, and the ungrateful Remembrance of having been conquered. Hernan Cortez went aside with the Senators, and found in their Conversation and Behaviour all the Delicacy of Manners, which could have been expected from a People of the greatest Politeness. They informed him, that they had already got together their Troops to succour him against the common Enemy, and were ready to march with Thirty Thousand Men to secure his Retreat. They expressed a great Concern for his Wounds, looking on them as so many Sacrileges committed in that seditious War. They regretted the Death of the Spaniards, and particularly of Juan Velasquez de Leon, whom they loved, as being sensible of his good Qualities. They condemned the barbarous Conspiracy of the Mexicans; and, lastly, offered to assist him in his Revenge with all their Forces, and those of their Allies: adding, That they were now not only Friends of the Spaniards, but likewise Vassals of their King, and so were doubly obliged to obey his Minister's Orders, and die by his side. And after this manner they concluded their Discourse, nicely distinguishing betwixt the two Obligations of Friendship and Vassalage, and declaring themselves bound by Loyalty, to what they were before engaged by by Inclination. Cortez made great Acknowledgments for their Offers; and by all that could be gathered from their Discourse, they not only retained their Good-will for the Spaniards, but had improv'd it into an Esteem: For the Loss they sustained at their marching out of Mexico, was looked on as an Accident of War, and was wholly effaced by the Victory of Otumba, which was admired in Tlascala as a Prodigy of Valour, and the chief Glory of the Retreat. They propos'd, that he should immediately go to the City, where his Quarters were provided; nevertheless they readily consented to allow the Spaniards some time to refresh themselves, because they were desirous to prepare for his Entry, which they determin'd to honour with publick Solemnity, and to celebrate after the same manner they did the Triumphs of their own Generals.

THE Army continued three Days in Gualipar, being liberally supply'd with every thing that was necessary, at the Charge of the Republick. After which, the Wounded being somewhat recovered, Cortez gave notice to the City, and prepared to march. The Spaniards put on all their Finery for that Day, adorning themselves with the Jewels and Plumes of the vanquish'd Mexicans; an outward Show which declared the Importance of the Victory: For, on some Occasions, Ostentation gives credit to a Cause, and Modesty is unseasonable. The Caziques and Ministers of State, in Form of a Senate, clad in their Richest Robes, and accompanied by a numerous Attendance of their Relations, came out to receive the Army. The Roads were covered with People, the Air was filled with Acclamations of popular Applause, and nothing was heard but the Praises of the Victors, and Reproaches upon the Mexicans. At their entrance into the City, they were entertained with the Sounds of Kettle-Drums, Flutes, and Winding-Horns, distributed into different Choirs, which alternately succeeded each other, making a pacifick Musick with their warlike Instruments. The Troops being conveniently quartered, Cortez consented, after much resistance, to lodge with Magiscatzin; giving way to his earnest Entreaties, that he might not disoblige him. And for the same Reason, Pedro de Alvarado went with old Xicotencal; but altho' the rest of the Caziques were desirous to entertain the other Captains, they courteously declin'd it, it being improper to leave the Main Guard without a sufficient Number of Officers. The Spaniards

Spaniards made their Entry into Tlascala in the Month of July, 1520. altho' in this point Writers are not entirely agreed: But I shall reserve my Discussions for Matters of more consequence, and where a small Variation is of great Importance.

THE same Evening they began their Festival of the Triumph, which continued for some Days, the Indians all employing their utmost Address to divert their Guests, and celebrate their Victory, without excepting the Nobles, or those who had lost Friends and Relations in the Engagement; whether it were that they desired to take part in the general Joy, or that it was not permitted in this warlike Nation to esteem the End of those unfortunate, who died in Battle. They gave Challenges, and Rewards were assign'd for the best Marksmen. They contended likewise in the Exercises of Leaping and Running; the Evenings were spent in the Diversion of Rope-Dancing; an Exercise they were very fond of, and where the Mind of the Spectator is divided betwixt Fear and Pleasure. But the Show always ended with Balls and certain Dances in Masquerade; the Diversion of the Multitude, whose disorderly, noisy Mirth finish'd the Demonstrations of their Applause.

THE Sincerity and good Correspondence of these People answered all the Hopes of Cortez. The Nobles were friendly and respectful, and the common People passionately fond, and submissively obedient. Cortez express'd a grateful Sense of their Affection for him, commended their Diversions, caressing some, and honouring others with equal Confidence and Satisfaction. The Captains assisted him in the gaining of Friends by their Courtesy and Presents; and even the meanest Soldiers endeavoured to make themselves lov'd, by sharing generously with the Tlascalans the Jewels and Spoils they had brought from the Battle. But in the Spring-time (as I may say) of this Felicity, an Accident happened which gave a damp to all their Joy. For the Wound which Cortez had receiv'd in his Head, and which was ill cured, appeared afresh with bad Symptoms; and the over-much Exercise he had used on these Days of Rejoicing, occasion'd an Inflammation in his Brain, with a strong Fever, which reduced him to such a Condition, that his Life was thought to be in danger. The Spaniards looked on this unhappy Accident, as what threatned no less than the Loss of their Lives and Fortunes; but the Concern of the Indians was more remarkable, as being less expected; for they no sooner heard of his Illness, but laying aside all their Mirth, they fell into the other Extreme of an intolerable Grief.

THE Nobles, full of Anxiety and Sorrow, were continually enquiring after the Teule, a Name which we have before observed they gave to their Demigods, or almost Deities. The common People came in Troops to bewail his Loss, so that the Spaniards were obliged to deceive them with the hopes of his mending, in order to keep them at a distance, that they might not disturb Cortez with their Cries and Lamentations. The Senate sent for all the best Physicians of their Country, whose Skill consisted in the Knowledge and Choice of Medicinal Herbs, which they apply'd with a wonderful Discernment of their Virtues and Effects, varying the Medicine according to the Condition and different Turns of the Distemper; and to them he was entirely beholden for his Cure: For making use at first of wholesome cooling Simples, to correct the Inflammation, and mitigate the Pain, which occasioned the Fever, they proceeded, by degrees, to apply others proper to ripen and heal the Wound, with so much Skill and good Fortune, that, in a little time, they restored him to his perfect Health.

LET the rational Physician laugh at Empiricks; 'tis certain, however, that the first Knowledge of Physick was from Experience: and in a Country entirely unacquainted with Natural Philosophy, which searches out Causes by Effects, it was no small matter to find so great a Progress made in the Knowledge of Nature. The News of his Recovery was celebrated with fresh Rejoicings, and Hernan Cortez had further Experience of the Affections of the Tlascalans: And his Head being now at liberty for Thought, he resum'd his high Designs, forming new Plans to avoid the Inconveniences, and remove the Difficulties which attended his Undertaking; an inward War of Objections and Solutions, the end of which was to reconcile Prudence with Magnanimity.

C H A P. II.

An Account comes that the Province of Tepeaca had taken up Arms. Embassadors arrive at Tlascalla from Mexico. A Conspiracy, carried on by Xicotencal the Younger, against the Spaniards, is discovered.

HERNAN CORTEZ was in pain to know the Condition of Affairs at Vera Cruz, the Preservation of that Place being the principal Basis and Foundation of his new Projects: He therefore wrote to Rodrigo Rangel, whom he had appointed Lieutenant in that Government, under Gonzalo de Sandoval; and quickly received an Answer by the extraordinary Diligence of the Couriers of that Country, importing, That nothing new had happened either in the Garrison, or on the Coast, to give him any Concern; That Narvaez and Salvatierra were in safe Custody; and That the Soldiers were pleased, and kindly treated: the Zempoalans, Totonagues, and other Confederate Nations, adhering with great Fidelity and Friendship to the Terms of their Alliance.

BUT at the same time he acquainted him, that the Corporal and eight Soldiers, who went to Tlascala for the Gold belonging to the Garrison, were not returned; and that if the Report, current among the Indians, was true, of their having been murdered in the Province of Tepeaca, it was to be feared, that the wounded Soldiers of Narvaez, who remained behind in Zempoala, had met with the same Fate; for as fast as they recovered, they marched away in little Troops, being extremely desirous to arrive at Mexico, which they considered as the Centre of all their Wealth and Prosperity. This Misfortune much afflicted Cortez, because he had reckon'd upon the Reinforcement of those Soldiers, whose Number, according to Antonio de Herrera, amounted to above fifty; and allowing it less, as Bernal Diaz del Castillo writes, yet was the Loss very great upon this Occasion, and in a Country where one Spaniard was of more Value than a thousand Indians. Upon this, Cortez enquir'd among his Tlascalan Friends, who confirm'd the Report of Rangel; and said, They had conceal'd it from him, lest such bad News might have been a Hindrance to his Recovery.

IT is most certain; that the eight Soldiers who went from Vera Cruz, arriv'd at Tlascala, and left again that Place, in order to return with their Share of the Gold, at a time when they began to suspect the Fidelity of the Province of Tepeaca, which, with several others, had submitted in the first March to Mexico; and that both the one and the other Party had been massacred by the People of that Province, appear'd afterwards very evidently, by their calling in the Mexican Troops to support their Treason: which made it absolutely necessary to subdue those Rebels, and drive the Enemy to a greater distance. Nor did this Design admit of any Delay, because the Situation of that Province cut off the Communication between Mexico and Vera Cruz; and it was necessary to open that Passage, before they could undertake any thing of Importance: Nevertheless Hernan Cortez deferr'd to ask of the Republick the Assistance of their Forces; because he was informed at the same time, that the Tepeacans had some days before made an Inroad into the Country of Tlascala, plundering, and destroying some Settlements on the Frontiers; and made no question but the Tlascalans would apply themselves to him, as it shortly after happen'd: For the Senate came to a Resolution to chastise the Insolence of that Nation, and to endeavour interesting the Spaniards in the War, as equally exasperated and injur'd by the Death of their Companions. The Affair took the Turn that Cortez wish'd; and he so manag'd Matters as to grant, what he was under a necessity of asking.

THERE happen'd afterwards another Accident, which gave the Spaniards fresh Disquiet: For there came Advice from Gualipar, that three or four Embassadors sent by the New Emperor of Mexico to the Republick of Tlascala were arriv'd on the Frontiers, where they stay'd, expecting Leave to proceed to the City. The Tlascalans deliberated upon the Matter with some Admiration, and without being ignorant that the Negotiations of a powerful Enemy, were to be regarded as disguis'd Menaces: But tho' they verily believ'd the Embassy was

was design'd against the Spaniards, and were fully resolv'd, not to forsake the Defence of their Friends on any account, they decreed to admit the Embassadors; that at least they might have the Advantage arising from this Acknowledgment of their Equality: a Condescension very unusual, and little agreeing with the Pride of the Mexican Princes; and some say, it was insert'd in the Decree, provided it be with the Approbation of Cortez; for the Embassadors were conducted publickly to their Audience: And throughout this whole Transaction, there was not the least Pretence to suspect the Sincerity of the Tlascalans.

THEY made their Entry with great Solemnity and Splendor, the Tamenes in good Order went at the Head of the Procession, with the Presents, consisting of some Pieces of Gold and Silver, fine Cotton Cloaths, Plumes, and other Curiosities, with several Loads of Salt, a Merchandize very much priz'd and coveted in those Parts. The Embassadors carry'd the Ensigns of Peace in their hands, and were richly adorn'd with Jewels, and accompany'd by a numerous Train of Friends and Servants; wherein they imagin'd that they display'd the Grandeur of their Prince: And sometimes indeed, a vain Ostentation of Power is of use in an Embassy; and by prepossessing the Eye, imposes on the Ear. The Senate receiv'd them at their Tribunal, and were neither deficient, nor excessive in point of Ceremony; being jealous of the Rights belonging to their Sovereignty, and but ill concealing their Disgust, under the appearance of Civility.

AFTER naming the Emperor of Mexico with profound Submission, the Embassadors made an Offer of Peace, and perpetual Alliance between the two Nations, Freedom of Commerce, and Communication of Interests, on condition they would immediately make War upon the Spaniards; and, taking Advantage of their Security, destroy them at once: But they could not proceed in their Discourse, being interrupted by a confus'd Rumour, occasion'd by the Senate's disapproving what they said; and by Marks of a Displeasure, which they were not able to conceal, and which broke out into disorderly and inconsiderate Expressions. But one of the antient Senators represented to them the Indecency of this Procedure, contrary to Custom and Reason; and obtain'd, that the Embassadors should retire to their Lodging, and there expect the Resolution of the Republick:

publick: Which being done, they conferr'd among themselves, and without staying to put it to the Vote, they all agreed in what some had already declar'd thro' Inadvertency, though they soften'd the Expressions of their Refusal, and Anger gave way to Civility. After their first Heat was over, they then concluded to send three or four Deputies with the Senate's Answer to the Embassadors; which contain'd in substance, That the Republick would admit the Peace with all possible Respect, provided the Conditions were reasonable, and consistent with the Interest and Honour of both Nations: But that the Tlascalans were religious Observers of the Laws of Hospitality, and were not us'd to betray those who confided in them; that they valu'd themselves upon accounting that impossible which was unlawful; and for diving into the Truth of things, not understanding the use of false Pretences, or how to palliate Treason by giving it some other Name. But the Embassadors did not stay long enough to receive this Answer; for, finding their Proposition so ill receiv'd, they immediately made off; and the Haste and Fear wherewith they retir'd, were equal to the Gravity that distinguish'd their Entry: And it was not thought proper to stop them, for it being reported in Tlascala, that they came to solicit a War against the Spaniards, there was Reason to apprehend some popular Insurrection, which might break thro' the Privileges of Embassadors, and the Respect due to the Senate.

THOUGH this Design of the Mexicans was defeated, to the great Satisfaction of the Spaniards, it was attended with an Inconveniency, which created a farther Uneasiness: For Xicotencal the younger conceal'd his Opinion in the Senate, voting with the rest, either because he was afraid of the Displeasure of some of his Friends, or out of Respect to his Father; nevertheless this Embassy gave him a handle, to scatter among his Friends and Followers, the Poison which abounded in his Heart, on the Subject of this Peace propos'd by the Mexicans; not that it was his Inclination, or Interest, but to cover the Scandal of his Envy and evil Designs with a specious Pretence. The Mexican Emperor, said he, whose formidable Power obliges us always to be in Arms, engag'd in the perpetual Misfortune of a defensive War, offers us his Friendship, without any other Condition than the Death of the Spaniards; in which he only proposes, what we ought to execute ourselves for our own Interest and Preservation: For tho' we should forgive these Strangers their Intention to destroy our Religion, can it be deny'd, that they endeavour to change our very Laws and Form of Government, by converting into a Monarchy this venerable Republick of the Tlascalans; and reducing us under the detestable Dominion of an Emperor; a Yoke so heavy and oppressive, that it grieves us to see it, even upon the Necks of our Enemies? He wanted no Eloquence to set off his Opinion, nor Resolution to execute his Designs: And though some of his Friends endeavour'd to dissuade him from entertaining such Thoughts; yet as he had the Reputation of a good Soldier, it was very much to be fear'd, that he wou'd engage a formidable Party in a Country where Courage was esteem'd a Mark of Reason: But their Love of the Spaniards was so fixed in their Hearts that he gain'd but few, and the Matter was discover'd to the Magistrates. It was debated in the Senate with all the Seriousness that an Affair of so much Importance requir'd; and Xicotencal the Father was summon'd to the Conference, nor did the Delinquent's near Relation to him make them in the least suspect his Constancy, or his Justice.

THEY all condemn'd him as a seditious Person, who endeavour'd to disturb the publick Peace, disgrace the Resolutions of the Senate, and destroy the Credit of his Nation. Some were inclin'd to punish his Crime with Death; and his Father was one of those who most strenuously promoted that Sentence, condemning the Treason of his Son, like an unbiass'd Judge, and true Father of his Country.

THE honourable Constancy of this blind Old Man so wrought on the Minds of the Senators, that out of regard to him, they mitigated the Rigour of the Sentence, and concluded on a milder Punishment; for they order'd him to be brought Prisoner to the Senate, and after reprimanding his Insolence with the utmost Severity, they took from him the General's Staff, and depriv'd him of his Command in the Army, and all Privileges belonging to it, by the Ceremony of flinging him down the Stairs of the Tribunal: the Ignominy of this Degradation oblig'd him, in few days, to apply himself with all the Demonstrations of a true Reconciliation to Cortez, at whose Intercession he was restor'd to his Honours, and the Favour of his Father; tho' after some little time, the Root of his wicked Intentions began began to sprout out a second time in fresh Disorders, which cost him his Life; as we shall see in the proper Place. Each of these Accidents might have produc'd fatal Consequences, but the Perfidy of Xicotencal did not come to the knowledge of Cortez, till the bad Effects of it were prevented, and the Crime punish'd; and the ill Success of the Mexican Embassadors gave Satisfaction to the most distrustful: Both Adventures affording new Proofs of the Fidelity of the Tlascalans; which in a People so little civiliz'd, and when the Spaniards were at that distance from all human Means to support themselves, may pass for a Miracle; at least it was then look'd upon as an Effect which could not be accounted for by inferior Causes.

C H A P. III.

Cortez marches into the Province of Tepeaca, where he defeats the Rebels; who, supported by the Mexicans, offer'd Battle to the Spaniards: He, afterwards, takes their City, which he fortifies, and calls by the Name of Segura de la Frontera.

WHILST young Xicotencal was with great Satisfaction assembling the Troops of the Republick, for the War of Tepeaca, and endeavouring by his extraordinary Diligence, to blot out the Remembrance of his Treachery, Cortez was employ'd in convincing his own People, of the Necessity they lay under of chastizing the Indians of Tepeaca; representing to them, the Rebellion of those Traytors, and the Death of so many Spaniards; with what other Motives could incite them to Compassion and Revenge. But they did not all agree in the Necessity of this Expedition, and more especially, the Troops of Narbaez very strenuously oppos'd it: The remembrance of their past Fatigues made them ardently desire Repose, and fight after their Possessions in the Isle of Cuba, exclaiming against the War as unprofitable, and insisting upon the Return of the Army to Vera Cruz, in order to solicit Reinforcements from Santo Domingo and Jamaica, and resume their Enterprize with less Danger; not that they had any such Design in reality, but desired only to get nearer to the Sea, where they imagin'd their Clamours and Disobedience would be better supported; and they carried their Boldness so far, as to give the General a Protestation in form, containing Motives rather insolent than substantial, and where the Pretence of the Publick Good, and the Service of the King, serv'd as a Cover to their Fear and Baseness.
and

CORTEZ was the more sensibly concerned at their Insolence, as happening at a time when his Enemies at Tepeaca had possessed themselves of the Road to Vera Cruz, which it was impossible to pass, without making that War, which the Mutineers refused. He ordered them to be assembled, and stood in need of all his Moderation, to keep within Bounds upon this Occasion. It is difficult for a Man of a generous Spirit to dissemble a personal Injury; but where Reason itself is outraged by Caprice or Brutality, it is the utmost Tryal of Patience in a Man of Sense.

HE thanked them, as well as he could, for the Care they took of the Preservation of the Army, and without losing time with laying before them the Reasons which obliged them not to fail in their Engagements to the Tlascalans, hazarding the Loss of their Friendship, and leaving the Treason of the Tepeacans unpunished, he made use of Motives, proportioned to the Capacities of Men, who were not to be affected by those which were more convincing; and only told them, That as the Enemies had seized the Passes of the Mountains, they could not avoid engaging with them before they recovered the Plain: That to go alone upon this Expedition, would be the Loss of the Army, or at least would hazard it without any manner of Reason: That there was no demanding Succour from the Tlascalans, nor would they give any to make good a Retreat undertaken contrary to their Inclination; but promising them, upon his Word of Honour, that after the rebellious Province was subdued, and the Passage of the Road open (in order to which, the Republick would assist with all their Forces) all, who were not willing to follow his Fortune, should have free liberty to depart. Thus he induced them to serve in this War, by letting them know they were not in a Condition to form any other Designs: Upon this he immediately gave Orders for the Expedition of Tepeaca, and for the present quieted the Mutineers.

CORTÉZ drew out eight Thousand choice Tlascalans, divided into Troops according to their Custom, commanded by Captains, of whose Valour he had made proof in his Engagements with the Mexicans, and left to his new Friend Xicotencal the Care of bringing up the rest of the Tlascalan Forces. After having drawn up his Men, he number'd four hundred and twenty Spaniards, including the Officers, and sixteen Horse. The Foot, for the most part, were armed with Pikes, Swords, and Targets, some Cross-Bows, and a few Fire-Arms; for the want of Powder obliged them to leave the rest with Magisoatzin. The Army marched with the Acclamations of the People, the Tlascalan Soldiers showed a Cheerfulness which presaged Victory, and were all inspir'd with the Desire of Revenge. They halted that Day in a Village of the Enemy's, three Leagues from Tlascala, and five from Tepeaca, the capital Town, which gave the Name to the Province. On the first sight of the Army the Inhabitants of the Village fled, and the advanced Guard could only take six or seven Peasants, who met with good Treatment that Night among the Spaniards, much against the Will of the Tlascalans, who would have given them a different Entertainment. In the Morning the General ordered them to be brought before him, and encouraging them by some Presents, set them at liberty, ordering them, for the Good of their Country, to acquaint the Caziques and principal Men of Tepeaca, That he was come with an Army to revenge the Deaths of those Spaniards, whom they had so treacherously killed; as likewise their Revolt, contrary to the Obedience they had sworn to the King: but that, nevertheless, if they would take up Arms against the Mexicans, in which they should be assisted both by the Spaniards and Tlascalans, he would grant a general Pardon, and receive them into his Friendship, freeing them from the Misfortunes of a War which justly threaten'd them, and in which he should be obliged to treat them with the utmost Rigour.

THE Indians departed with this Message, and some friendly Assurances which Marina and Aguilar gave them, encouraging them to return without any Fear, tho' the Proposals of Peace should be rejected; and accordingly they return'd the next day accompanied by two Mexicans, who came in the nature of Spies, lest the Tepeacans should make any Alteration in the Expressions of their refusal, which was rude and insolent, viz. That they did not desire Peace, and would not long delay to take the Field in search of their Enemies, whom they would carry bound to the Altars of their Gods. To which they added other injurious Terms and Threats, as People who depended upon the Numbers of their Troops. But Cortez not satisfied with this Answer, made them a second Offer for his greater Justification; wherein he protested, That if they did not accept the Conditions he proposed, he would destroy them with Fire and Sword as Traitors to his King; and that all who surviv'd, should be Slaves to the Conquerors. This the Interpreters notified to the Envoys, and also gave them a Copy of the same in Writing; not that they could read it, but that so severe a Message committed to Paper, might redouble their Fear: for as they greatly wonder'd at the Mystery of writing, and thought it altogether supernatural for the Spaniards to talk and understand each other at a distance, Cortez had a mind to strike the Eye with that which so much surpriz'd them, and to give them Terror by the way of Wonder. But this Artifice serv'd to little purpose; for the second Answer was more insolent than the first, and at the same time came an Account that the Enemy's Army was marching with great diligence. Hernan Cortez resolv'd to meet them, and so soon as he had put his Men in order, began his March without staying either to instruct or animate them; for the Spaniards were well acquainted with the Indian manner of Fighting, and the Tlascalans were so desirous to engage, that the greatest difficulty was to hinder them from falling on.

THE Enemy lay in Ambush in some Fields of Maiz, which grows very thick in that fertile Country, and might have turn'd to their Advantage, had they used more Precaution; but their own natural Impatience discover'd them at a distance, and the Vant-Guard sent the General an Account of it so seasonably, that they had time to prepare, and drew near the Ambuscade in good Order, tho' tho' seemingly after a careless manner. Cortez found it necessary to extend his Batallions, in order to secure his Rear, after which he began the Engagement; and the Mexicans, who were plac'd in the Van, found themselves attack'd on all Sides just as they were preparing to fall on their Adversary's Rear. The very first Charge put them into Confusion, and all who could not save themselves by Flight, were cut to pieces. Cortez continu'd advancing in good Order, and as the Arrows and missive Weapons of the Indians lost their Force among the Canes of Maiz, the Spaniards made a terrible carnage with their Swords and Pikes. The Enemies rallied, and stood a second Attack with the utmost Obstinacy; notwithstanding which, Victory quickly declar'd for the Spaniards, for the Mexicans gave way, and quitted not only the Field, but the whole Country, seeking Refuge among some others of their Confederates; the Tepeacans follow'd their Example retiring in the same disorder, and were so intimidated, that the very same Night they sent some Deputies, and offer'd to surrender their City, begging Quarter, and abandoning themselves to the Discretion and Clemency of the Conqueror.

IN this Engagement the Enemy lost the greatest part of their Troops, abundance were taken Prisoners, and the Booty was very considerable. The Tlascalans behav'd themselves valiantly, and what was more extraordinary, were so observant of Orders, and so much better disciplin'd than formerly, that they only lost two or three Men. The Spaniards lost one Horse, and were some of them wounded, but so slightly, that they did not quit their Post: The day following, Cortez march'd into the City, and both the Civil and Military Officers, with all the common People, presented themselves before him without Arms, appearing like Criminals, and acknowledging their Guilt both by their Looks and Silence.

WHEN they drew near, they humbled themselves before him with their Faces to the very Ground, and Cortez was oblig'd to encourage them before they had the Boldness to lift up their Eyes. He order'd his Interpreters to proclaim King Charles with a loud Voice, and a general Pardon in his Name; which was no sooner done, than the Indians laid aside their Fear, and both by Words and Actions declar'd their Joy. The Tlascalans were order'd to quarter without the Town, as having been more ac-

custom'd to treat their Enemies ill than to obey Orders. Hernan Cortez and the Spaniards lodg'd in the City with all the Caution that was necessary, till they were fully convinc'd of the Sincerity of the Indians; for in reality the Mexicans had push'd them on to murder the Spaniards, and afterwards to take up Arms.

THE People of Tepeaca were now so mortified for having put themselves a second time under the intolerable Yoak of the Mexicans, who tho' they came as Friends, usurp'd a Power over their Estates, their Honours, and their very Lives, that they requested Cortez to take their City under his Protection; of which Opportunity he made use, to build a Fortress in the place, in order to keep them in Obedience; but his chief View was to secure the Passage to Vera Cruz, for which this place lay very convenient, and being naturally strong, was easily made defensible by Art. They drew a Trench round the City, which they palisadoed, inclosing those parts of the Hill where it was of easiest access, and in the highest part they rais'd a Work of some Strength like a Castle, which was esteem'd a sufficient Security against any accident that could happen in the Wars of that Country. The Work was so vigorously ply'd by the Inhabitants and their Neighbours, that they put it in a condition of Defence in few days. Cortez left there a Garrison of some Spanish Soldiers, calling it Segura de la Frontera; and this was the second Settlement of the Spaniards in the Mexican Empire.

BUT first, that they might be the less embarass'd in this Work, they sent all their Prisoners, under a strong Guard to Tlascala, to be sold for Slaves; a piece of Inhumanity, which was begun in the Islands, to strike a Terror into the rebel Indians. We do not mention this, as if its having been practis'd before were any Justification of it; on the contrary, we think him who imitates a bad Action, as blameable as the Man who first set the Example.

BUT it was not long before the Emperor put a stop to this Abuse, with a severe Reprimand, notwithstanding it was represented to him in the most favourable Light, and supported by all the Arguments that could possibly be urg'd, to prove Slavery, among Christians, lawful. It was a Point which occasion'd long Disputes, but this truly religious and compassionate Prince leaving Controversies to Divines, ordered the Indians to be set at liberty whenever the Law of Arms would permit it ; that in the mean time, they should be treated as Prisoners of War, and not as Slaves. A Resolution worthy of a great King, wherein he equally display'd his Prudence and his Piety ; for as it would not have consisted with good Politicks to lessen the Number of his Subjects by augmenting that of his Slaves, so neither would it become the Catholick Religion, by permitting the use of Chains and Whips, to discredit a Cause so strongly supported by Reason.

C H A P. IV.

Hernan Cortez sends several Captains to reduce some rebellious Towns, and goes himself to Guacachula against an Army of Mexicans drawn together to defend their Frontiers.

THE Spaniards had not long taken up their Quarters in Tepeaca, when Xicotencal arriv'd with the rest of his Troops, which, as some say, increas'd the Auxiliary Army of the Tlascalans to fifty thousand Men. It was necessary, in order to quiet the Minds of the Tepeacans, who were jealous of such a Neighbourhood, to give the Troops employment ; and Hernan Cortez, knowing that three or four Places of that Province, supported by the Mexicans, held out against him, sent several Captains, attended each of them by twenty or thirty Spaniards, and a considerable Body of Tlascalans, with Orders to endeavour the Reduction of the Rebels by gentle Means, and if these prov'd ineffectual, to chastise their Obstinacy. They met with resistance from all, and were oblig'd to make use of Force, but compass'd their Design without the loss of a Man, and the Captains return'd victorious, having subjected the rebel Towns, and overthrown the Mexicans, who being broken and terrified, fled to the other side of the Mountains. The Booty they gain'd in the chase of their Enemies, and in the seditious Towns, was very rich rich and abundant in all kinds. The Prisoners exceeded the Number of the Conquerors ; 'tis said they made above two thousand in the Town of Tecamachalco, where the Punishment fell heavy, that being the Place where the Spaniards were murdered; and now they were no longer called Prisoners, but Captives, till being expos'd to Sale, they lost that Name, and were deliver'd over into Personal Slavery, by receiving in their Faces the cruel Marks of a miserable Servitude.

ABOUT this time, according to the Accounts they had some little while after, died the Emperor who succeeded Moteczuma, who, as we have said, was called Quetlavaca, Lord of Iztapalapa ; upon which the Electors assembled, and conferr'd the Investiture of the Empire on Guatimozin, Nephew and Son-in-law to Moteczuma. He was a young Man about twenty five Years old, of so much Spirit and Vigilance, that contrary to the manner of his Predecessor, he entirely gave himself up to the Care of the Publick, being desirous immediately to shew the Advantages of Government when plac'd in proper Hands. He knew what the Spaniards were doing in the Province of Tepeaca, and foreseeing the Designs they might form when assisted by the united Forces of the Tlascalans and other neighbouring Provinces, he began to have those reasonable apprehensions which are necessary to prudent Measures.

HE made those Dispositions which greatly recommended the beginnings of his Reign ; he encourag'd the Soldiers with Rewards and Privileges, and gain'd the applause of the People, by freeing them from all Tributes so long as the War should last. He ingratiated himself with the Nobility, by admitting them into his Presence, and by moderating that excess of Adoration to which his Predecessors endeavour'd to raise the Respect of the People. He made Presents to the Caziques on the Frontiers, exhorting them to Fidelity, and the Defence of their Governments; and that they might not have reason to complain that he left the whole load of the War upon them, he sent an Army of thirty thousand Men for their Support and Encouragement. But notwithstanding these Preparations of the Mexican Emperor, those who are envious of the Glory of our Nation, are so void of Shame, as to maintain that we engag'd with Brutes, void of Reason, who only assembled to give way to the Wiles and Artifices, rather than the Courage and Constancy of the Spaniards.

CORTEZ receiv'd an Account that this Army was upon the Frontiers, which was confirm'd by three or four Nobles, sent by the Cazique of Guacachula, a populous warlike City, situate on the Road to Mexico, and a Place, which the new Emperor looked on as one of the Ramparts of his Empire. They came to request Succour against the Mexicans, complaining of their Violences and Oppressions, and offering to take up Arms against them so soon as the Spaniards should come within sight of their Town. They made the Undertaking appear easy and just, saying, that their Cazique ought to be assist'd as a Vassal of the King of Spain, being one of those who promis'd Obedience to him in the Assembly of the Nobility called together by the Orders of Moteczuma. Cortez ask'd them what Force the Enemy had in those Parts? they told him twenty Thousand in the District of their City, and ten Thousand more in another City call'd Tzucan, four Leagues from them, but that in Guacachula and its Dependencies, they could raise a very considerable Number of Men courageous and provok'd, who would be glad of the Opportunity to take up Arms. Cortez examin'd them very carefully, asking divers Questions, that he might discover the Intentions of their Cazique, and they gave so good an account of themselves, as fully persuad'd him of their Sincerity: and tho' he should have had some remaining suspicion, he would at that time have dissembled it; for in case the Treaty could not have been depended on, it was nevertheless necessary to drive away the Enemy, and subject the Frontier Towns, before the Mexicans came with a greater Force to defend them.

CORTEZ apply'd himself so earnestly to this Enterprize, that the very same Day he form'd an Army of three Hundred Spaniards, twelve or thirteen Horse, and above thirty Thousand Tlascalans, under the Command of Colonel Christopher de Olid; and after he had made the Disposition, he so quickly put it in Execution, that the Army march'd next Morning: they carry'd the Envoys sent from Guacachula with them, and had Orders to advance with Circumspection till they came near the City; and in case they suspected any Treachery, to endeavour engaging the Mexicans in some advantageous Post, and breaking them before they attack'd the Town.

THEY all march'd on very chearful and courageous, till at six Leagues from Tepeaca and almost at the same distance from Guacachula, (where the Army made a halt) they found it rumour'd among the Peasants of the Country, but without any good foundation, that the Emperor of Mexico was on the March with his whole Force to relieve those Cities. The Soldiers of Narbaez believ'd the Report, and so multiply'd the Enemy's Forces in their Imagination, that without hark'ning to Reason, or obeying Orders, they plainly and insolently protested, that they would march no farther: So that Christopher de Olid grew angry, and in a contemptuous manner bid them return, threatening them with the Displeasure of Cortez, since they were not touch'd with the Dishonour of their Retreat: But as he was preparing to prosecute his March without them, there happen'd a new Accident, which, if it did not altogether shake his Constancy, yet risqu'd the Success of the Expedition.

THEY saw several Bodies of arm'd Men descending from the Tops of the neighbouring Mountains, and advancing with more than ordinary Diligence; and Christopher de Olid believing the Mexicans were coming to attack him, he immediately drew up his Men in Order: In which he acted rightly, for excessive Care never yet did Hurt in an Army: But some Horse, whom he had sent before to gain Intelligence, return'd with an Account, that it was the Cazique of Guaxozingo, with others of his confederate Caziques, who were come to assist the Spaniards in their War against the Mexicans; who had already ravag'd their Frontiers, and threaten'd their Dominions. Upon this, Olid order'd their Troops to halt, and the Caziques to come before him; which was presently done: But that which should have given them all entire Satisfaction, occasion'd a second Uneasiness in the Soldiers; it began among the Tlascalans, and presently infected the Spaniards: For they both declar'd, that those People were not to be trusted, that their Friendship was feign'd, and that they were sent by the Mexicans, to serve them, by falling on the Spaniards during the Engagement. Christopher de Olid heard them, and without enquiring sufficiently into the Matter, enter'd too lightly into their Suspicions, presently seiz'd the Caziques, and sent them away to Tepeaca, for Cortez to determine concerning them.

them : An inconsiderate Action, by which he ran the risque of raising a Disturbance between his own People, and those who really came as Friends. The latter however continu'd in their Post, notwithstanding they found they were distrusted, declaring themselves satisfy'd to have the Matter referr'd to Cortez ; and the Spaniards did not dare to disturb them, because they had sent an Account of the matter, and were oblig'd to stay for Orders.

THE Prisoners in a very short time were brought before Cortez, complaining with a good deal of Reason of Christopher de Olid ; saying, they were not so much concern'd at the Disgrace offer'd to their Persons, as at the Suspicion of their Fidelity. Cortez heard them with great Benignity, and ordering their Irons to be taken off, endeavour'd to satisfy them, and to regain their good Opinion ; for he found in them all the Marks that usually distinguish Truth from Deceit. But upon further Consideration, he found it would be necessary to carry on this Enterprize in Person ; the Distrust which his Indian Allies had of each other, and the Uneasiness among the Spaniards, seeming to threaten some fatal Event. He presently prepar'd for his Journey, and leaving in Charge with the Magistrates of Justice the Government of his new Settlement, he set out with the Caziques, and a small Escort, with such Diligence, and so eager a Desire to remove all Impediments to the Undertaking, that in few hours he came up with the Army. Every body was pleas'd with his Presence ; Things took'd after another manner ; and the Storm that was beginning to gather, dispers'd. He reprimanded Christopher de Olid, not for sending him an Account of the accident, since he was so near ; but for discovering his Jealousy by the Imprisonment of the Caziques. And having join'd all the Forces, without any further delay he march'd on to Guacachula, ordering the Envoys from that City to go and inform their Cazique, where he was, and what Forces he had brought along with him ; not that he stood in need of any Offers from him, but that he might not treat those as Enemies, whom he desir'd by gentle Means to reduce, and preserve in his Interest.

THE Mexicans were posted on the farther side of the City ; but on the first Notice from their Centinels, they advanc'd with so much Speed, that by the time the Spaniards came within Musquet-shot, they had form'd their Army, and possess'd feels'd themselves of the Road, with an Intention to try their Strength under Cover of the Town: The Victory was vigorously disputed, the Mexicans not only defending themselves, but advancing upon their Enemies, with all the signs of a Resolution to maintain their Ground to the utmost: When the Cazique of Guacachula laid hold of this Occasion, to give a Proof of his Fidelity, falling on their Rear, and at the same time, assaulting them from the Walls with such good Order and Bravery, as much facilitated the Victory: And in a little more than half an Hour the Mexicans were entirely defeated, there being but few who were not either kill'd or wounded.

HERNAN CORTEZ quarter'd his Spaniards within the City; and without the Walls, the Tlascalans with the rest of the Confederates, whose Number continually increas'd: for on the Report of his carrying on that War in Person, several other Caziques who had submitted to the King of Spain, came with their Troops to serve under his Command; and his Army was so much augmented, that, according to his own Relation, he came to Guacachula with above One Hundred and Twenty Thousand Men. He thank'd the Cazique, and the Soldiers of the Country, giving them intirely the Glory of the Success; and they in return offer'd to march with him to Yzucan, not without an Opinion of their being necessary, on account of the Knowledge they had of the Country, and the Proofs they had given of their Valour. The Mexicans had in that Town, as the Cazique reported, above Ten Thousand Men in Garrison, besides those who had escap'd from the Battle. The Inhabitants, with all the Peasants of the District, were under a Necessity of declaring against the Spaniards. The Place was strong by Nature, and improv'd by Walls and Ravelines, which stopp'd the Passages between the Mountains: before it ran a River which our Army was oblig'd to pass: and News came, that the Enemy had broke the Bridge, in order to dispute the Passage. All these Circumstances were sufficient to make them look upon this Enterprize as no inconsiderable one, and advance with their whole Force.

CHRISTOPHER DE OLID was commanded with the Van-guard to pass the River, and tho' he was oppos'd by the greatest part of the Enemy's Troops, he threw himself into the Water, and gain'd the opposite Shore; advancing with so

so much Resolution; and so little Fear of Danger, that they kill'd his Horse under him, and wounded him in the Thigh: but the Enemy fled to the City, which they thought to defend; for they had turn'd out all the uselefs Men, Women, and Children, reserving Three Thousand resolute Peasants and Provisions for many days. The condition of the Walls, and the number of the Defendants, struck the Eyes of the Besiegers, and made them conclude, that the Assault would cost them a great many Lives; but the Army had scarce pass'd the River, and receiv'd Orders for the Attack, when at once the Cries of the Enemy ceased, and the whole Garrison disappear'd. Cortez might have suspected some Stratagem, if at the same time he had not discover'd the flight of the Mexicans towards the Mountains; he detach'd some Companies of Spaniards and the greatest part of the Tlascalans to pursue them, and notwithstanding the Enemy had the steepness of the Hills to assist them, they were broken in so small a time, that they scarce had leisure to face about. The City was so entirely forsaken by the Inhabitants, that they only found three or four of them among the Prisoners, by whose means Cortez endeavour'd to bring back the rest, sending them to the Woods, whither the People were retir'd with their Families, to offer them a Pardon in the name of the King, and good Treatment to all such as would return to their Houses; which so prevailed, that most laid hold of the Opportunity, and returned the same day: Cortez stay'd there two or three days, that they might recover from their Fears and submit, after the Example of Guacachula. At the same time he dismiss'd the Troops of the Caziques who were in Amity with him, dividing with them the Spoil of both Actions, and then returned to Tepeaca with the Spaniards and Tlascalans; having freed the Frontiers from the Mexican Troops, reduc'd those Cities of Importance to his Obedience, experienc'd the Affection of his Confederates, and disappointed the new Emperor of Mexico in his first Designs; which are generally observed as Prognosticks of the rest of a new Reign, and either animate, or discourage the Subjects, according to their good or ill Success.

BERNAL DIAZ DEL CASTILLO will not allow that Cortez was in this Expedition; but it may be doubted whether his view in denying it be not to excuse himself, for for having stay'd in Segura de la Frontera, as he confesses a little before; or else he has been carried away by his Inclination to contradict Francisco Lopez de Gomara in this, as he doth in every thing else: for all other Writers affirm what we relate. And Hernan Cortez himself in his Letter to the Emperor, dated the 30th of October, 1520. declares the Motives which obliged him to follow the Army. I am sorry there is any occasion to contradict the Author whom I follow; but it would have been a Fault inconsistent with the Care of Cortez, if he had not appeared in Person with the Troops, at a time when there were such Jealousies among his own Soldiers, such Complaints among his Confederates, and so much Insolence in the Troops of Narbaez; when Christopher de Olid himself, who commanded them, inclined to countenance their Suspicions; and all together endanger'd the Success of so important an Affair. Bernal Diaz must excuse me; he may have wrote according to his Opinion in this case: notwithstanding which, I must believe it more likely for him to forget, than that so much Neglect could justly be imputed to a Man of his General's Vigilance.

C H A P. V.

Hernan Cortez makes some Preparations for the Enterprize of Mexico; he accidentally receives a Reinforcement of Spaniards; returns to Tlascala, and finds Magiscatzin dead.

Cortez was no sooner arrived at Tepeaca, now call'd Segura de la Frontera, but he received an Account that his Friend Magiscatzin was at the point of Death, which gave him great Concern: for the extraordinary Affection of that Senator for him, had unavoidably engaged him to make it reciprocal; and desiring now to give him the last Proof of his Friendship, he immediately dispatched Father Bartolomé de Olmedo to take care of his Soul, by endeavouring to bring him into the Catholick Church. When this Religious Man came to him, he was almost spent with the Violence of his Distemper, but very sensible, and well disposed to receive new Impressions; for he was displeas'd with his own Religious Rites, and the Multiplicity of his Gods, and found fewer Objections against the Religion of the Spaniards, as being more conformable to natural Reason, and he seem'd to be blind rather for want of Light, than through any Defect in his Eyes. Father Bartolomé had but little trouble in persuading him, because he found him sensible of his Errors, and desirous to be set right: So that he had only occasion to instruct him, and use some Exhortations, in order to touch his Heart, and beget a Tranquillity in his Soul. In a very little time he with great earnestness desired Baptism, and received it with entire Faith, bestowing the small Remainder of his Life in fervent Reflections on his Happiness, and in exhorting his Sons to quit their Idolatry, and obey his Friend Hernan Cortez, endeavouring by all means the Preservation of the Spaniards, which they should look upon as their own Interest, for that he foresaw they would gain the Dominion of those Countries. Perhaps he was inspir'd, tho' he might likewise, from what had happened, have formed an Opinion, which People afterwards improv'd into a Prophecy. There is no doubt but God rewarded him with that extraordinary Call and Disposition of Mind, for what he had acted in favour of the Christians, as he had made him the principal Instrument of those frequent Succours; for which they stood indebted to the Republick of Tlascala. He was a Man of moral Virtues, and of so great a Capacity, that he came to be the first Man of the Senate, and in a manner governed all their Resolutions: for all gave way to his Authority and good Understanding; and he knew how to manage his credit with all the Moderation becoming a Member of that Free State. Hernan Cortez was extremely concern'd at his Death, and in a manner inconsolable for the Loss, not only of a Friend, but an able Director of his Designs, and one who had perfectly established him in the Friendship and Respect of the whole Republick. But Heaven, which always seem'd careful to support the General under his Misfortunes, favoured him at that time with a Reinforcement, which mitigated his Grief, and rais'd his Hopes.

A SHIP of moderate Burden arrived at St. Juan de Ulua, and brought thirteen Spanish Soldiers, two Horses, and some Provisions and Ammunition, which Diego Velasques sent to Pamphilo de Narbaez, taking it for granted that all the Conquests in that Country were his own, and the Troops of Cortez at his Devotion. Their Commander was Pedro de Barba, the same who was Governour of the Havana, when Hernan Cortez sailed from the Isle of Cuba, having by his Friendship escaped the last Snares that were laid to stop his Voyage. Pedro Cavallero, who commanded on the Coast, no sooner discovered the Vessel, but he went out in a Boat to reconnoitre: He saluted the new Comers with great Civility, and having found, by the very respectful manner with which Pedro de Barba enquired after Pamphilo de Narbaez, the Design of their coming, answered him without the least hesitation, That he was not only in good Health, but in great Prosperity, all those Countrys having submitted to him, and that Cortez, with some of his People, was fled to the Mountains. If this Turn can't be defended from the Reproach of being an Untruth, yet at least Cavallero deserves to be commended for his Readiness of Thought, which induced them to land without the least Distrust, and go to Vera Cruz, where they discovered the Deceit, and found themselves Prisoners to Cortez; Pedro de Barba commending the Stratagem of Cavallero: for in reality he was not sorry to find his Friend in so good a Condition.

THEY were carry'd up to Segura de la Frontera, and Hernan Cortez showed a particular Satisfaction at the happy Arrival of more Spaniards, with the agreeable Circumstance of receiving this Succour from the hands of his Enemy. He treated Pedro de Barba very kindly, and gave him a Company of Cross-Bows, upon the Confidence he had in his Friendship: He also distributed some Gifts among the Soldiers, upon which they agreed to serve under his Command. He afterwards read the Letter privately which Pedro de Barba brought for Narbaez. In which Diego Velasques, supposing him Master of all those Conquests, gave him Orders to maintain himself there at all adventures; for which end he promised him very powerful Succours: and lastly, told him, that if Cortez was not dead, he should immediately send him away with a sufficient Guard; for that he had received express Orders from

from the Bishop of Burgos to send him Prisoner to Court: and the Consequence of this Order would have been an Arrest without Appeal, had the Affair been left to that Prelate, who was an Enemy to Cortez, and who, from the great pains he took to favour Diego Velasques, gave cause to fear, that he meant to make an Example of Cortez, in the most publick manner, and to disguise a particular Revenge under the Appearance of Justice. About eight Days after arrived a second Vessel with another Reinforcement for Pamphilo de Narbaez, which Pedro Cavallero seiz'd after the same manner: She brought eight Soldiers and a Mare, with a considerable Quantity of Arms and Ammunition, under the Command of Captain Rodrigo Morejon de Lobera; they all immediately went to Segura, and list'd themselves as the others had done before them: These Succours came by a way so unlooked for, that Hernan Cortez considered them as good Omens, and Forerunners of future Success.

BUT at the same time his Thoughts were employed about the Preparations for his Enterprize. He had already resolv'd upon the Conquest of Mexico; and the great Numbers of Allies by which he found himself supported in his last Expedition, confirm'd his Resolution: But the Passage of the Lake was the grand and unavoidable Difficulty, and gave him great Concern; for after the Enemy had once found out the Secret of breaking the Bridges of the Causeways, there was no depending upon portable Bridges, which were only to be used when they were pinch'd in Time; wherefore he began to think of building twelve or thirteen Brigantines, which should be able to resist the Indian Canoes, and transport his Troops to the City; which he propos'd to carry in pieces on the Shoulders of the Indian Tamenes for fourteen or fifteen Leagues at least of very bad Way over the Mountains of Tlascala, to a River near the Lake. He had a very lively Imagination, and was naturally an Enemy to those lazy Spirits who fancy difficult things to be impossible.

HE communicated his thoughts to Martin Lopez, on whose Ingenuity and great Abilities he depended for the compassing this important Design; and finding he did not only approve of it, but also undertook to execute it with ease, he sent him before to Tlascala, with all the Spanish Soldiers who had any skill in the Carpenter's Trade, in order order to begin the Work, with a sufficient number of Indians to cut Wood, or do any other Service for which there might be occasion. At the same time he order'd the Iron-work and Rigging, and whatever had been preserv'd out of the Ships that were sunk, to be brought up from Vera Cruz; and having observed, that those Mountains produced Trees which afford a kind of Rosin, he drew out such a quantity as was necessary for the careening of his Barks.

HE was in want of Powder, but soon found means to make very good; sending to search for Sulphur, (of whose Use the Indians were utterly ignorant) in the Volcano discover'd by Diego de Ordaz, for he believ'd they could not fail of finding it there; and some Spanish Soldiers, among whom they name Juan de Laet à Montano, and à Mesa belonging to the Artillery, offer'd themselves for the Service, and in fine, return'd with as much Sulphur as was wanted. Cortez was every where, and over-saw all that was done; so far from being fatigued; that the Pains he took rather seem'd a Refreshment.

WHEN this Affair was over, he began to think of returning to Tlascala, to hasten as much as he could the Preparations for his Expedition; and before he went, he left his Instructions with the new Council of Segura, and appointed Captain Francisco de Orozco Commander of the Garrison, with about twenty Spanish Soldiers, and the Militia of the Country at his disposal.

HE resolv'd to enter the City in Mourning for the Death of Magiscatzin, for which end both he and his Captains cover'd their Arms with the Manufacture of the Country dyed black. They made their Entry without any other Pomp, than that of good Order, and profound Silence observ'd among the Soldiers, which help'd to declare their General's Grief. Both Nobles and Commonalty receiv'd this Demonstration of Concern with great Applause; for they all respected the deceased as the Father of their Country: and tho' there is no doubt but that Cortez was sincerely affected with the loss which he very often lamented, and had reason so to do, yet it is likely he had a farther View in putting on Mourning, which was to gain the Affections of the People.

THE Senate had not fill'd up the Place of Magiscatzin, (who, as one of the Caziques of the Republick, had

govern'd

govern'd the principal Division of the City) that Cortez might elect a Person to succeed him, or that they might act according to his Opinion in their Choice: Cortez considering the respect due to the Memory of the deceased, recommended his eldest Son, and so order'd matters, that he was unanimously chosen. He was a young Man of Judgment and Courage, and of so much Spirit, that he mounted the Tribunal without Surprize or being at a loss in matters of Government; and finally, he gave such Proofs of his Capacity in the most essential Point, that in a little time he earnestly desir'd Baptism, and receiv'd it with publick Solemnity, taking upon him the Name of Don Lorenzo de Magiscatzin: a wonderful Effect of the Arguments he had heard Father Bartolomé de Olmedo employ in the Conversion of his Father, which having meditated and digested, he came by degrees to a Sense of his Error. At this time also the Cazique of Izucan was baptized, a Youth who came to Tlascala with the Ensigns of his new Command, and to thank Cortez for having determined a Suit in his Favour, which had been commenced against him by his Relations concerning the Inheritance of his Father. For now every one consulted Cortez, both Caziques and particular Persons, referring all their Differences to him, and receiving his Decisions as inviolable Laws. So much did they respect him, and so great an Opinion had they of his Equity.

THE Noise which these Conversions made in the Town, awaken'd old Xicotencal, who tho' dissatisfied with the Absurdities of Gentilism, was grown old in Error, and had a Levity in his Disposition, which would not let him adhere to any Resolution; a Failing natural to old Age: but the Example of Magiscatzin, a Man equal to him in Authority, and his Conversion to the Catholick Religion at the point of Death, had such an Effect as to open the Eyes of his Understanding, and induce him to receive Baptism with a publick Detestation of his Errors. In truth it does not appear, that the Gospel could possibly have been in a fairer way to make a Progress in this Country, the Nobles and wisest Men of the Republick, whose Opinion govern'd all the rest, being converted to the Catholick Faith: but the Circumstances of these times did not allow the Spaniards to give their Application to it. Hernan Cortez was wholly taken up with making king Dispositions for his Enterprize, Father Bartolomé de Olmedo wanted Fellow-Labourers, and both were of opinion, that they could not attempt introducing Religion with any Success till they had subdued the Mexicans, and establish'd Peace, which they look'd upon as previously necessary to settle the warlike Spirits of the Tlascalans, and fit them for the reception of the Gospel. The great Affair therefore was for the present laid aside, Examples grew rare, and the People continued in their Idolatry. 'Twas possible whilst the Army remain'd there, they might have reap'd the first Fruits at least of such a favourable opportunity: But the continual alarms and rumours of War at this time, postponing all Attention to other things, and it sometimes happening, that the Maxims of Violence are better attended to when Reason is silent, I don't find that they made, or even endeavour'd any other Conversions.

C H A P. VI.

A fresh Succour of Spanish Soldiers arrives at the Army. The Men who came with Narbaez are importunate for their Discharge and Return to Cuba. Hernan Cortez draws up a second Relation of his Expedition, and dispatches new Envoys to the Emperor Charles V.

 Ortez complain'd with some warmth of Francisco de Garay, for that knowing very well the Progress he had made in the Empire of Mexico, he did notwithstanding endeavour to make a Conquest and Settlement in the Province of Panuco; but such a happy ascendant had the Fortune of Cortez over that of his Rivals, that as Diego de Velasquez furnish'd him with Succours the same way by which he intended to destroy him and support Pamphilo de Narbaez, so the measures which Garay had taken to usurp some part of his Government, turn'd likewise to his advantage. We have already related, how Garay was repuls'd from Panuco when Cortez, was with his Troops at Zempoala; notwithstanding which, he resolv'd to pursue his Enterprize, and had prepar'd another Fleet, with a greater number of Soldiers, commanded by all his best Officers: But the second Expedition was as unfortunate as the first; for the Spaniards were no sooner landed, but they met with such a gallant Resistance from the Indians, that they were glad to retreat to their Ships in the utmost disorder; and being wholly intent how to avoid the present Danger, put to Sea without observing the same Course. They were separated for some days, and without knowing any thing of each other's Design, they arriv'd almost all at the same time on the Coast of Vera Cruz, where they agreed to serve under Cortez, without any other motive than that of his great Reputation.

THIS Succour was look'd upon as sent from Heaven: for tho' it be certain that the Confusion and Unskillfulness of the Soldiers and Sailors might help to disperse these Vessels, and abandon them to the mercy of the Winds, which forc'd them on the Coast where they were so much wanted; yet their coming so opportunely, and after so many Misfortunes, to augment the Troops of Cortez, is an Event worthy of particular Reflection; for such a chain of lucky Accidents is not wont to be attributed, or very rarely, to meer Chance.

THE first Ship that arriv'd, was commanded by Captain Camargo, and had on board sixty Spanish Soldiers; a little after came another with fifty choice Soldiers and seven Horses, commanded by Captain Miguel Diaz, de Anz, a Gentleman of Arragon, who had so signaliz'd himself on all occasions, that his Person alone was esteem'd a very great Succour; and lastly, tho' somewhat late, arriv'd the Vessel commanded by Captain Ramirez, with above forty Soldiers, ten Horses, and great abundance of Provisions and Arms. They all landed, and the first without staying for the rest, made the best of their way to Tlascala, leaving an Example to their Fellows to take the same Rout, which they all did with entire Satisfaction. For the great Advances made by Cortez, in New-Spain, had made such a noise over all the Islands, that the Soldiers were easily led whither they thought Wealth and Prosperity invited them.

THIS

THIS Succour considerably augmented the Number of the Spaniards, and inspired them with fresh Hopes: The Soldiers received the New-Comers with Acclamations of Joy; they embraced each other as Friends of a long Acquaintance, without any other Tye than that of coming from the same Country; and Cortez himself, forgetting the Gravity of a General, was transported with Joy, but at the same time did not forget to return thanks to God, attributing to him and to the Justice of his Cause, all these surprizing Events.

NOTWITHSTANDING this good Fortune, he could not quiet the Soldiers of Narbaez, who were importunate with him for leave to return to the Isle of Cuba; they put him in mind of his Promise, and he could not deny but that they went upon the Expedition to Tepeaca on that Condition: for which reason, he was not willing to enter into any new Disputes with them, and the rather, because he found his Troops augmented with Soldiers better disciplin'd, and did not think it a proper time to march at the Head of unwilling Mutineers, who would be sure to shew uneasiness on every Fatigue, and be always railing at the Enterprize, pernicious in the Camp, and useless upon Occasions, deceiving their General, with the appearance of Soldiers in the Review, and yet of no service.

FOR these Reasons therefore he ordered proclamation to be made, That whoever had a mind to return home, was free to go, and should be furnished with Vessels, and every thing else that was necessary. The greatest part of the Soldiers of Narbaez made use of the Opportunity, but some stay'd out of a Point of Honour. Bernal Diaz takes no notice of the Names of those who stay'd, but tediously enumerates almost all who went, defrauding the first of the Honour that was their due, and wasting his time in disgracing the last; whereas, it would have been much more reasonable to have forgotten those who showed so little regard to their Reputation: But what deserves to be remarked, is, that Andres de Duero, who appeared on several Occasions so much attached to the Interest of Cortez, was one of those who retired; and altho' there be no account of the reason of this Separation, we may very well believe there was but little Sincerity in the Pretences, with which he colour'd his Retreat; since we find him shortly after making use of all his Interest at the Court in favour of Diego Velasques. If there was any Misunderstanding between Cortez and him, which might give occasion for this Breach, Reason must have been on Cortez's side; it not being likely that it could be pleaded in behalf of a Man who showed as little regard to that, as he did to his Reputation, by not only leaving his Friend engaged in an Enterprize of so much Honour and Danger, but withall taking upon him a Commission by which he was obliged either basely to act against his own Sentiments, or to yield his Understanding a Slave to an unreasonable Passion.

HERNAN CORTEZ having now got rid of these Mutineers, whom Alvarado had the care of conducting to the Vessels, began to consider of the time necessary to be employed in building the Brigantines. He dispatched new Orders to the Confederates to hold themselves ready to march upon the first notice, directing the Quantity of Provisions and Arms they were to provide, according to the Number of their Troops: And at his leisure Hours he wrote an Account of all the Particulars of the Conquest, to be sent to the Emperor; designing to equip a Vessel, and send new Agents, who might hasten the Dispatch of the former, or give him notice of the Condition his Affairs were in at the Court of Spain, his Uncertainty therein being now one of his greatest Disquiets.

CORTEZ drew up this Account in form of a Letter, and repeating every thing of importance in the Dispatches he sent the Year before by the Captains Portocarrero and Montexo, he gave his Majesty a faithful Relation of all his Adventures, both prosperous and unfortunate, from the time he marched out of Zempoala, and by his Courage and Conduct made his triumphant Entry into the Capital City of the Empire, till he was afterwards forced to retreat to Tlascalala, with considerable Loss. He also acquainted him with how much Security he was able to maintain himself in that Province, together with the Number of Spaniards that had augmented his Troops, and the great Confederacies he had made with divers Indian Nations, for renewing the War against the Mexicans. He expressed, with a noble and generous Confidence, the Hope he had of reducing to his Majesty's Obedience all that new World, whose Bounds to the North were unknown even to the Natives. He enlarged upon the Riches of that Empire, the Fertility of the Soil, and the Wealth of the several Princes. He highly extoll'd the Valour and Constancy stancy of the Spaniards, and the Affection and Fidelity of the Tlascalans: With relation to himself, he left it to his Actions to speak for him; and yet, without exceeding the Bounds of Modesty, he gave some strokes to the reputation of the Conquest, that set in its true light the Glory of the Conqueror. He desired speedy Justice against the unfair Proceedings of Diego Velasques, and Francisco de Garay, and made pressing Instances for an immediate Succour of Soldiers, Horses, Arms, and other warlike Provisions. He represented in yet stronger Terms the Necessity of sending some Ecclesiasticks and Regulars of approved Virtue, to assist Father Olmedo in the conversion of the Indians, giving an account that some of the chief among them were already baptized, and that in the rest there was such a kind of disposition to receive the Truth, as gave great hopes of its making a considerable progress. This was the Substance of the Letter he at that time wrote to the Emperor, laying before his Majesty every thing that had passed, without forgetting any considerable Circumstance; all which he expressed in proper and well-chosen Terms, according to the Eloquence of that Age; and it may be a question whether they were not more agreeable than those now in use, to that Character of Nature and Simplicity, which becomes the Style of Letters. At the same time it must be confessed, he was somewhat mistaken in the Names of Towns and Provinces, which being altogether new, could not be exactly pronounced, or faithfully rendered upon Paper.

BERNAL DIAZ DEL CASTILLO reports, that the General sent these Dispatches by the Captains Alonzo de Mendoza and Diego de Ordaz; and tho' Antonio de Herrera mentions only the first, it is not probable that he would entrust an affair of so much consequence to one Person alone, when Prudence required him to provide against the Accidents of so long a Voyage. His private Instructions to them was, That before they discovered their Commission, or made any declaration of their being sent by him, they should first find out his Father, and the two Agents who were sent the Year before, and jointly carry on their Negotiation, according as the Condition of his Affairs should require. He remitted also a second Present for the Emperor, consisting of Gold and other Curiosities which had been preserved at Tlascalala, to which the Soldiers also contributed, and were upon

upon this occasion very liberal of their little Substance; adding moreover the Booty acquired in the Expeditions of Tepeaca and Guacachula: a Present less rich than the former, but more deserving to be priz'd, as being amass'd in the midst of their Disgraces, and consequently to be regarded as the Remains after those Losses whereof Cortez had given a faithful account in his Letter.

THE General thought it proper at the same time, that the two Councils of Vera Cruz and Segura de la Frontera should write to his Majesty, as being the Government in that Country. They in their Letters sollicited for the same Assistance, declaring, That they thought themselves bound in duty to represent to his Majesty, how much it import-ed to maintain Hernan Cortez in his Post of Captain-General; for as the Beginning of this great Work was wholly owing to his Valour and Conduct, it would be no easy matter to find any other Head or Hands capable of bringing it to perfection; and in this they sincerely delivered their Opinions, and what they thought most advantageous for the Service in that Conjuncture. Bernal Diaz saith, that Hernan Cortez saw those Letters, insinuating as if he had desired that Sollicitation in his favour: It is very probable he did see them, but it is likewise certain, that those Letters contained such Truths as did not stand in need of any Flattery or Exaggeration. Diaz complains likewise, that the Soldiers were not permitted to write apart in the Name of their whole Corps, not that he differed in his Sentiments from the Councils (for he declares the contrary more than once) but as the Subject-Matter was the Preservation of his General, he desired to join his Opinion with the rest; and to give him his assistance on this occasion, as in truth he bravely did in War. Let it pass for Ambition of Glory, a Vice that ought to be pardoned in Men of merit, and appears very much like Virtue in a Soldier.

ORDAZ and Mendoza embarked on board one of the Vessels, which arrived a little before at Vera Cruz, with every thing necessary for such a Voyage; and soon after Cortez resolved to freight another Vessel, and dispatch the Captains Alonso Davila and Francisco Alvarez Chico with Letters for the Regulars of St. Jerome, who presided in the Royal Audience of Santo Domingo, the only one at that time in those Countries, and whose Jurisdiction extended over all the Islands, as well as the new Discoveries on the Main Land. He communicated to them the Account he had sent to the Emperor, and desired their speedy Assistance towards the Enterprize in which he was engaged; as also that they would put a stop to the vexatious Proceedings of Velasques and Garay. Tho' these Ministers were convinced of the Justice of his Demands, and admired his Constancy and Valour, yet the Island of Santo Domingo was not at that time in a Condition to part either with Men or Provisions: But they approved of every thing he had done, and offered to support the Justice of his Pretensions with the Emperor, and solicit such Succours as were necessary for an Affair of so great importance, and so far advanced; taking upon themselves the Care to check the Efforts of his two Rivals, by very strict and repeated Orders. And to this effect they answered his Letters, sending back his Envoys with good Words, but without the Succours he desired. But before I proceed in the farther account of this Conquest, and while the building of the Brigantines, and other Preparations for the Return to Mexico, are carried on with the utmost diligence; it will be proper to go back to the two first Envoys of Cortez, and see in what Condition the Affairs of New-Spain were at the Emperor's Court: the Reader cannot but desire to be informed therein, and such an Account may be reckoned among those necessary Digressions permitted to an Historian, as they contribute to the perfection of his Work, without destroying its proportion.

C H A P. VII.

The Envoys of Hernan Cortez arrive in Spain, and pass on to Medellin, where they continue till the Troubles of the Kingdom are over; after which, they go to the Court, and prevail to have the Bishop of Burgos set aside from being a Judge in the Cause of Cortez.

HE left Martin Cortez, with the two first Envoys of his Son, Alonso Hernandez Portocarrero and Francisco de Montexo, in the wretched Employment of following the Regency, and waiting in the Antichambers of the Ministers; so far from being admitted to audience, that not daring to importune them with any Requests, they only presented themselves in the Throng as they passed by, and were forced to content themselves with receiving the accidental Glance of an Eye; the comfortless notice taken of those, who having all the Justice in the world on their side, are yet afraid to ruin their Pretensions, by advancing them unseasonably. The Emperor, as we have already observed, gave them a very favourable hearing; and tho' he was disgusted with the Insolence and the Attempts of some Towns of Spain, which endeavoured to oppose his Voyage to Germany, by irreverent Protests, little less indeed than Threats; yet he found sufficient time to inform himself very exactly of all that passed in New-Spain, and to judge what might be expected from the Enterprize. He made himself Master of the whole Affair, not disdaining to ask questions upon many points, it being no ways unbecoming Majesty to receive from a Subject those Helps that serve to explain an Affair; nor should a King always go to Council full of doubts. The Emperor presently discover'd the great

great Advantages which might be expected from such wonderful Beginnings: and the Idea he at that time formed of the Merit of Cortez, helped extremely to recommend him to his Favour, as he was naturally inclined to value extraordinary Men.

THE Affairs of the Kingdom, and the sudden Departure of the Emperor, did not permit him to come to any fixed Resolution in a Matter wherein so many Difficulties were rais'd, as well by the Agents of Velasques, as by some Ministers who were in secret intelligence with them, and supported them. But when the Day of his embarkation came, which was the 20th of May, 1520. his Majesty did in a particular manner recommend the Examination of the Affair of Cortez to Cardinal Adriano, Governor of the Kingdom in his absence. The Cardinal was very sincerely desirous to favour his Cause, but as the Informations by which he was to govern himself, came from the Council of the Indies, (where the Votes were influenced by the Authority and Prejudice of the President, the Bishop of Burgos) he found himself at a loss how to come to any resolution; nor was it an easy matter to assure himself of making a right judgment, while the Representations of Velasquez came cloathed with the appearance of Justice, and the Exploits of Cortez were discredited with the name of Rebellion.

AFTERWARDS, when it was most necessary, there wanted time to examine into the truth of this Affair, the Cares of the Ministers being employed in Matters of the last importance: Several Cities began to stir, under pretext of correcting what they called the Disorders of the State, and others follow'd them to the same Precipice, without examining whether that Pretext was reasonable or not. They all looked on the Absence of the Emperor as their greatest Misfortune, and some believ'd they did him good service, or at least kept within the Bounds of their Obedience, mistaking the Transports of a false Zeal for Proofs of their Respect and Duty.

THE common People took up arms to justify their first Offence, and some Gentlemen so far degraded themselves, as to join them, thro' want of Understanding; a Defect which generally effaces all those Sentiments which Nobility of Blood inspires. The great Lords and Ministers espous'd the Cause of Justice, notwithstanding the Affronts and Dangers that attended it. In short, the whole Kingdom was in confusion, and the Sovereign Authority in a manner usurped by these Factions, in our History called Communities, tho' we know not with what reason; for it could not be properly said the Complaint was common, when many Cities, and almost the whole Body of the Nobility asserted the Rights of the King: However, the Rebels gave this Name to their Insolence, and have been favour'd by Posterity with the Title which they took to honour their Revolt.

THO' the Account of these Disturbances be foreign to my Argument, I could not avoid touching upon them, as one of the Causes that put a stop to the good Intentions of the Cardinal, and crossed the Negotiations of Cortez: It was indeed a very unseasonable time to consider of new Enterprizes, when the Regent and Ministers were so wholly employ'd in finding Remedies for the Evils which afflicted the State within doors, that those without made no sort of impression upon them: So that Martin Cortez, and his Friends, sensible of the small Advantages they reaped by their Sollicitations, and of the general Disorder of Affairs, retired to Medellin, with a resolution to let the Storm blow over, and expect the Return of the Emperor, who was perfectly well apprized of the Affair, and had shewn a disposition to do justice to their Pretensions; and they plainly saw that his Authority was necessary to surmount the Opposition of the Bishop of Burgos, and other Impediments which arose from the present Posture of Affairs.

SOME little time after, Diego de Ordaz and Alonso de Mendoza arrived at Sevill, after a prosperous Voyage; and, without discovering themselves, or their Commission, they took care to be informed of the State of Cortez's Affairs, a Precaution which imported no less than their Liberty; for they understood, to their great surprize, that the Commissioners of Trade had express orders from the Bishop of Burgos, to stop and imprison any Person whatsoever, who should be sent from New-Spain, and to seize on the Gold and other Merchandize that he should bring either on his own account, or by way of Commission. Upon which, they only endeavour'd to secure their Persons, and thought themselves very happy in preserving their Letters and Dispatches, leaving the Present for the King, with every thing else, in the hands of those Judges, and to be disposed of at the pleasure of the Bishop of Burgos.
with

THEY parted from Sevill, not without great apprehension of being discovered, determining, if possible, to find out at the Court either Martin Cortez, or his Son's two Agents, in order to get light from their Informations how to proceed; but hearing on the Road that they were retired to Medellin, they went on to that Town, where their Arrival was welcom'd with all the Demonstrations of Joy, which such wonderful and wish'd for News could inspire. It was debated among them, whether it would be proper to carry the Dispatches of Cortez, immediately to the Cardinal Regent, without delaying to inform him of such important News; but considering the present Disturbances of the Kingdom, they thought it would be to no purpose to speak of distant Advantages, which regarded the augmentation, but not the safety of the Monarchy: Upon which they resolved to continue in their Retirement, till Affairs should take another turn, and the Ministers be more at leisure.

THE Disorders of Castile encreased every day; for the Mutineers, not content to defend themselves in their Rebellion, carried their Insolence so far, as to plunder the Country, and lay siege to Towns which retained their Fidelity; the Forbearance of the Government exciting their Ambition to become the Aggressors. At first the Ministers thought to bring them to a sense of their Duty by gentle Means and Patience; but the Distemper was too deeply rooted to allow of the slow Operation of such soft Remedies, and more especially because the Rebels imagin'd they had both Force and Justice on their side: Nor were some Ecclesiasticks wanting, who, regardless of their Duty, abused the Pulpit, by preaching up Sedition, confirming the People in their Obstinacy, and persuading them, that to correct the Disorders of the State, was doing good service both to God and the King. It came to that pass, that the great Lords and Gentlemen were obliged to take up arms to re-establish the Authority of Justice, and to animate those Cities which held for the Emperor. And notwithstanding the Rebels had the temerity to bring an Army into the Field, and try their Strength with those whom they called their Enemies; yet, after two Rencounters, in which they lost a great number of Men, together with their Reputation, and after the Execution of four of the principal Authors of the Sedition, their Pride abated, and their Forces dispers'd ; the Prudent and the Timorous, both secured themselves as well as they could ; the Cities return'd to their Obedience, the Tumult ceased, and Reason resumed her place. In short, it was but little more than a popular Commotion, which begins and ends with the same facility.

THE Account which came at that time of the Emperor's return, contributed very much to restore the publick Tranquillity : He gave assurance in his Letters, that he would leave all other Affairs, to come where his Presence was so necessary. This Assurance entirely settled every thing, and Martin Cortez, judging it a proper time to renew his Sollicitations, set out immediately for the Court, with the four Commissioners from his Son ; where, after some small Delays, they had a particular audience of the Cardinal Regent. They informed him in general how far Matters were advanced towards the Conquest of Mexico, and referred him to the Letters of Cortez for the Particulars. They gave him also an account of the Orders they found at Sevill, for imprisoning any one who should come from Cortez, and of the Seizure of the Present they had brought for the King. Upon this occasion, they represented the Reasons they had to distrust the Bishop of Burgos, and lastly, desired leave to except against him in a legal way as a Judge, offering to make good the Reasons of their Exception, or suffer the Penalty of their Irreverence. The Cardinal heard them with attention, he seem'd touch'd with their Misfortune, and comforted them with Promises of a speedy Dispatch. He was particularly displeas'd with the Orders given at Sevill, and the Seizure of the Present, as being done without his knowledge. Whereupon, the Cardinal answer'd them with regard to their Request concerning the Bishop, That they might take their remedy against him at Law, after the manner they thought most proper ; and that he would protect them from any Violence they might have reason to fear in the Course of that Process : Which sufficiently animated them for the hazardous Undertaking of engaging in a Suit with a powerful Enemy ; an Enterprize in which a Man is in a manner oblig'd to speak in the most tender Terms, and where Fear is wont to take off a good deal from the Force of Reason.

WITH

WITH these Encouragements, to hope for better Fortune, they immediately enter'd their Exception against the President of the Council of the Indies in his own Court, delivering their Reasons in writing, with all the Temper and Moderation necessary to observe a due Respect. But their Reasons were so strong, and the Truth of what they alledged so well known to the other Judges, that they durst not deny Justice in an Affair of that importance, and more especially on the approach of the Emperor's Return, the Report of which was joyfully received by all who did not stand in fear of his Presence; and not only quieted the Minds of the People, but occasion'd his Ministers to act with circumspection. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, and others who have followed him, treat the Bishop too rigorously upon this occasion: Diaz relates what he heard, and the rest have copy'd it; but the Whole of what they say doth not seem credible, of so venerable and accomplish'd a Prelate. However, some of the Articles against him were certainly proved; as, his treating of a Marriage between his Niece and Diego Velasques, the sharp Expressions he us'd on several Occasions to the Envoys of Cortez, whom he treated as Rebels and Traitors, when his Passion had got the better of his Prudence. These Proofs, with the Orders he had given in Sevill to imprison all Persons sent from New-Spain, which were too publick to be deny'd, were thought sufficient to justify the Recusation. After a full Hearing, and with the approbation of the Council of State and the Cardinal, the Bishop was absolutely forbid to interfere in any Matters between Hernan Cortez and Diego Velasques; his Orders were revoked, the Embargo's at Sevill taken off, and the Importance of the Undertaking appear'd in its true light. The Heroick Actions of Cortez, which were almost obscured before by the Suspicion of his Fidelity, were now celebrated with the Praises they deserved; and the Cardinal, by several Decrees, recommended the dispatch of the Envoys, and was so sincerely desirous to forward the Affair, that even after he had received the news of his Exaltation to St. Peter's Chair, he dispatch'd some Orders favourable to Cortez, as he was on the Road to embark. Whether he was affected by the Justice of his Cause, or that having his Mind possess'd with the Cares of the Supreme Dignity, he thought it his Duty to remove all Impediments to a Conquest quest, that was to prepare the way for the introduction of the Gospel, and facilitate the Conversion of the Indians; an Interest of the Church worthy to engage the very first Reflections of the Sovereign Pontiff.

C H A P. VIII.

Concludes the Affairs of the precedent Chapter.

THE new Pope Adrian, the Sixth of that Name, was then at Victoria, whither he went to give the necessary Orders for relieving the Provinces of Navarre and Guipuscoa, whose Frontiers the French had ravaged, in order to foment the Disturbances of Castile: But the Affairs of Italy, and repeated Letters from Rome, obliged him to begin his Journey, leaving every thing under his charge in the best posture he could. Soon after, the Emperor arrived on the Coast of Biscay, and landing at the Port of Santander, found his Kingdoms almost recovered of the domestick Evils they had labour'd under. The Storm was over, but the hollow Noise of the yet working Sea continu'd, as it is wont to do, for some time after a Tempest, before a settled Calm. He thought therefore, that to chastise some of the Seditious (excepted out of the general Pardon) would be necessary for the re-establishing of Peace and Justice. He also found some Remainers of another Evil which Spain had suffer'd during his absence; for the French had unexpectedly seized upon the Kingdom of Navarre: and though they were beaten out, after losing a Battle, together with their Reputation, and ill-gotten Booty, yet were still in possession of Fontarabia; and it was absolutely necessary to re-take this Place, into which the Enemy were preparing to throw a powerful Reinforcement. But notwithstanding these Affairs, and others at the same time in Italy, Flanders, and Germany, he found time for those of New-Spain, to which he always had a very particular ticular attention: He gave another audience to the Envoys of Cortez; and tho' those of Diego Velasques at the same time presented their Request, yet, as he had been well inform'd of the Case on both sides by Letters from the Pope, he, by a new Sentence, confirmed the Recusation of the Bishop of Burgos, and appointed Commissaries to determine finally upon this Affair, viz. the great Chancellor of Arragon, Mercurio de Catinara; Hernando de Vega, Lord of Grajal, and Great Commander of Castile; Doctor Lorenzo Galindez of Caravajal; the Licentiate, Francisco de Vargas, Counsellor of State, and Chamberlain to the King; and Monsieur de la Rose, the Flemish Minister: Monsieur de la Chau, whom Diaz and Herrera have added to this Commission, could not possibly be one of the number, being dead some Years before in Saragossa; and the Post of Grand Chancellor, vacant by his death, being possess'd by Mercurio de Catinara. The Election of Persons so well qualify'd, shew'd the Justice of his Majesty's Intentions: for the Kingdom did not afford Men in whom the Emperor reposed more confidence; nor were any to be found, in whom Learning, Prudence, and Equity appeared in a more eminent degree.

THE first thing the Council did, was to look over the Memorials drawn from Letters and Relations produced at the Tryal; but there they were so embarrass'd by contradictory Accounts, that they thought it necessary to order the Agents on both sides to explain themselves, viva voce, in the next Meeting; for they were all desirous to dispatch this Affair, and examine strictly into the Accusations brought by the Parties against each other, and into the Strength of their respective Arguments, that so they might come to the knowledge of the Truth, without tying themselves up to Forms of Law, which generally do but perplex a Cause, and are so many Obstacles to Justice.

THE next Day the Agents appeared before the Council with their Advocates; and, among those for Diego Velasques, Andres de Duero signalized himself: but People were the less surpriz'd to see him unfaithful to his Friend, knowing he had been so first to his Master. The Memorials were read, and the Parties at the same time were examined, in order to discover how they justify'd themselves from their respective Accusations, and made good their Complaints. From their Answers, the Judges drew what was sufficient.

to decide the Affair: And, after some few days Hearings, the Court unanimously agreed, That it was not reasonable for Diego Velasques to appropriate to himself the Advantages of the Conquest of New-Spain, without a better Title than that of having expended some Money in the Preparations for that Enterprize, and naming Cortez for Commander: That he could only have his Action for what he had laid out, making it appear to be from his own proper Stock, and not any of the Effects belonging to the King in his Government: That the nomination of Cortez afforded him no Pre- tence either to the Honour or Advantage of the Conquest; for, besides that he gave him the Commission without the Authority of the Ministers of the Royal Audience, whose Orders he should have received, or so much as acquainting them with it, he lost those Prerogatives the day that he re- voked it, and could have no right to say that the Conquest was made by his order, Cortez being by that Revocation left free to act as he should judge most advantageous for the ser- vice of the King, with the Troops and Vessels which, for the most part, he had rais'd and equipp'd at his own expence, and that of his Friends.

AND tho' the Judges were also very sensible, that the Conduct of Cortez was not, in the beginning of this Enterprize, altogether so regular as it should have been, yet they thought something was to be allow'd to his just In- dignation, and much more to its admirable Effects: A Conquest so wonderful, and of so great importance, the Difficulties of which had only serv'd to manifest his in- comparable Valour, and, above all, his Fidelity, and in- violable Attachment to his Duty! For which reason, they judged him worthy to be continu'd in the Command of what he had conquered, and to be encouraged and sup- ported in an Undertaking already so far advanced: And, lastly, they censur'd Diego Velasques, as a Person who had show'd a very ungovernable Ambition, in aspiring, with so little reason, to usurp the Glory and Advantage of the Actions of another; and as having been guilty of a rashness which deserv'd a very severe reprimand, in sending an Army against Hernan Cortez, without considering the Conse- quences which might have attended such violent Proceed- ings, or regarding the Orders he had receiv'd to the con- trary from the Ministers of the Royal Audience of Saint Domingo.

THESE Conclusions were laid before the Emperor, which being approv'd by his Majesty, Sentence was pronounced, declaring Hernan Cortez to be a good Minister and faithful Subject; honouring with the like approbation the Officers and Soldiers under his Command; imposing perpetual Silence on Diego Velasques, on the Subject of any Pretensions to the Conquest of New-Spain; and strictly commanding him, on pain of severe Punishment, not to raise the least Obstacle to that Affair, either directly or indirectly, with a reservation for any demand he might have on account of Moneys by him expended in the armament of the Vessels, which he was to make out his claim to, and sue for, in the ordinary way of Justice. And thus did this Affair end, the Judges referring the Honours design'd for Cortez, the reprimanding of Velasques, and other Conclusions of the Council, to the Dispatches that were to be sent in the name of the Emperor.

SOME are of opinion, that this Judgment was framed rather according to Reasons of State, than the Rigour of Justice: It is not my business to examine the Right of the pretending Parties; I have shown the Motives and Considerations upon which the Judges pronounced sentence, and I am not insensible, that in the first Steps of Cortez there is occasion for a favourable interpretation; but, at the same time it cannot be deny'd, that his Title to the Conquest was as good as the Emperor's to the Country conquered. Upon which consideration, the Judges might very well proceed as a Court of Equity, by taking this Affair out of the common Road, and moderating the Rigour of Justice: To which they were the more induced by the Weakness of Velasques's Arguments, his violent Proceedings and Disrespect to the Royal Authority. It is said he liv'd but a little while after he receiv'd the Emperor's reprimand, the very Words of Kings having the power to reward and punish. We must not refuse to Diego Velasques the just Praises he deserv'd, on account of his Quality, Capacity, and Courage, of which he had given signal Proofs in the Conquest of Cuba; but upon this occasion he was miserably mistaken in the beginning, and, by the use of improper Means, fell short of the end he propos'd; and, finally, his Impatience hasten'd his death. His first Fault was Distrust, a Vice which, like Excess of Fear, produces Rashness; the second was Anger, which does more

more than make Men irrational; for it makes them Enemies to Reason: and the third was Envy, which, in mean Spirits, supplies the place of Anger.

THE next thing taken into consideration, was the Assistance to be given Cortez, the Care of which the Emperor referred to the same Council: He gave a very favourable audience to his Agents, and seem'd well pleas'd that Justice had declar'd on their side: He bestow'd several Marks of his Favour upon Martin Cortez, on account of his Son's Merit, whom he promis'd to reward according to the Greatness of his Service. Several Regulars were named for the Conversion of the Indians, the first Care of the Emperor, who was always more zealous for the advancement of Religion than for the augmentation of his Empire. He order'd a considerable number of Arms and Horses to be embark'd in the first Fleet; and, considering how much it imported to use the utmost dispatch at a time when Hernan Cortez was engaged in War, and not without great suspicion of his Rivals, he commanded the Orders to be immediately drawn, and sent by several Letters.

ONE was directed to the Governours and Royal Audience of Saint Domingo, signifying to them his resolution, with orders to assist Cortez to the utmost of their power, and remove all Impediments to his Conquest. Another was to Diego Velasques, strictly enjoining him to desist from further interfering in that Enterprize, and severely censuring his violent Proceedings. There was another to Francisco de Garay, blaming him for attempting any thing on New-Spain, and forbidding him to continue that Design. The last was directed to Hernan Cortez, and abounded in those Marks of Honour and Favour which Kings bestow on those from whom they have received extraordinary Services, when they do not disdain to own the Obligation. The Emperor in this Letter did not only approve the past Actions of Cortez, but withall his present Design, and the Disposition he had made for re-taking the City of Mexico. He let him know how sensible he was of his Valour and Constancy, not forgetting to take notice of the Prudence and Address with which he had managed both his own Troops and those of his Confederates. His Majesty also inform'd him of the Orders he had given to secure him from his Rivals, and of the Commission he had sent sent him to be Governour and Captain-General of that Country: He assured him at the same time of more solid Proofs of his Acknowledgment, and made particular and honourable mention of the Captains and Soldiers who had served under him. He recommended to him in a most pressing manner to treat the Indians well, and to take care to have them instructed in the Christian Religion, considering them as a Soil capable of being cultivated by the Gospel: He lastly gave him hopes of speedy succour and assistance, referring to his Valour and Fidelity the final accomplishment of so great a Work. A Letter which will for ever honour the illustrious Posterity of Cortez, and such a one as would not only give nobility, where it is wanting, but a lustre to Families of the noblest Descent.

THESE Dispatches were all signed by the Emperor in Valladolid, the 22d of October, 1522. and immediately sent away with two of the Envoys of Cortez, the other two remaining behind to solicit Succours, and receive Instructions that were framing for the civil and military Government of the new conquered Country.

THO' we have a little interrupted our Account of the Exploits of Cortez, we thought it necessary to pursue this Affair to the Conclusion, that we might not leave it unfinished in such manner as should oblige us to make another digression: A Liberty not only taken by Historians, but Annalists, who tie themselves up more strictly to time; as we find it practised in Cornelius Tacitus, who, in the Empire of Claudius, introduces and concludes the Wars of Britain, under the two Vice-Pretors, Ossorius and Didius, judging it less inconvenient to break through the Series of Years, than the Connexion of important Events.

C H A P. IX.

Cortez receives a new Succour of Men and Ammunition: he musters his Spanish Troops; and the Confederates do the like, after his Example: He publishes certain military Orders, and begins his March, with a design to possess himself of Tezeuco.

IT was now about the end of the Year 1520, when Cortez resolved to march with his whole Army into the Enemy's Country, and to make the last Dispositions for his grand Enterprize. He had received some few days before, a Succour of Men, whom good fortune threw in his way; for the Governour of Vera Cruz gave him notice, that a Merchant-Man from the Canaries was anchored there, with a considerable Quantity of Fire-Arms and Powder, and other warlike Provisions, three Horses, and some Passengers, who came there purposely to sell their Merchandize to the Spaniards, who were engaged in that Conquest.

AT that time all Sorts of Goods sold at an excessive Price in the Indies, and the Hopes of Gain had quite overcome all fear of so distant and dangerous a Commerce. Upon this advice, Cortez, desirous to make advantage of the Opportunity, immediately sent a Commissary to Vera Cruz, with Bars of Gold and Silver, under a sufficient Guard; and the Governour was ordered to buy the Arms and Ammunition as cheap as he could. The Governour managed the Matter with so much dexterity; and rais'd such an Opinion of the Undertaking in which his General was engaged, that not only the Merchants sold what they had brought at a reasonable rate, but the Captain of the Vessel, with the Master, and thirteen Spanish Soldiers, Soldiers, went with the Commissary to the Camp, and join'd the Army, with a resolution to seek their Fortunes in the Indies: a Notion which was very prevalent at that time, and which still subsists among some who are eager to enrich themselves that way; the Destruction of those who have been deceiv'd, not in the least discouraging the Avarice of others.

WITH this Reinforcement, and some others which Hernan Cortez had received beyond all expectation, he resolv'd to hasten the March of his Army; and indeed he could not now delay it any longer, or stay for the finishing of the Brigantines; for the Troops of the Republick, with those of their Allies, were daily arriving, and, from their Inaction, he might reasonably apprehend some Inconveniences.

UPON which, he assembled his Captains, to deliberate what would be most proper for them to undertake with the Forces they had, for the Service of the grand Design, till such time as they should be join'd by all the rest of the Troops, and were in a Condition to attempt the Recovery of Mexico: and after a long Debate upon variety of Opinions, they resolv'd to march directly to Tezenco, and, in all events, to seize that City; which being situated in the Road from Tlascala, and almost on the Borders of the Lake, seem'd very proper for a Place of Arms: it was a Post which they could fortify and maintain, and where they might easily receive the Reinforcements they expected, and make Inroads from it into the Enemy's Country: Moreover, it was a sure Retreat at a reasonable distance from Mexico, to shelter them from the Accidents of War. It was also judg'd, that the Troops which were already arriv'd, were a Number sufficient for that Design; and tho' the Canals, by which the Waters of the Lake had a communication with the City, seem'd too narrow for the Passage of the Brigantines, they resolv'd to consider more at leisure of that Difficulty afterwards, and to begin their March without any farther delay. The day after this resolution, Cortez muster'd his Spaniards, and found them five hundred and forty Foot, and forty Horse, with nine Pieces of Artillery, brought on shore from the Vessels. This Parade was order'd in sight of an innumerable Concourse of People, and had the air of a general Review, by drawing the attention of the Spectators from the numbring of the Men,

Men, to the Pomp of the Show, in which nothing was omitted that serv'd for ostentation; as, the Finery of the Soldiers, flying of Colours, management of Horses, and the handling of their Arms, when they prepared to salute the General; and all was performed with so much Gallantry and Decorum, that the Multitude expressed their Satisfaction by repeated Acclamations: and the Indian Soldiers were instructed by their Example. For Xicotencal, who was General of the Republick, would needs muster his Troops, not that this Method was ever practis'd by the Tlascalans, but only to make his court to Cortez, by imitating the Spaniards; and first past the Drums and Trumpets, with the rest of their warlike Instruments; then the Captains, in Files, gayly adorn'd, with large Plumes of various Colours, and Jewels hanging at their Ears and Lips; they carried their Macanas, or two-handed Swords, under the Left Arm, with their Points upward, and every one had a Page, bearing his Shield, on which were different Figures, expressing their own Exploits, and the Defeat of their Enemies; after their manner, they complimented the two Generals, and then the Troops marched by in different Bodies, distinguished by the Colour of their Plumes, and by their Ensigns; namely, the Figures of several Animals, which hanging at the end of their Pikes, served instead of Colours: The whole Army consisted of ten thousand chosen Men; for tho' the Republick had provided a much greater Number, yet the rest of their Levies were left to assist in conducting the Brigantines, the Security of which was of so much consequence, that the Senate took the engaging their Troops that way as a Favour, which might have been resent'd as a Slight.

ANTONIO DE HERRERA will have it, that the Tlascalans mustred eightry thousand Men, in which he differs from Bernal Diaz, and other Authors, unless he included the Troops of Cholula and Guaxocingo, which were encamped without the Town; for there is no doubt but Hernan Cortez marched out of Tlascala with above sixty thousand Men, not reckoning those who join'd him on his March, or at the Place of Rendezvous, which were so numerous, that during the Seige of Mexico, he had under his Command above two hundred thousand Men; and what renders this the more remarkable, is, that we have not been told of any want they had of Provisions, or of the least

Discord

Discord among so many different Nations, of any confusion in the giving of Orders, or of any want of exactness in obeying them. Much indeed was owing to the great Capacity and extraordinary Prudence of Cortez, but this work could not be wholly his. It pleas'd God to reduce this Empire to his holy Law, and making use of him as an Instrument, he facilitated the Means which conduc'd to that End, disposing the Minds of Men for those Events which he had pre-ordain'd.

CORTEZ immediately publish'd some Ordinances which he had form'd at his leisure hours, to prevent those inconveniencies in War, by which it is wont to hazard, or lose its Character of being Just. He order'd therefore, upon pain of Death, That no Man should presume to draw his Sword against another, either in Quarters, or upon the March; That no Spaniard should abuse a confederate Indian, either by word or action; That no one should force, or otherwise abuse a Woman, tho' belonging to the Enemy; That no one should leave the Army, to go and plunder the Villages, without leave, and a number sufficient to execute the Undertaking; and, That they should not play away their Arms and Horses; in which Article, their Discipline had been a little too remiss. And he particularly prohibited, on pain of Infamy and Degradation, all Swearing, Blasphemy, and other Abuses, which are generally introduc'd, as allowable, under the title of Military Licence.

THE same Ordinances were signify'd to the Commanders of the Indian Troops; and Cortez himself was present when they were interpreted to them by Aguilar and Donna Marina, in order to make them understand, that the Penalties regarded all without exception, and that the least of their Excesses would be punish'd with the utmost Rigour. This quickly went from the Tlascalans to the other Nations, and had so good an Effect, that from that moment there appear'd more regularity in the Indians than before; tho' during the March, Cortez was oblig'd to wink at some things, and make allowance for their Barbarism and the prevalency of Custom; but after the Punishment of two or three, the rest were reduc'd to better Discipline: and the Fear of being chastiz'd, join'd with the Care they took to conceal their Crimes, pass'd for a sort of Reparation to the justice of the General.

UPON the day of the March, which was the Feast of the Innocents, after Father Bartolomé de Olmedo had said Mass; and address'd himself to God in a particular Prayer for the good Success of the Expedition, Hernan Cortez commanded the Indians to form themselves into gross Battalions, and after they were rang'd in order of Battle, he march'd out of the Village at the head of the Spaniards; and by their Example, show'd the Indians how to double their Files, with all the leisure which that Movement requires, their over-much haste in beginning an Engagement generally bringing them into confusion, and being one of their greatest mistakes in War. After this, he call'd together the principal Commanders of the several Nations, and, by the help of the Interpreters, made them a short Exhortation: He recommended to them, to animate their Men by convincing them that the present Undertaking concern'd their common Interest, as being to fight for their own Liberty, and that of their Country; to send all back who were not willing to stay; to take very particular care to punish the breach of Orders; and above all, to lay before them the obligation they were under of following the Example of their Friends the Spaniards, both in their Actions of Valour, and in their Moderation.

THEY went to put his Orders in execution, and he return'd to the Head of his own Men; who, by their Silence, show'd that they were prepar'd to hear him: I do not pretend, my Friends and Companions (said he) to make you sensible by vain exaggerations of the Obligations you lie under to act in this Expedition like Spaniards; I have already had sufficient proofs of your Courage, and have even envy'd the gallantry of your Actions. What I am now to recommend to you, is rather under the character of your Companion than your General; that we shou'd all, with equal care, consider this great multitude of Indians who follow us, and who regard our Cause as their own; which lays us under two Obligations, both worthy of our particular attention. The first is, to behave towards them as Friends, and even to bear with them, if it be necessary, as Creatures of an inferior degree of Reason; and the other is, to give them an example by our Actions. You are sensible of the Orders which have been publish'd to all, and the least offence against them, amongst you, will be aggravated by the addition of setting a bad Example; every one must consider the influence his Transgressions may have, or else the rest will be oblig'd to consider the important influence of their due Punishment.

nishment. I shall be extremely concern'd, to find myself necessitated to proceed with rigour against the Man of least account amongst you: but this concern will be unavoidable; for I am resolv'd to be Just, as well as Patient. You are all sensible of the great Undertaking we have in hand; 'tis no less than the Conquest of an Empire for our King, and will be an Action worthy to be recorded in History. The Forces we already have, with those who are yet to join us, will be proportion'd to this heroic Design; and God, whose Cause we defend, and who has hitherto miraculously supported us, will go along with us; nor is it possible to suppose, he will abandon an Enterprize, in which he hath so often declar'd himself our Leader. Let us then follow him, and not displease him. And repeating again, Let us then follow him, and not displease him, he ended his Speech, and gave orders for the March, with the Acclamations of his People; taking for good Prognosticks, the Satisfaction with which the Soldiers follow'd him, the extraordinary Accident by which the Number of his Spaniards was augmented, and the hearty Disposition of his Confederates. He consider'd all these together as a happy presage of Success, not that he made much account of such Observations, but the Understanding sometimes relaxes itself, that Hope may be diverted with the dreams of the Imagination:

C H A P. X.

The Army marches, and overcomes some Difficulties. The King of Tezeuco sends an artful Embassy to Cortez; he returns an Answer of the same kind, and thereby gains admittance into the City without resistance.

THE Army march'd that day six Leagues, and, at Sun-set, took up their Quarters in a place call'd Tezmeluca, which, in the Language of the Country, signify'd a Grove of Oaks. It was a considerable Town situate on the Mexican Confines, and in the jurisdiction of Guaxocingo, whose Cazique took care to provide sufficiently for all the Troops, and a particular Regale for the Spaniards. The day following, they continued their march in the Enemies Country with all necessary precautions. They receiv'd advice, that the Mexicans were assembled on the other side of a Mountain, whose Woods and Rocks, render'd the Passage to the Road of Tezeuco very difficult; and because they came not to that place till towards Evening, and it was not advisable to march thro' such broken mountainous Ground, when Night was approaching, the Army made a Halt, and lodg'd themselves as well as they cou'd, making great Fires, which were scarce sufficient to preserve them from the intemperate Cold.

EARLY in the morning they began to mount the Hill, and penetrate the Woods, keeping pace with the Artillery; but they had not march'd much above a League, when the Vanguard return'd with an account, that the Enemy had stop'd up the way with Trees laid a-cross, and sharp Stakes, which they had fix'd in the loose Sands to wound the Horses; upon which Hernan Cortez, who never lost any opportunity of encouraging his Men, said to the Spaniards aloud,

aloud, These valiant People don't seem very desirous to meet us, since they take so much pains to stop up the way to them: and without the least delay, he order'd two thousand Tlascalans to join the Vanguard, and clear the Road of all Impediments; which they executed with so much expedition, that the Rear of the Army scarce seem'd to stop. He likewise detach'd some Companies to search narrowly those places which seem'd proper for Ambuscades; and with all the Caution, that those signs of a neighbouring Enemy requir'd, the Troops continu'd their march two Leagues further to the top of the Mountain.

FROM this place they discover'd the great Lake of Mexico, and upon this occasion, Hernan Cortez put his Soldiers in mind of the prosperity and riches they had enjoy'd, as well as of what they had suffer'd in that City, mixing the good and bad, that he might animate them to Revenge by the incentives of Interest. They likewise discover'd several Fires in distant Towns, succeeding one another with some intermission: and tho' there was no doubt but these were Signals made on the discovery of the Army, they pursu'd their March, with little less Difficulty, and with the same Precaution; for the way continu'd very bad, and the Woods were so thick, that they had but little open Ground.

BUT after they had overcome this Difficulty, they discover'd, at a great distance, the Enemies Army, which took up all the Plain, without making any motion, seeming resolv'd to continue in a post, from whence they could easily make a retreat. The Spaniards rejoic'd at the opportunity of coming so soon to Action, and the Tlascalans did the same; but the Joy of the latter streight turn'd to Fury, so that Cortez was oblig'd to make use of his Voice, and the diligence of some of his Captains, to prevent their running into disorder through an eagerness to fight. The Mexicans were on the farther side of a great Barranco or Gap in the Earth, which must of necessity be pass'd. It was made deeper by a Brook, which gathering all the Waters from the Mountains, ran through it, and was, at that time, considerably swell'd. The Mexicans had a little wooden Bridge over it, for the use of Passengers, which they cou'd easily have broke down, but had left on purpose, as was afterwards suppos'd, that they might destroy their Enemies in that narrow Pass, thinking it impossible that they cou'd ever form themselves on the other side, when so vigorously oppos'd. After this manner they reason'd when they were at a distance from danger ; but when they discover'd the Army of Cortez, which they had not believ'd to be so numerous, their imagination was struck with less fantastic Notions. They wanted Courage to defend their Post, but desiring to affect a shew of Valour, or at least to conceal their Fear, they began to retire by little and little without turning their backs, seeming to distinguish betwixt a Flight and a Retreat.

CORTEZ advanc'd with speed, and when he came up to the Barranco, he esteem'd it a piece of good fortune that the Enemy had quitted it ; for notwithstanding the Spaniards found no Resistance, they had some Difficulty in passing it. He detach'd twenty Horse, and some Companies of Tlascalans, to keep the Enemy in play, without engaging farther, until such time as the rest of his Troops should be all pass'd ; but the Mexicans no sooner saw them drawing up on the other side of the Barranco, but they laid aside all their Policy, openly flying and dispersing, some betaking themselves to the most unfrequented Paths, and others seeking refuge in the shelter of the Mountains.

CORTEZ did not care to lose time in following the Chace, because 'twas of more importance to possess himself speedily of Tezenco ; and whatever delay'd that, was to be esteem'd a hindrance to the main Design. The Army, however, in their March, made some slaughter of the Mexicans who had absconded in the Woods. The same night the Troops quarter'd in a place newly forsaken by the Inhabitants, within three Leagues of Tezenco, where they doubled their Centries, and were, in a manner, all night under Arms. But the next day, at a little distance from that Town, they discover'd about ten unarm'd Indians, who were coming in haste along the Road with the appearance of Messengers, or Fugitives, and brought with them a Plate of gold, in form of a Flag, hanging to the top of a Lance, which was look'd on as a signal of Peace. The chief of them came as Ambassador from the King of Tezenco, desiring Cortez to spare his People and Country, acquainting him, that he desir'd to be his Confederate, for which end, he had provided good Quarters for all the Spaniards, in the City ; and, that the rest of the Nations under his command, should be supply'd with every thing that was necessary, without the Walls. Cortez, put some questions

questions to him, and as he came well instructed, he answer'd without hesitation; adding, that his Master had just reason to complain of the Emperor who then reign'd in Mexico, who was about to execute his Revenge upon him by some Extortions, and other Oppressions not to be endur'd, for his having refus'd him his Vote in his Election to the Empire, for which reason he was minded to unite himself with the Spaniards, as one of the most interested in the ruin of that Tyrant.

OUR Historians don't say, or at least, don't agree, whether the Brother of Cacumazin, whom we left Prisoner in Mexico, for conspiring against Motezuma and the Spaniards, reign'd at this time in Tezeuco. It has been already related how the Crown, and electoral Vote, were bestow'd on his Brother at the recommendation of Cortez; and 'tis very likely that the dispossess'd Prince reign'd at this time, and that the new Emperor might think it very proper to restore him, on the account of his being a declar'd Enemy of the Spaniards: which also seems agreeable with the distrust conceiv'd by Cortez; for he no sooner receiv'd the Embassy, but he step'd aside to confer with his Captains about the Answer. They all doubted the sincerity of the Proposition, and thought it was too much to be expected from an offend'd Prince; but that, nevertheless, since they had already resolv'd to make themselves Masters of that place by force of Arms, it ought to be consider'd as a piece of good fortune to have their entrance free, which first Difficulty they shou'd get over by accepting the Prince's offer; and that when once they were within the Walls, where they shou'd be as much upon their Guard as if they had taken the Town by Assault, they might act as occasion required. This determination being made, Cortez dispatch'd the Ambassador, bidding him tell his Prince, That he agreed to the Peace, and accepted the offer'd Quarters, being desirous to correspond entirely to the good Intelligence with which he had sought his Friendship.

THE Troops continu'd their March, and lodg'd themselves that night in one of the Suburbs of the City, or Village near adjoining; deferring their entry till next morning, that they might have the whole day before them for an Enterprize, which, according to the appearances, wou'd not be over in a few hours. One ground of this Suspicion was, their finding the place utterly forsaken by the Inhabitants ; and another, no less considerable, was the Cazique's not appearing, nor any body from him, to visit Cortez : but there was no sign of War, nor did any thing extraordinary happen, until at Sun-rise, Cortez made his Dispositions for attacking the Town, which he now thought unavoidable ; tho' in a little time he perceiv'd it to be unnecessary, for he found the City open and without defence. Some Troops advanc'd to seize on the Gates, which they did without Resistance. Hernan Cortez, in a readiness to fight, march'd thro' the Streets, still observing the appearances of Peace while he suspected War. He advanc'd in the best order he cou'd, till he came into a large Square, where he drew up the greatest part of his Men, and order'd the rest to possess themselves of all the Streets thereabouts. The Inhabitants, who appear'd in multitudes in several places as they pass'd along, seem'd frighten'd, and show'd in their Faces the uneasiness of their Minds ; and it was remark'd, that none of their Women were to be seen ; circumstances which help'd to confirm the first suspicions.

IT was thought proper to seize on the chief Temple, which, by its height, commanded the whole City, and from whence might be seen the greatest part of the Lake ; and for this Service, Cortez order'd Pedro de Alvarado, Christoval de Olid, and Bernal Diaz del Castillo, with some Fire-Arms, and a sufficient number of Tlascalans. They found that Post without defence, and from the top of the Temple, discover'd that great numbers of the Inhabitants were flying from the City, some by Land to the Mountains, and others in Canoes to Mexico, which plainly made appear the treachery of the Cazique. Cortez order'd him to be sought, and brought before him, but was inform'd, that he had retir'd some little time before to the Mexican Troops with those few of his Men who were willing to follow him ; who, as the Peasants said, were People of no account : for the Nobility, and the greatest part of his Vassals, abhor'd his Government, and stay'd behind, pretending they wou'd follow him. It was discover'd likewise, that he had resolv'd to treat the Spaniards well until he had gain'd their good Opinion, in order to take advantage of their Security, and introduce the Mexicans, who were to destroy them all in one night ; but when he was inform'd by his Ambassador of the great force Cortez brought with him, he wanted Courage to go on with his Design, and thought it more adviseable visable to retreat, abandoning the City, and his Vassals, to the discretion of his Enemies.

HERE Good-Fortune did as much as Industry and Valour could have done. Cortez desir'd to possess himself of Tezenco, an advantageous Post for a place of Arms, and necessary for his Enterprize; and the design'd Stratagem of the Cazique gave him a free Passage into the City without the least Dispute: his Flight remov'd the inconvenience of a continual Jealousy and Distrust; and the discontent of his Subjects facilitated the means of bringing them to be at his Devotion. When Affairs are to succeed, every thing hits right, and for this reason Fortunate is justly plac'd among the Attributes of a General, whose prudent Dispositions are executed by Valour, but whose Prudence and Valour are both beholden to Good-Fortune. This word Fortune was ill understood by the Gentiles, or not understood at all. They adored Fortune, as a Deity, tho' fantastical and undistinguishing, always blind and inconstant: but we understand by this Name, the free Gifts of Divine Beneficence: and thus the Idea of what is meant by prosperous Accidents, is rectified; Fortune reduced to its true Signification; and the Fortunate know the Spring of those Favours they receive.

C H A P. XI.

The Army being quarter'd in Tezeuco, the Nobles come and offer to serve in it. Cortez restores the Kingdom to the lawful Successor, leaving the Tyrant without any hopes to re-establish himself.

TH E first Care of Cortez, was, to remove the Apprehensions which the People of the Country were under. He order'd the Spaniards to treat them gently, endeavouring to gain their Affections since they ought to consider them as having already submitted ; and this Order was publish'd to the Confederate Troops with greater Preciseness by the Mouths of their Chiefs ; whose Obedience was the more remarkable, because they were now in an Enemy's Country, well practis'd in the Violences of War, and flush'd with the Presumption of being Conquerors : but such was their Respect to Cortez, that they not only repress'd their natural Ferocity and evil Customs, but familiariz'd themselves with the Inhabitants, publishing Peace to them both by their Words and Actions. The Soldiers quarter'd that Night in the Palaces of the fugitive King, which were so capacious that there was sufficient Lodgment for the Spaniards and part of the Tlascalans, and the rest were quarter'd in the neighbouring Streets, without entering into the Houses, that they might not incommode the Inhabitants.

THE next Morning some of the Idol Priests came to sollicite good Treatment for their Gods, returning thanks at the same time for that which they had already experienced. They also acquainted Cortez, that the Nobility of that City waited his Permission to come and make an offer of their Obedience and Friendship, which Cortez agreed to, without having any occasion to affect being well pleased ; for he very much desired what he granted. And, a little after, the Nobles came dress'd, as they used to appear, in their publick Solemnities, headed by a Youth of a genteel Mien, who spoke for the rest, and presented to Cortez this Troop of Soldiers, who came, he said, to serve in his Army, desiring to merit by their Actions a Shelter under the shade of his Ensigns; to which he added a few more Words, express'd with such a Force and Gravity, as gain'd him at the same time both Attention and Respect. Hernan Cortez heard him with Admiration, and was so taken with his Eloquence and good Behaviour (together with the advantage of this Offer) that without being able to contain himself, he took him into his Arms; but after having attributed this excess of his Content to the discretion of the young Man, he compos'd himself to return a sedate Answer to his Proposition.

THE rest came forward, and after the first Ceremonies of Respect were over, Cortez retir'd with him who came as their Leader, and some others of the principal Tezeucans; and calling for his Interpreters, was fully inform'd of all the Cazique's Dispositions in favour of the Mexicans, the Artifice with which he offer'd to quarter the Spaniards in the City, and the Cowardice with which he turn'd his back on the first rumour of Danger: And lastly, they inform'd him, that the Person of the Cazique was so much abhor'd by his Vassals, that instead of regretting his Absence, they rejoic'd at it as a Happiness: a Disposition which Hernan Cortez endeavour'd to confirm them in, because it import'd him much, to make advantage of this their Disaffection to their Prince, for the more secure Establishment of his place of Arms; and the Answer they return'd him was exactly agreeable to his Wishes. For the most Antient of the Nobles perceiving the end to which his Questions tended, inform'd him, That Cacumazin, Lord of Tezeuco, was not the rightful Owner of that Country, but one of the most monstrous Tyrants that Nature had produced, having kill'd his elder Brother Nezabal with his own Hands, and seized his Crown; that the Prince who, as first of all the Nobles, had address'd him in the name of all, was lawful Son of the murther'd King, and that either his Youth, or the Contempt the Tyrant had of him, had been his Security; that he, being sensible of the danger which threatned him, had so prudently conceal'd his Sense of the Injury done him, that his Dissimulation passed for want of Understanding; that all this Wickedness had been done with the

Know-

Knowledge and by the Assistance of the Emperor of Mexico, who reigned before Motezuma, and that the present Emperor supported Cacumazin in like manner, that he might make him his Instrument for the destruction of the Spaniards. But that the Nobles of Tezeuco mortally abhorred his Violences, and the common People could no longer endure his Government; for that instead of treating them like Subjects, he used them as his Slaves.

THUS did the old Man deliver his Thoughts, and Cortez had scarce heard him out, when it immediately occur'd to him what was fit to be done. He went up to the dispossess'd Prince with somewhat more of Respect, and placing him by his side, he call'd together the rest of the Nobles, who were expecting his Resolution; and commanding his Interpreters to explain aloud what he said, spoke to them after this manner. You have here before you, my Friends, the lawful Son of your lawful King. The unjust Master, to whose ill-acquir'd Power you pay a forc'd Obedience, seiz'd the Scepter of Tezeuco, with a Hand dy'd in the Blood of his elder Brother; and, as the art of preserving Dominion is unknown to a Tyrant, he has govern'd by the same Violence that he made himself a King; little caring how much he deserved the hatred of his Subjects, provided he made them fear him, and treating those like Slaves who bore with his Crimes. But at last, by basely abandoning of you in time of danger, and neglecting your Defence, he hath at once shew'd his own want of Courage, and put it in your power to redress your Misfortunes. I might, if I were not otherways inclined, take advantage of your defenceless Condition, and use the rights of War, by subjecting this City, which I hold, as you see, at the Pleasure of my Sword: but 'tis with difficulty that the Spaniards consent to do a hardship; and as he that did us the Injury, was not really your King, you ought not to suffer as his Vassals, nor for his Offence, nor ought this Prince to remain without the Kingdom, which Nature bestow'd upon him. Receive then from my Hand, the Prince whom you before received from Heaven. Pay him for my sake that Obedience you owe him as the Successor of his Father, and place him on the Throne of his Ancestors; for as I less regard my own Conveniency, than I do Equity and Justice, I desire his Friendship more than his Kingdom, and your Satisfaction, rather than your Subjection.

THIS Proposal of Cortez was receiv'd by the Nobles with great Applause. They were freed from their Fears, and at the same time obtain'd all that they desired. Some threw themselves at his Feet, extolling his Benignity, whilst others, more mindful of their natural Obligation, advanced to kiss the Hand of their Prince. The News was presently publish'd thro' the City, and the Satisfaction of the People appeared by their Acclamations, Dances, and Plays, such as they used on their Festivals, with all other accustomed Demonstrations of their mad Joy.

THE next day was appointed for the Coronation of the new King, which was celebrated with all the usual Ceremonies, and Solemnities. Hernan Cortez assisted at it, as Dispenser or Donor of the Crown, by this means sharing in the Applause of the People, and gaining a more absolute Empire over them, than if he had conquer'd them. This excellent piece of Conduct was one of those which justly acquir'd him the Character of a prudent General: for it was of the utmost importance to him to secure this City, in order to pursue his Enterprize upon Mexico; and he found the way of obliging the new King with the greatest of worldly Benefits: of interesting the Nobility in his Restitution, rendering them irreconcilable with the Tyrant: of gaining the common People, by his Equity and Disinterestedness; and lastly, of making his Quarters safe and secure, which by no other means, could have been effected. But his greatest Satisfaction was, that in redressing the Injury done to the young Prince, he followed the Dictates of right Reason; a Consideration to which he gave the preference before all the other Advantages which attended this part of his Conduct; it being much more agreeable to his Genius to do acts of Generosity, than strictly to pursue the Measures which Prudence might direct for his Interest.

C H A P. XII.

The new King of Tezeuco is baptized with publick Solemnity; Cortez marches with part of the Army to possess himself of the City of Iztapalapa, where he stands in need of all his Circumspection, to prevent falling into an Ambush prepared by the Mexicans.

HERNAN Cortez was applauded, and respected even to veneration among those People: The Nobles declared themselves his Friends, and, at the same time, Enemies to the Mexicans: The City was entirely re-peopled by the return of those Families which had retired to the Mountains; and the Prince himself was so submissive and obsequious to Cortez, that he not only offered his Troops, and to serve in Person in the War of Mexico, but also took his opinion in every thing he did: and, tho', when he was among his own People, he commanded as a King, yet when he came into the presence of Cortez he appear'd as a Subject, and respected him as his Superiour. He was about nineteen or twenty Years of age, and had the Capacity of a Man born in a Country less barbarous. Hernan Cortez took advantage of his good Disposition to introduce sometimes the Discourse of Religion; and found by his attention, and way of reasoning, a kind of propension to what was most safe, which gave him hopes of bringing him over to Christianity: for he was displeas'd with the barbarous Sacrifices of the Indians, thought Cruelty to be a Vice, and confessed that those Gods who were to be appeas'd with the Blood of Men, could not be Friends to Mankind. Father Bartolomé de Olmedo bore a part in these Conversations; and finding him not only wavering in his Errors, but inclined to the Truth, he brought him in a few days to be capable of receiving ceiving Baptism; the Ceremony of which was performed publickly, and with great solemnity, the Prince desiring to take the name of Don Hernando Cortez, in respect to his Godfather.

THEY were now at work upon the Canals which convey'd the Waters of the Lake to the City, and the Prince sent six or seven thousand of his Vassals to help to make them broader and deeper, according to the measure of the Brigantines. And Cortez at the same time, desiring to undertake something to facilitate the Enterprize upon Mexico, resolv'd to advance with part of his Forces to the City of Iztapalapa, six Leagues forwards, that he might deprive the Mexicans of that shelter for their Canoes, which very often came from thence and disturbed his Workmen; and partly to give the confederate Indians some Employment, who were kept quiet in the midst of this Idleness by pure force of Authority, and not without costing him a good deal of tiresome Attention and Care.

THE City of Iztapalapa (as we have already observed) was situate upon the same Cawseway by which the Spaniards made their first entry into Mexico; and dispos'd after such a manner, that the greatest part of the Buildings (which were above ten thousand Houses) was within the very Lake, whose Water was brought into that part of the Town, which was built on the Bank, by Trenches, with Sluices to let it in, as occasion required. Hernan Cortez charg'd himself with the care of this Expedition, and took with him the Captains Pedro de Alvarado and Christoval de Olid, with three hundred Spaniards, and ten thousand Tlascalans: and tho' the young King of Tezeuco was desirous to accompany him, he would not permit it, telling him, his Presence would be more useful in the City; the military Government of which he left to Gonzalo de Sandoval, and with both of them such Instructions as he thought necessary for the security of their Quarters, and to obviate the Accidents that might happen in his absence.

THEY presently began their March by the Cawseway, with a design to possess themselves first of that part of the City which was built upon it; and dislodge the Inhabitants from the other part with their Artillery and Fire-Arms, as occasion should offer. But the Enemy was immediately inform'd of their Motions; and the Army was no sooner come within sight of the place, than they discovered a Body of about

about eight thousand Men at a little distance from the Walls, who came out to defend them in the open Field, with so much Resolution, that, tho' they found themselves inferiour in number, they stood the Engagement, and fought with Bravery enough to retire with some Reputation; which they did in little time to the City, where, without staying to defend the Entrance, or shut the Gates, they instantly disappear'd, throwing themselves into the Lake in disorder, but with the same Cries and menacing Gestures which they used in fighting.

HERNAN CORTEZ was sensible that this kind of retreat had the appearance of a Stratagem to draw him into some greater Danger, and therefore marche his Army into the City with all possible Precaution; but he found all the Houses upon the Land utterly abandoned: and tho' the Noise and Cries of the Enemy continued in that part which stood in the Water; he resolv'd, with the Advice of his Captains, to maintain himself in the Post where he was, and lodge within the Walls, without attempting any thing farther, the Day being too far spent. But it scarce began to be dark, when they perceived the Canals every where to overflow, the Water running impetuously to the lower Grounds. Cortez immediately understood that the Enemy's Design was to drown this part of the City, which they might easily do, by opening the Sluices of the great Lake; and as the Danger was inevitable, he was oblig'd to give instant Orders to quit the place; and tho' they made all the haste possible, the Water came above their Knees.

CORTEZ was very much mortify'd, and dissatisfy'd with himself, that he had not prevented this Stratagem of the Indians, as if it was possible, with the utmost Vigilance, to provide against all Accidents, or human Foresight had not its Bounds. He drew out his Army into the Road of Tezenco, to which place he thought to retire, deferring the Enterprize of Iztapalapa to a more favourable Opportunity; for it was impracticable at this time, without a greater Force on the Lake-side, and some Vessels to drive the Mexicans from that place. The Troops lodged that Night as well as they could on a little Hill free from the Water; where, nevertheless, they suffered very much, being very wet, and without any Defence against the Cold; but in such good heart, that there was not the least Murmur heard among the Soldiers: And Cortez, who went among the Ranks

Ranks infusing Patience by his example, strove by threatening Discourses against the Enemy either to cover his own uneasiness at having been deceiv'd, or to divert the Soldiers from calling his Prudence into question.

AT the first appearance of day, he continu'd his Retreat, as was before resolv'd, and hastned the March of his Men, rather to keep them warm, than from any fear he had of a new attack; but as soon as it was broad day, they discover'd a Body of innumerable Enemies, which came in pursuit of the Army. Cortez, notwithstanding this, march'd on, but more slowly; his Design was to weary the Enemy by prolonging the Chace; tho' the Soldiers mov'd on very unwillingly: they all cry'd out to halt, that they might take satisfaction, some for the Affront, and others for the Hardships they had suffer'd, according to the different Passions by which they were animated; but all with a Spirit of vengeance against their Enemies.

WHEN Cortez thought it convenient, he order'd his Troops to halt and face about, and the Enemies began the attack with the same precipitation that they pursu'd; but the Spanish Cross-Bows (for the Powder having suffer'd by the Water, the Fire-Arms were of no use) and the Bows of the Tlascalans, gave a check to their first Fury, and at the same time the Horse charg'd them, making room for the Confederate Troops, who entirely broke that disorderly Multitude, and oblig'd them to leave the Field with considerable loss.

CORTEZ pursu'd his March, without stopping to make any further slaughter of the Fugitives, because he had a mind to reach his Quarters before night: but the Enemy, no less diligent in rallying than retiring, advanc'd a second and third time to the attack, without being in the least terrify'd with the great slaughter they had sustain'd; till such time, as fearing to approach too near to Tezenco, where the whole Strength of the Spaniards lay, they march'd back to Iztapalapa, sufficiently chastiz'd for their boldness, having lost in the three attacks, six thousand Men; and tho' Cortez had some wounded, he lost only two Tlascalans, and one Horse, who cover'd with Arrows and Cuts, yet liv'd to bring off his Master.

CORTEZ, and all his Army, celebrated this beginning of their Revenge, as a satisfaction for what they had suffer'd, and a little before night they enter'd the City of Tezcuco, with the Glory of three or four Victories obtain'd by the way, which gave a reputation to the Expedition, and cover'd the disgrace of the retreat.

IT can't be deny'd, but that the Mexicans laid their Design well: they sally'd out to provoke the Enemy; suffer'd themselves to be charg'd in order to engage them; feign'd a Retreat to draw them into danger; abandon'd their Houses, which they endeavour'd to lay under Water; and had provided a great Force to secure the Success. Let those who discredit this War with the Indians, now consider whether their Armies were, as they say, Herds of Cattle, and whether they wanted Understanding to make a Disposition, since they allow them a brutal Courage to execute. Hernan Cortez stood in need of his utmost diligence to escape their Snares, and not only admir'd, but even envy'd their well-concerted Stratagem; these Policies or Deceits by which Enemies are surpriz'd, being what Soldiers much glory in, esteeming them not only reasonable, but just; and more particularly, when the War is just in which they are practis'd: but in my Opinion, it is sufficient to call them, permitted, tho' in some respects they may be likewise stil'd, just, as when punishing carelessness and inadvertency, which are the greatest faults that can be committed in War.

C H A P. XIII.

The Provinces of Chalco and Otumba apply to Cortez for Relief against the Mexicans. He orders Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Francisco de Lugo, upon that Expedition; they overthrow the Enemy, and take some Prisoners of Rank, by whose means Cortez makes Propositions of Peace to the Mexican Emperor.

WHILST Cortez remain'd in Tezeuco, he receiv'd frequent Visits from the neighbouring Caziques and other Indians, who came to make their Submissions, and offer him the assistance of their Troops. They all complained of the Emperor's ill Treatment, by whose Soldiers they were oppress'd and plunder'd, and treated with equal Contempt and Inhumanity. Among the rest, there came at that time Messengers in great haste from the Provinces of Chalco and Otumba, with an account that there was a powerful Army of the Enemy upon their Frontiers, who had Commission to chastise and destroy them, for having made an Alliance with the Spaniards. They express'd a Resolution to oppose the Mexicans, and desired some Succour to assist in their Defence. This Request appeared not only reasonable, but necessary to be granted; for it import'd Cortez very much not to suffer the Mexicans to fix themselves in a Place where they might cut off his Communication with Tlascala, which was to be preserved at all hazards. He immediately dispatch'd Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Francisco de Lugo with two hundred Spaniards, fifteen Horse, and a sufficient body of Tlascalans, among whom there were some who had obtained Permission by their Importunity to retire to their own Country, and secure the Spoils they had acquired in the War; a Permission which Cortez thought fit to grant, because cause as he expected a fresh recruit of Troops from the Republick, it behoved him to allure those People by the hopes of Interest, and this show of Liberty.

THESE miserable Wretches having thus changed themselves from Soldiers into Porters, marched along with the Baggage of the Army, and as Avarice regulated the weight of their Burthens, they had so overloaded themselves, that they could not always keep up with the Troops, but were forced to stop sometimes to take breath. The Mexicans (who, with the Army they had upon the Lake, had planted several Ambuscades in the Fields of Maiz), being advertised of this, fell upon them in one of their resting Places, with a seeming design not only to plunder them, but by their great Cries, and forming their Battalions, to provoke the Spaniards to a Battle. Sandoval and Lugo return'd immediately to their Relief, and hastening their march, fell upon the Enemy so opportunely, and vigorously with their whole Force, that they turn'd their backs as soon as they were attacked.

FIVE or six Tlascalans, who were disarmed and embarrassed with their Burthens, perish'd upon this occasion; but the Spaniards recovered all the Booty with some additional Spoils of the Enemy. They continued their March, taking care not to leave again behind them those unuseful People; with whom they were incumber'd, till the Army having passed the Province of Chalco, approach'd the Frontiers of Tlascalala, where they separated from it to go and secure their Baggage, freeing Sandoval from any further care of their Defence.

THE Mexicans had assembled all the Troops of the neighbouring Provinces to chastise the Rebels of Chalco and Otumba; and knowing that the Spaniards were coming to the relief of those two Nations, they had reinforced themselves with part of the Troops quarter'd about the Lake; and having thus prepar'd a very formidable Army, had posted themselves on the Road the Spaniards were to pass, with a Resolution to try their Strength in the Field. Sandoval and Lugo being advertised of their design, and having given what Orders they thought necessary, advanced in order of Battle without altering their pace. But on sight of the Enemy, the Spaniards and Tlascalans halted, (the former with a calm Intrepidity, and the latter with an Impatience hardly to be restrain'd,) in order to examine more narrowly the Intention of that Body of Troops. The Mexicans had the Advantage in Numbers, and with the Ambition of being the first to attack, advanced in crowds according to their custom, and made the first discharge of their missive Weapons without any effect. The two Captains taking advantage of their Confusion (after they had receiv'd them with their Fire-Arms and Cross-bows) ordered the Horse to advance, whose Attack (always terrible to the Indians) immediately made room for the Spaniards and Tlascalans to enter, and break this disorderly Multitude with a very great Slaughter. The Flight of the Enemy soon became universal, and the Troops of Chalco and Otumba, which had sallied out of the neighbouring Town on the noise of the Battle, coming up at the same time, the Chase was so bloody, that the Mexican Army was entirely defeated, and the two Confederate Provinces succoured, with little or no Loss.

EIGHT of the most considerable Prisoners were reserv'd in order to get some Information from them, and the Army passed that Night to the City of Chalco; whose Cazique, after he had paid his Respects to the Spaniards, went before to prepare their Quarters, with great abundance of Provisions and Refreshments for all the Troops: Nor did he forget to have the Victory celebrated with Rejoicings after the usual extravagant manner of the People. The Inhabitants of Chalco, as Subjects of the Mexican Emperor, were Enemies to the Tlascalans, and had besides perpetual Disputes with them about the Bounds of their Frontiers; but this Night all their Quarrels were forgot at the desire of the Chalqueses, who own'd the Obligation they had to the Tlascalans for coming to their Relief, and were also sensible, that the means of preserving the Protection of Cortez, was to maintain a Friendship with his Confederates. The Spaniards were Mediators in the Treaty; and the Chiefs of both Nations being assembled, Peace was concluded with all the necessary Forms and Solemnities usual on such Occasions: Sandoval and Lugo undertaking to get it confirmed by Cortez, and the Tlascalans to have it ratified by the Republick.

THIS Affair being finish'd with so much Glory and Expedition, Sandoval and Lugo march'd back with the Army to Tezenco, accompanied by the Cazique of Chalco, and some other principal Indians, who desired to return Thanks in Person to the General for the Succour he had sent them, and to offer him what Troops the two Provinces could furnish.

nish. The Army was receiv'd at Tezeuco with great Acclamations of Applause, and Cortez honour'd the two Captains with particular Marks of his Approbation, without forgetting the Chiefs of the Tlascalans: he likewise caressed the Nobles of Chalco, accepting their Offers, and intimating that he would give them Notice when their Service would be necessary. After this, he ordered the eight Mexican Prisoners to be brought before him; he receiv'd them in the midst of his Captains, putting on an Air of Severity. They approach'd full of Fear and Confusion, showing in their Countenances a dejected Spirit, and a Mind ill-disposed to receive the Punishment, which, according to their own Customs, they believed inevitable. Cortez order'd them to be unbound, and desiring to make use of this opportunity to justify to his Allies the War, which he had undertaken, by making farther Advances towards a Peace, and at the same time to convince his Enemies of his Generosity, he spoke to them, by the help of his Interpreters, after the following manner: I might, according to the Custom establish'd in your Nation, and that kind of Justice upon which the Laws of War are founded, take Satisfaction of your Offences with Fire and Sword, treating you with the same Inhumanity with which you treat your Prisoners. But the Spaniards do not think, that the being taken in the Service of one's King is a Crime that deserves Punishment; for we know how to distinguish between the culpable and the unfortunate; and that you may be sensible of the difference between our Clemency and your Cruelty, I give you at the same time both Life and Liberty. Repair immediately to the Standard of your Prince, and tell him from me, (for as you are noble, you ought to observe the Law with which you receive the Benefit) that I am coming to demand Satisfaction of him for the unjust War he made upon me at the time of my Retreat from Mexico, perfidiously breaking that Treaty by which I obliged my self to leave the City; but chiefly to revenge the Death of the great Motezuma, the principal Motive of my Anger. Tell him I have an Army, not only augmented with a number of invincible Spaniards, but that I have likewise under my Command all the Nations who abhor the Mexican Name; and that in a little time I intend to seek him in the midst of his Court, bringing with me all the Rigours of a War that has Heaven to favour it, resolv'd never to lay aside so just an Indignation 'till I have laid all the Towns of his Empire in Ashes, and drowned the very Remembrance of his Name in the Blood of his Subjects: But that nevertheless, if for the avoiding his own ruin, and the desolation of his Country, he shall incline to Peace, I am ready to grant it upon reasonable Conditions; for the Arms of my King (like the Lightnings of Heaven) hurt only where they find resistance; and are always more ready to obey the dictates of Humanity, than the incitements of Revenge.

THE General having concluded his Discourse, appointed a Spanish Escort for the eight Prisoners, and ordered a Bark to carry them back by the Lake. The Prisoners, scarcely persuaded of their Good-fortune, threw themselves at his feet, promising to acquaint their Prince with his Overtures, and to contribute all that lay in their power, towards facilitating the Peace: but they did not return with any answer; nor did Hernan Cortez make these advances, with a belief that the Mexicans would incline to Peace, but for a further justification of the War he had undertaken, and to raise the reputation of his Clemency among the Barbarians; a Virtue useful to Conquerors, because it disposes favourably the Minds of those they design to subject, and being always amiable, even to Enemies, either gains the Applause of those who have the use of Reason, or forces a Respect from those who have it not.

C H A P. XIV.

Gonzalo de Sandoval conducts the Brigantines to Tezeuco. Whilst they are finishing, Hernan Cortez marches out with part of his Army to view the Borders of the Lake.

AT this time Cortez had an account that the Brigantines were finish'd, and Martin Lopez sent him word that he would quickly set forward with them, the Republick of Tlascalala having provided ten thousand Tamenes, or Carriers of Burthens; eight thousand to carry the Planks, Mafts, Iron-work, and other necessary Materials, and two thousand as a Relief for those who tired, without including in this number the Men who were employ'd in carrying Provisions and Ammunition; and fifteen or twenty thousand Soldiers, with their Officers, who waited this opportunity to join the Army. He sent word, that he intended to set out with these Forces next day, and that he wou'd stay in the last Town of the Tlascalans to expect a Convoy of Spaniards, not thinking it advisable to attempt the dangerous Passage thro' the Mexican Territories without a greater Force. These Brigantines were the only preparation wanting to lay close Siege to Mexico, and Hernan Cortez receiv'd this news with so much satisfaction, as caus'd a general Joy in the Army. He immediately order'd Gonzalo de Sandoval, with two hundred Spaniards, fifteen Horse, and some Companies of Tlascalans, to march and join the Forces of the Republick, that they might be in a condition to resist any attempts of the Mexicans.

ANTONIO DE HERRERA says, there march'd out of Tlascalala, with the Materials of the Brigantines, a hundred and eighty thousand Soldiers; which being so very unlikely, ly, we must believe it to be one of the Errors of the Pref. Bernal Diaz says fifteen thousand, which is much more probable, considering the Number of Tlascalans already in the Army. The Republick gave the Command of this Body to a Cazique of one of the Quarters of their City, whose Name was Chichemecal, a young Man of twenty-three Years of age, but of such a superiour Spirit and Courage, that they already considered him as one of the most considerable Captains of their Nation. Martin Lopez marched out of Tlascala, resolving to wait the Spanish Escorte in Gualipar, a Town but little distant from the Mexican Frontiers. Chichemecal was not pleased with this Delay, persuading himself that he had Force and Courage sufficient to defend the Convoy against all the Power of Mexico: However, he at last resolved to observe the Orders of Cortez, and thought this Instance of his Obedience a great Exploit. Lopez regulated the March, so that all went out of the Town in good Order; the Archers and Slingers, supported by some Pike-Men, marched in the Front; after whom came the Tamenes with all their Baggage; and the rest of the Troops formed the Rear: And after this manner they began that extraordinary Affair of carrying Vessels by Land, which (if it were permitted us to use Metaphors which are sometimes met with in History) might be said to begin now to float upon the Shoulders of Men, among the Waves formed by the different Movements, which the Inequality of the Ground occasioned. An admirable Invention of Cortez, then put in practice! but which, when related, looks more like a Dream than a Reality.

IN the mean time, Gonzalo de Sandoval set forwards for Tlascala, and stopped one day in Zulepeque, a small Town at a little distance from the Road; which refused Obedience, and was besides the very Place where those poor Spaniards of Vera Cruz, who were going to Mexico, were betrayed and murdered. He had orders, either to chastize or subject that Town in his March; but the Army had no sooner turned their faces that Way, than the Inhabitants abandoned the Place, and fled to the Mountains. Sandoval sent three or four Companies of Tlascalans, with some Spaniards, in pursuit of the Fugitives; and entering the Town, his Anger and Impatience increased at the lamentable Marks he met with of their past Barbarity: on one of the Walls he found these Words written with a Coal,

Coal, In this House the unhappy Juan Juste was taken, with many others his Companions. And a little after, in one of their Temples, he found the Heads of those Spaniards dried in the Fire to preserve them from Corruption: A dreadful Spectacle! which giving a fresh Idea of their terrible Death, made the Images and Representations of the Devil appear still more hideous. At this sight, Pity inspired them with Rage, and Sandoval resolved to march out with all his Men, and revenge that execrable Cruelty with the utmost Rigour. He had already given his orders, when the Companies which he had before detached, returned with a great number of Prisoners, Men, Women, and Children, having killed upon the Mountains all who endeavoured to escape, or did not immediately surrender. These miserable Wretches, bound, and almost dead with fear, testified their Repentance by Tears, and pitiful Outcries; they threw themselves at the feet of the Spaniards, and quickly moved them to compassion. Sandoval made his Officers intreat him, that the Prisoners might set the greater value upon their Pardon; and, in fine, he caused them to be unbound, and accepted their Submissions; the Cazique, and the most considerable Men among them, engaging for the whole Town, to be obedient to the King: of which Engagement they afterwards discharged themselves very faithfully, either through Fear or Acknowledgment.

AFTER this, Sandoval ordered his Men to gather up the miserable Remains of the sacrificed Spaniards, and give them burial, and continued his March to the Frontiers of Tlascalala, where he arrived without any considerable Accident. Martin Lopez, and Chichemecal, with the Tlascalans drawn up in rank and file, came forth to receive him. The two Armies saluted each other by Discharges and Shouts, and afterwards by Embraces, and particular Civilities. Some necessary time of Rest was allowed to the Troops newly arrived; after which, Sandoval directed the March, giving the Vanguard to the Spaniards and Tlascalans which came with him, the Main Body to the Tamenes, with sufficient Numbers to defend their Flanks; and Chichemecal with his Troops brought up the Rear: But the young Man was displeas'd that he was not placed in a more advanced Post; and his Discontent went so far, as to give Sandoval suspicion of his quitting the Army: so that he was oblig'd to go to him, and take some pains to satisfy tisfy him. He endeavoured to make him comprehend, that his Post was the most honourable, as being the most dangerous; for that in all probability the Mexicans would endeavour to fall upon the Rear. But this did not in the least satisfy him; on the contrary, he replied, That as at the Assault of Mexico, he intended to be the first that should set his foot within the Breach, he desired always to march in the Front, and give an example to his Troops: So that, in fine, Sandoval was obliged to march with him, to add to the Honour of the Rear. A remarkable Point of Vanity! and one of those which are wont to produce the greatest Inconveniencies in Armies; for the principal Duty of a Soldier is Obedience, and true Valour has its bounds prescribed by Reason, which always carries a brave Man to face the Dangers which approach him, with an unshaken Resolution, but doth not in the least oblige him to go to seek them.

THE Army marched in the same Order it at first set out, thro' the Enemies Country; and tho' the Mexicans showed themselves sometimes upon distant Hills, they did not venture to come to an engagement, but thought their Cries and Menaces a sufficient Exploit.

AT a little distance from Tezenco the Army made a halt, out of complaisance to Chichemecal, who desired some time of Sandoval to adorn himself with his best Feathers and Jewels, and ordered all his Officers to do the same; telling them, That as they were now drawing near to Action, Soldiers ought to celebrate such a Season as a Festival: A Rodomontade well enough becoming his Pride and Years. Hernan Cortez went out of the City, attended by the King of Tezenco and all his Captains, to receive this so much desired Succour; and after he had caressed the Chiefs, and allowed some time for the Acclamations of the Soldiers, he made his Entry with all Solemnity: The Tamenes marched in Files like the Soldiers; the Planks, Iron-Work, and other Materials were stored separately in a great Work-House, prepared for that purpose near the Canals. The whole Army rejoiced at the safe arrival of these Preparations so necessary for the Conquest of Mexico, which was equally desired by all. Cortez returned thanks to God, who rewarded the Piety of his Intentions with Hopes, or rather Assurances, of Victory.

MARTIN LOPEZ immediately applied himself to the second Part in the formation of the Brigantines, and had new Workmen appointed him for the joining of the Planks, and other Work belonging to the building of a Ship. But Cortez understanding by the Master-Workmen, that it would be at least twenty Days before the Brigantines could be fit for Service, he resolved to employ that time in viewing personally the Country about the Lake, and what Posts were fit to be seized, to prevent any Succours from Mexico; and withall, to do what damage he could to the Enemy in his March. He communicated this Design to his Captains, and it being approved by all, he immediately made a disposition to execute it; leaving Sandoval Governour of Tezcuco, with particular Orders to forward the building of the Brigantines. This Captain was qualified for every thing, and, by the multitude of Business in which Cortez employ'd him, he sufficiently showed the great opinion he had of his Courage and Capacity.

WHILST Cortez was considering what Officers and Troops to take with him on this Expedition, Chichemecal desired an audience; and without knowing that Preparations were making to take the field, told him, That Men like him, born for War, were ill satisfied with living idly in their Quarters, especially after having passed five Days without drawing the Sword: That his Men were refreshed, and desired to show themselves to their Enemy; and that, moved by their Instances, and the Ardour of his own Courage, he humbly requested to be ordered immediately upon some Expedition, wherein he might give proofs of his Valour, and divert himself with the Mexicans, until the time came of compleating their Destruction, at the Assault of their City. Cortez had already resolved to take him with him, but this unseasonable Vanity displeased him; and as he was not very well satisfied with his Behaviour upon the Road, (of which Sandoval had informed him) he answered him in a kind of raillery, That he had not only concluded upon an Action of importance, wherein he might assuage that Ardour which inflamed him, but that he was likewise resolved to accompany him, to be a witness of his Exploits. Cortez had a natural dislike to arrogant Boasters, true Valour being seldom seen without Modesty: nevertheless, he was sensible that these Transports of Bravery were proper to his Years, being the Effect of youthful Blood, and the common Fault of young

young Soldiers, who have met with Success in their first Tryals, and whose want of Experience makes them think Valour to be Fool-hardiness, and Fool-hardiness to be their Profession.

C H A P. XV.

Hernan Cortez marches to Yaltocan, where he meets with Resistance; he overcomes that Difficulty, and goes forward with his Army to Tacuba, and after having vanquished the Mexicans in several Engagements, makes his Retreat.

IT was thought proper to begin the Expedition by the taking of Yaltocan, a Town five Leagues distant from Tezeuco, upon one of the little Lakes which discharged itself into the great one. It was of importance to chastise the Inhabitants of this Place, because some few days before they had returned an insolent Answer, and wounded the Messengers who were sent to them with Offers of Peace, and to require their Obedience; and because their Punishment might have an influence upon the rest of the Indians thereabouts. Cortez began his March after having heard Mals, (whereat all the Spaniards assisted) leaving particular Instructions with Sandoval, and giving some friendly advice to the King of Tezeuco, Xicotencal, and other Chiefs of the Nations who stayed behind in the City. He took with him the Captains Pedro de Alvarado, and Christoval de Olid, with two hundred and fifty Spaniards, twenty Horse, and a splendid, numerous Body of the Nobles of Tezeuco. Chichemecal likewise attended him with his fifteen thousand Tlascalans, to which were join'd five thousand Men of those commanded by Xicotencal. They had not marched above four Leagues before they discovered the Mexicans drawn up in Order of Battel, and divided into several gross Battalions, with a design, as it seem'd, to defend in the open Field the Place threatned. But upon the first Discharge of the Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows, which was followed by an Attack of the Horse, they were put into such disorder, that being charged by the whole Army, they were utterly broken and defeated in so short a time, that it was scarce perceivable they made any resistance; the greatest Part saved themselves upon the Mountains, others threw themselves into the Lake, and some retreated to the Town of Yaltocan, leaving a great number of Dead and Wounded upon the Field of Battel, and some Prisoners, who were immediately sent to Tezeuco.

THE Assault upon the Town was deferred till the next Day, and the Army possessed themselves of some Houses that stood near, where they passed the Night without any extraordinary Accident. When Day appear'd, they found the Difficulty of the Enterprize greater than they imagined; the Town was situated in the very Lake, and had a communication with the Land by a Causey, or Stone-Bridge, the Water being likewise easily forded in that Place: but the Mexicans who guarded that Post, had broke the Causey, and had besides made a Ditch so deep, that it was impossible to pass over it any other way than by swimming. Cortez advanced full of assurance to carry the Place at once, and when he found this unhappy Obstacle in his way, he was for a while both confounded and vexed; but the Railleries and Scoffings with which the Enemy celebrated their Security, made him see that he could not desist from his Undertaking, without manifest hazard to his Reputation.

HE was contriving how to fill up the Ditch with Fascines and Earth, when one of the Indians of Tezeuco gave him to understand, that a little higher up there was a Shoal, where the Water scarce covered the Ground. Cortez took the Man along with him for a Guide, and immediately marched to the Place: The Depth of the Water was try'd, and though found greater than was related, yet not unfordable. He ordered two Companies of about fifty or sixty Spaniards to make the experiment, with such a number of the Allies as he thought necessary to make head against the Troops he saw advancing to dispute the Passage. He remained himself on the Shore, with his Army drawn up,

up, that he might send succour as occasion required, and secure the Field against any Eruption of the Mexicans.

THE Enemy perceiving that our Army was going to gain this Passage, which they had endeavoured to conceal, advanced to defend it with their Slings and Arrows, wounding some Soldiers, and giving enough to do to those who fought in the Water, which in some places took them up to the middle. Near the Town there was a pretty large Plain, free from Water, and our Men with Fire-Arms, who marched in the Front, were no sooner landed, but the Enemy retired into the Place, and in the little time that the rest of the Detachment were coming a-shore, they entirely quitted it, throwing themselves into their Canoes with so much haste, that the Spaniards entered the Town without opposition. The Pillage did not last long, (tho' permitted, as a part of the Chastisement) because the Inhabitants had left nothing in their Houses, but what they could not carry off; some Loads, however, of Corn and Salt were transported to the Army, together with a great Quantity of Cotton-Clothes, and some slight Jewels of Gold, which the Owners either forgot, or despised. The Captains had no orders to keep possession of the Town, but to punish the Inhabitants; and therefore staying only so long as was necessary to perform their Commission, they re-passed the Ditch at the same Place, having first set fire to the Temples and principal Buildings. The General approved of this Conduct, believing that the Flames of this Place would strike terror into the Fugitives, and be a warning to the neighbouring Towns of the Danger that threatned them.

THE Army continued their march, and lodged that Night near Colbatitlan, a considerable Town, which the next day they found dispeopled. The Mexicans shewed themselves, but in a Place where they could neither attack, nor be attacked. The same thing happened at Tenayuca, and afterwards at Escapuzalco, large Towns situate upon the Lake-side, which they also found forsaken. The Army lodged a Night in each of them, and Cortez took exact notice of the Distances, and of whatever else might be useful to his Design, without suffering any damage to be done to the Buildings, that it might be seen he used rigour only where he found resistance. The City of Tacuba was not above half a League distant from this last Place, and disputed with Tezeuco for largeness, and number of In-

Inhabitants. It was situated upon the extremity of the great Causeway, where the Spaniards had formerly suffered so much, and was a Post of great importance, as being of all the Towns upon the Lake, the nearest to Mexico, and the Key of the Road which the Army must necessarily pass, in order to form the Siege of that Capital City; but at the present the General had no thoughts of possessing himself of it, by reason it was too far from Tezcuco for Succours to come to him from thence. His Intention was only to view it, and to consider attentively what measures of Prevention and Caution were to be taken, when the time came, of chastising the Cazique for his former Injury; whose exemplary Punishment would be of great use to quell the Insolence, and facilitate the Subjection of the Inhabitants.

THE Army advanced in the same good Order as if they were marching to a much more difficult Enterprize, and before they arrived at the Place, they discovered a great Body of Troops, without number, composed of those Mexicans who had all along observed the march of the Spaniards, and of others who were appointed to assist the Garrison of Tacuba. The City not being able to contain all these Troops, they were desirous to attempt the defence of its Walls, by a Battel in the open Field. All their Battalions advanced at once, and charged with so much fierceness, and such loud cries, as might have given concern to Men less acquainted with the deceitful Appearances of their first Attacks; but having received the Discharge of the Fire-Arms (which always struck more terror than it did hurt) and being farther terrified by the Horse, they were easily disordered, so that the rest of the Army coming up, routed their Van-Guard, and pierced to the very Center of the Multitude; notwithstanding which, they obstinately disputed the Victory for a considerable time: but at last they all turned their backs, the greater part flying to the City, and the rest taking different Paths, with no other thought, but how to avoid the Danger.

THE Spaniards remained Masters of the Field of Battel, and employed the remaining part of the Day in chusing an advantageous Post, where they might lodge themselves during the Night; but at break of day the Enemy appeared again in the Field, with a design to retrieve the Honour they had lost the day before. The General ranged his Troops,

Troops, and giving the same Orders he had done the preceding day, overthrew them with greater facility, as having their former Defeat and Flight fresh in their Memory.

CORTÉZ push'd them with Sword and Pike into the very City, and following close at their heels with the Spaniards and some Companies of the Allies, maintain'd the Fight in the inner part of it, until, night approaching, he drew off his Troops to their former Lodgment; permitting the Soldiers to plunder some Houses they had taken possession of, and leaving them in Flames, partly to show his Indignation, and partly to keep the Enemy employ'd, that he might make his retreat without opposition.

CORTÉZ remain'd five days in his Post near Tacuba, where the Enemy made him a visit every day, and were always beat back to the City. His Intention was to waste the Garrison by these Sallies, and, finding by the abatement of their Ardor, and the faintness of their Efforts, that their numbers were greatly diminish'd, he resolv'd to attack them in his turn. Orders were already given, and every thing dispos'd for the Assault, when he saw a very considerable Body of Mexicans advancing upon the Causey. It was necessary to defeat this Succour before he cou'd carry on his Designs against the Town. He resolv'd therefore to expect them at a distance from the Causey, that he might engage them, when they were all drawn up upon the main Land, and make the greater slaughter of them in a place where they would be so streightned in their retreat; but these Mexicans had orders (and it was said, from the Emperor Guatimozin) to send some Troops before the rest, who suffering themselves to be charg'd, and then retreating, should entice the Spaniards to the pursuit and endeavour to draw them upon the Causey. This Design they compass'd with notable dexterity; for some of them advancing in disorder to the main Land, and forming themselves after a confus'd manner, Cortez mistook their contriv'd Stratagem for the Effect of Fear, and leaving part of his Army to make head against the Garrison of Tacuba, march'd directly to the Causey, supposing that he should easily rid himself of these Enemies, and so be able to return to the Assault upon the City. The Mexicans, who were advanc'd upon the firm Land, turn'd their Backs upon the first approach of the Spaniards, and fled to join the rest of their Troops; the whole Body of which, as seemingly ingly terrify'd, retir'd by little and little, in order to draw the Spaniards upon the Causey. The General, led away by these favourable appearances, pursu'd them without making sufficient reflection; for it was not long since the accident of Iztapalapa, nor could he be ignorant, that by these feign'd Flights the Indians often drew their Enemies into Ambuscades; but the frequent repetition of Victory (sometimes dangerous to Conquerors) did not, at that time, permit him to consider all the Circumstances that distinguish between a pretended and a real Fear.

THE Mexicans rally'd and made head when they perceiv'd Cortez and his Troops within the Causey, and whilst they endeavour'd to keep him in play by their resistance, innumerable Canoes sally'd out of Mexico, and invested both sides of the Causey, so that the Spaniards were at once attack'd both in Front and Flank. Cortez being now sensible of his Imprudence (though somewhat late) found it necessary to retire, withholding his Men from advancing further upon the Causey, and making a Front to the Canoes on each side. The Enemies were furnish'd with Pikes very dangerous, some of them being arm'd with the points of the Swords taken from the Spaniards the night of the retreat. Many of our Men were wounded, and they were very near losing a Colours; for in the heat of the Fight, Ensign Juan Volante fell into the Lake, by a blow of a Pike, and the Indians, who were nearest, seizing upon him, put him into a Canoe with a design to present him to their Emperor: He suffer'd himself to be carried away, feigning to submit; but when he found himself at a sufficient distance from the rest of the Canoes, he recover'd his Arms, and disingaging himself from those who guarded him, by killing some of them, he threw himself into the Water, and swam ashore with his Colours, with equal Bravery and Good-fortune.

CORTÉZ, with Sword in hand, expos'd himself to the greatest dangers, and brought off his Troops with little loss to the firm Land; having sufficiently reveng'd himself upon the Indians for their deceit in drawing him upon the Causey; upon which, and in the Lake, their loss was as great as they could have sustain'd in a fair and open Battle: but judging it rashness to return to the Enterprize upon Tacuba, in spite of the Mexican Reinforcement (which always kept in view) he thought of retiring to Tezeuco, which, with the approbation of his Captains, he presently put in execution. The Mexicans did not venture to quit the Cause or their Canoes, 'till such time as the distance of our Army, gave them Courage to follow afar off; contenting themselves with sending forth great cries, in which fruitless Fatigue, all their Revenge ended. This Expedition was of great Importance, as well for the Damage done to the Mexicans in the several Engagements, as for the Knowledge the Spaniards gain'd of this part of the Country, of which it would be necessary afterwards to make themselves Masters. And altho' our Historian endeavours to obscure the Glory of it, it was of such great Consequence to Cortez, with respect to his main Design, that he no sooner arrived at Tezeuco, but the Caciques of Tucapan, Mascalzingo, Autlan, and of other Towns upon the North-side of the Lake, came to make their Submission, and offer the Assistance of their Troops. A sure sign that the Spaniards came back with Reputation, which is an Acquisition of the greatest Advantage in War, and which gains upon the Minds of Men what Force of Arms cannot obtain without great Difficulty.

C H A P. XVI.

A Fresh Succour of Spaniards arrives at Tezeuco. Sandoval marches to the Relief of Chalco; defeats the Mexicans twice in the open Field, and takes the Towns of Guastepeque and Capistlan.

THE Prosperity of so many Successes was almost an evident Proof, that Heaven was interested in the Conquest of this Empire; nor could some favourable Accidents, wherein human Diligence had no share, be possibly thought to come from any other hand, being so well adapted to present Necessity, and so much beyond yond all Expectation. A Vessel of considerable burthen, sent to Hernan Cortez, arrived at this time at Vera Cruz and in her Julian de Alderete, Native of Tordesillas, with the Character of the King's Treasurer; Father Pedro Melgareio de Urrea, a Regular of the Order of St. Francis, born at Seville; Antonio de Caravaial, Geronimo Ruiz de la Mota, Alonzo Diaz de la Reguera, and several other Soldiers of distinction, with a very considerable Succour of Arms and other Necessaries. They immediately marched to Tlascala, (the Ammunition being carried on the Shoulders of Zempoallan Indians;) and there they had an Escort given them to conduct them safe to Tezenco, they themselves carrying thither the first News of their Arrival.

Bernal Diaz del Castillo says, That this Vessel came directly from Spain: and Antonio de Herrera, who makes mention of it, does not say who sent it, desiring perhaps to conceal his Ignorance by that Omission. It seems very unlikely that it should come to Cortez from Spain, without bringing Letters from his Father and his Agents; and more especially at a time when they might have informed him of the good Success of their Negotiations, which account, according to these Authors, he did not receive 'till a long time after. I am inclined to believe, as more probable, that it came from Santo Domingo, whose Governours Cortez had inform'd of the Difficulties he was engaged in, as has been before observed; and the coming of a Treasurer for the King, does not in the least conclude any thing to the contrary: for it was properly within the Jurisdiction of those Governours to name such Officers as were to collect the Fifth, due to the Emperor; and their Authority extended over all those Conquests. But from whence soever this Succour came, it could not have arrived more opportunely; nor did Cortez miss to discern the true source of it, attributing to God not only his good Fortune in the Augmentation of his Forces, but the very Vigour of Mind, which he perceived in himself, and that marvellous Constancy, which tho' agreeable enough to his natural Courage, yet seem'd to him at this time the immediate Effect of a heavenly Influence.

At this time there arrived Messengers, dispatch'd in great haste to Cortez, from the Caziques of Chalco and Thamanalco, to demand Succour against a powerful Army, which the Enemy were providing in Mexico for subjecting the Towns

Towns of their Districts, which adhered to the Interests of the Spaniards. Guatimozin had a great Inclination to Arms, and as appeared by other parts of his Conduct, applied himself intirely to the Arts of War. He was continually contriving means to get the Victory over his Enemies, and had considered that there was no better way to compass his Design, than by seizing on that Frontier, whereby he might cut off the Communication with Tlascalala, and prevent any Succours coming from Vera Cruz; a Point of so much Consequence, that Cortez found himself absolutely obliged to protect these Allies, to whose Fidelity he owed the Preservation of this necessary Pass free from the Mexicans. He immediately dispatch'd Gonzalo de Sandoval to their Relief, with three hundred Spaniards, twenty Horse, and some Companies of Tlascalala and Tezcuco, amounting to such a number as he thought sufficient, the Troops of those Provinces being already in Arms.

SANDOVAL made no delay, but march'd with so much diligence, that his Succour arriv'd very opportunely: the Caziques had assembled all their Troops, which, joined to those of Sandoval, made a very considerable body. The Enemy was not very far off, their Army having lodg'd the Night before at Guaštepeque, and it was resolv'd to attack them before they enter'd upon the Territories of Chalco. In the mean time, the Mexicans depending upon the Number of their Forces, and having learnt that the Spaniards were come to the support of the Chalqueses, possessed themselves of some Barancas or hollow Ways, in order to wait the coming of our Troops in a place where they might be secure against the Horse. The Spaniards were sensible of the Difficulty, when they came to the Charge, and Sandoval stood in need of all his Resolution and all the Valour of his Troops to dislodge the Enemy from that Post, which they did with Sword in Hand, but not without some Loss: for on this occasion died bravely fighting a Spanish Soldier, call'd Juan Dominguez, much esteemed in the Army for his singular Skill in the managing of Horses.

THE Mexicans lost a great number in this Dispute; however, they thought themselves strong enough to rally and draw up upon the Plain: But Sandoval having soon overcome the difficulty of the Passage, attack'd them so briskly, that he broke them before they could form. The Van-guard of the Enemy continued the Fight for some time with desperate Fury; and if their Resistance had lasted a little longer, this Combat might have been call'd a Battle: but this disorderly Multitude soon gave way, and dispers'd, and the Spaniards followed the pursuit with so much Vigour, that the Mexicans lost the greatest part of their Troops. Sandoval remained Master of the Field, and chose a place for his Army to halt in, and take a little Rest, resolving to advance that Night to Gnastepeque, whither the greatest part of the Fugitives were retired.

BUT scarce had the Troops began to enjoy the repose they so much wanted for the Recovery of their Strength, when the Scouts, who had been sent out to view the Avenues, return'd, and gave the Alarm so warmly, that it was necessary to form the Army with all Expedition. A body of fourteen or fifteen thousand Mexicans were advancing in good Order, and were so near, that the Spaniards could hear the sound of their Drums and Horns. These Troops were suppos'd to be sent as a Reinforcement to those which had march'd from Mexico before, because it was impossible for the latter, who had been entirely broken, to have form'd themselves in such good Order in so short a time, nor was the bold Air with which they advanced, consistent with the Terror of such a Defeat. The Spaniards advanced to receive these new Comers, and attack'd them so seasonably, that putting their Front in disorder, they made way for the Horse to charge without any Risk; who according to custom made such a Slaughter of the Enemy, that they were soon oblig'd to turn their Backs, flying in Confusion to the Town of Gnastepeque, where they believ'd themselves in Security; but the Spaniards followed them so close (killing all they overtook) that they entered the place at the same time with the Fugitives, and maintain'd the Entrance, till the rest of the Troops coming up, they divided themselves into the several Streets, and with Sword in Hand drove the Enemy out of the Town: The Mexicans lost great Numbers by their obstinate Resistance, and the rest who fled, were so terrified, that in a little time there was not one to be seen thereabouts.

THIS Town was so large, that Sandoval was resolv'd to quarter there that Night, and the Spaniards with the greatest part of their Allies lay under cover. The Victory was the more joyful, because the Soldiers were allow'd to plunplunder, provided they took nothing that was burdensome, or would embarrass them in the use of their Arms. The Cazique of the Town, and some of the principal Inhabitants, came a little after, and made their Submission, excusing what was past by the force put upon them by the Mexicans, and shewing their Sincerity by coming unarm'd, and surrendering themselves to the discretion of the Conquerors. The Spaniards receiv'd them courteously, and after Sandoval had sent out to view the Country, which was found quiet; he resolv'd, with the Approbation of his Captains, to make his Retreat: but the People of Chalco, who had better Spies abroad, receiv'd advice that the Mexicans, who had escaped from the past Engagements, were all joined in Capistlan, and protested to him that to retreat now was to leave them in the same danger from which he came to deliver them. Upon this News, he thought it necessary to go and disperse this Body of Fugitives, before they should be reinforced with fresh Troops.

CAPISTLAN was but two Leagues distant from Guatepeque on the side of Mexico. The Town was strong by Nature, being seated upon the top of a great Rock, difficult of access; with a River on the other side, which running with rapidity from the neighbouring Mountains, wash'd the Precipices of the Rock. When the Troops came up, they found the Mexicans prepar'd for their defence, and that they had cover'd all the top of this Eminence with Soldiers; who celebrated their security with loud Cries, and discharging some Arrows, not so much to wound, as to irritate the Spaniards: Sandoval resolv'd to drive the Enemy from this Post, that he might leave the neighbouring Provinces free from any fear of a new Invasion; and finding there were only three ways by which he could make the attack, which were equally difficult, he order'd the Troops of Chalco and Tlascalala to advance first, as People more accustomed to those rugged Passes. But they did not obey with the same readiness they us'd to do, showing by the slowness of their motion, that they thought the difficulty of this Undertaking superior to their Force; so that Sandoval, impatient of delay, threw himself into the danger at the head of the Spaniards, which so animated the Indians, that, finding by this Example the unreasonableness of their Fear, they advanc'd by the most diffidifficult parts of the Rock, mounting it with more ease than the Spaniards, and fighting with equal bravery. The way was so steep in some places, that they could not make use of their Hands, without fear of their Feet slipping, and the Stones which the Enemy roll'd down from the top, wounded more than their Darts and Arrows: nevertheless the Fire-Arms, and Cross-Bows, clear'd the way for the Pikes and Swords, and the Assailants, by their valour and constancy, forcing their way against all opposition, gain'd the top of the Hill at the same time that the Mexicans were retiring into the Town, so dispirited, that they scarce made a disposition to defend it, or defended it so weakly, that they were driven to the edge of the Precipice, where all that did not fling themselves down were put to the Sword; and the slaughter was so great upon this occasion, that for a while (according to the most exact relations) there ran streams of Mexican Blood into the River, in such abundance, that the Spaniards who went down to quench their thirst, were oblig'd to refrain from drinking, or to do it with horror.

SANDOVAL had his Armour broke in two places by Stones, and some Spaniards were very much wounded; among whom, Andrez de Tapia, and Hernando de Osma, were the most considerable, or best deserv'd to be remember'd. The Confederates suffer'd most; because that part of the Rock by which they attack'd was very difficult to mount, and they ran upon the Danger more precipitately.

SANDOVAL having gain'd three or four Victories in so short a time, and the Mexicans being defeated and chas'd out of those Provinces that needed the Protection of his Arms, he began his March the next day for Tezeuco, by the same Road he came, and arrived there without any Opposition.

As soon as the News of his Retreat was brought to Mexico, the Emperor sent a new Army against the Province of Chalco, which plainly shewed the great desire he had to cut off the Spaniards Communication with Tlascalala. The Chalqueses had news of this Invasion, at a time when they cou'd have no dependance but upon their own Arms; and assembling in haste the Troops they had ready, with those they could get from their Allies, they took the Field with more Resolution than formerly, and observing a better Order in the disposition of their Men. The two Armies advanc'd towards each other, and fighting with equal Bravery, the Battle was long and bloody; but in the end the Chalqueses gain'd the Victory, and tho' they lost great numbers in the Action, they slew more of the Mexicans, and remain'd masters of the Field. The news of this Victory was receiv'd with great applause at Tezeuco; and Cortez was particularly pleas'd to find that his Allies were in a condition to support themselves, and that their own Forces were sufficient to defend them. This happy Success was principally owing to their Valour, but the Order and good Discipline which they observ'd in the Fight, did much contribute to the Victory, and it was of great Importance to those People to have been Conquerors in other Battles, wherein they lost the Fear they had conceiv'd of the commanding Nation, and by the help of the Spaniards, had discover'd the Secret, That Mexicans could be beaten like other Men.

C H A P. XVII.

Cortez marches out of Tezeuco, to view the Lake on the side of Suchimilco: He has two dangerous Engagements with the Enemy, who had fortified themselves upon the Mountains of Guastepeque.

CORT' E Z could have wish'd, that Sandoval had not return'd without penetrating as far as Suchimilco upon the Lake, which was but a few Leagues distant from Guastepeque, it being of great Importance to take a View of that City, where there was a very broad Causey, which join'd the principal ones that led to Mexico. And as the finishing of the Brigantines would still take up some Time, he resolv'd to employ it in this Expedition. He also consider'd the Advantage of covering the Passage to Tlascala, and animating the People of Chalco, who seem'd apprehensive of new Invasions. Cortez charg'd himself with the execution of this Design, taking with him Christoval de Olid, Pedro de Alvarado, Andres de Tapia, and Julian de Alderete, with three hundred Spaniards, and such Troops of Tezenco and Tlascala as he judg'd necessary, supposing he should find the Cazique of Chalco, with his Allies, in Arms.

IN his Absence, he left the Military Command with Sandoval, and the Civil with the Cazique Don Hernando, who was always Submissive and Affectionate; and tho' his Age and Genius inclin'd him to more active Employments, he had sufficient understanding to know, that it was more meritorious to obey.

HERNAN CORTEZ set out from Tezenco, on the 5th of April, 1521, and hearing no News of the Mexicans, march'd with so much diligence, that he arriv'd the next Night at Chalco, where he found the Confederate Caziques assembled in the City, and under an Alarm, because they did not expect any Succour from the Spaniards, and had discover'd on the Side of Suchimilco a new Army of Mexicans, much stronger than any of the former, who were coming with a Design to ravage and possess themselves of their Country. The Demonstrations of their Joy were equal to the Trouble they were in before: They threw themselves at the feet of the Spaniards, and lifted up their Eyes to the Heavens, to the favourable Disposition of which, (according to their Ideas) they attributed this sudden Change of their Fortune. Cortez intended to make use of their Arms, and therefore leaving them in the Opinion, that he was come only to succour them, he did what he could to recover them out of the fright they had conceiv'd, and by applauding their Victory, to give them a high conceit of their own Bravery.

THESE Caziques had their advanc'd Centrys and some Spies in the Enemies Country, who passing the Word from one to another, gave Notice continually of the Enemies Motions; and by this means they understood, that the Mexicans, being inform'd of the Arrival of the Spaniards at Chalco, had made a Halt upon the Mountains, which were in the Way, dividing their Troops, to garrison some Fortresses on the Tops of those Eminences that were most difficult of Access. This Conduct of the Mexicans might have been design'd, either to conceal the Number of their Troops,

Troops, till such time as Cortez should retire, that they might afterwards fall upon his Allies; or, what seems more probable, to wait the coming of their Enemies, in a Place where they had the Advantage of the Ground: But in both these Cases it seem'd absolutely necessary to attack them in their Fortifications, that no time might be lost in marching to Suchimilco.

WITH this resolution the Army marched the same night to a Town, deserted by its Inhabitants, at the Foot of the Mountain, where it was join'd by the Troops of Chalco and of the adjacent Country: A numerous Body of good Soldiers, which animated the rest of the Nations, who were advancing to the Defilées in some concern. At the first appearance of the Day, they began to enter the Mountains, by a narrow and difficult Path, between two ridges of Rocks. Some Mexicans, who came to provoke the Spaniards, showed themselves upon the Tops of the Rocks on both sides. The Army march'd slowly on, filing off, as the Nature of the Ground required, 'till they came to a Plain, at an opening of the Hills, which at some distance closed again. Here Cortez form'd his Men as well as he could, having discover'd on the highest Eminence a considerable Fortrefs, where the Enemy had lodg'd themselves in such numbers, as might have struck a Dread, tho' in a less advantageous Post. Their design was to provoke the Spaniards, and draw them on to the Attack, in the midst of those Precipices, where the difficulty of the Way was no less dangerous than the Arms of the Enemy.

CORTEZ was stung to the quick by the insulting raileries of the Enemy, who laugh'd at his Delay, nor could he bear, with Patience, their reproaching the Spaniards with Cowardice; so that giving way to Anger (seldom a good Counsellor) he march'd his Troops to the Foot of the Mountain; where, without staying to chuse the least difficult Path, he ordered two Companies of Musqueteers and Cross-Bows, to advance to the Attack, under the Command of Captain Pedro de Barba, accompanied by some Soldiers of particular Distinction, who voluntarily offer'd themselves, among which was our Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who not satisfy'd with the Reputation of Valour he had already establish'd, put in for a share in every difficult Undertaking.

THE Mexicans retired as the Spaniards mounted the Hill, feigning to be in some disorder, that they might entice them them on to the most dangerous part of the Precipice; which they had no sooner effected, but they returned, with most horrible Crys, letting fall from the Top such a terrible Shower of great Stones and entire Rocks, as barr'd up the Way, after having born down every thing it met with. This first charge did great damage, and it would have been much greater, if Ensign Christoval del Coral, and Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who advanc'd before the rest, had not retir'd to the hollow of a Rock, and advis'd the rest to halt, and leave the Path, it being impossible to go on, without falling into greater danger. The General was sensible, that there was no continuing the Attack that way, and fearing they would all have perish'd, sent them Orders immediately to retire, which they did with the same Danger. This Action cost the Lives of four Spaniards; Captain Pedro de Barba was hurt, and many others wounded. Cortez was inwardly fretted at this disgrace, as being in effect owing to his own imprudence; but in publick he call'd it the Chance of War, hiding the weaknes of his Excuses with menaces against the Enemy.

HE strait resolv'd to advance with some of his Captains, in search of a less dangerous Path, whereby to gain the top of the Mountain: And to this resolution he was equally carried, by a desire of revenging his loss, and by the inconveniency of continuing his march with the Enemy at his back. Nevertheless, he could not put this design in execution; for at the same time he discover'd an Ambuscade, which gave him an opportunity of coming sooner to an Engagement. A Body of the Enemy's Troops, which had been posted on the other side of the Mountain, coming down and possessing themselves of a Wood near the Road, watch'd an opportunity to charge the Rear of the Spaniards when they should see them engag'd in the Defilées; and had also given notice to those above, to come down and attack the Van-guard at the same time: And this Stratagem of the Barbarians shows, what Masters Hatred and Malice are, in the Arts of War.

HERNAN CORTEZ caused his Troops to make the same movement, as if he design'd to continue his march, laying open his Flanks to the Mexicans in Ambuscade, and when he thought they were secure, turned short upon them: But they fled so nimbly, and were so favoured by the thicknes of the Woods, that he did them little damage; and perceiving at the same time, that the Fugitives took the Road

Road of Guatepeque, he detach'd his Cavalry for the pursuit, and made the Infantry advance some Paces. This Motion serv'd to discover that the Mexicans above had abandoned their Fort, and were following the March of the Spaniards by the Tops of the Mountains; so that the Inconvenience of leaving the Enemy behind, now ceasing, the Army pursued their way without any other opposition, than the Cry of the Enemy, till about a League and a half forward, they came to another Fortrefs like the former, which the Mexicans had garrison'd; and tho' their Cries and Menaces sufficiently provok'd the General, it was too near Night, and he had a fatal Experience too fresh in his Memory, to engage with them a-new, without further precaution.

HIS Army encamped near a little forsaken Village on the Top of an Eminence, from whence they could discover the neighbouring Mountains. The Soldiers suffer'd very much in this Place for want of Water, and Thirst was an Enemy, alone sufficient to disturb their Hours of Rest. In the Morning they found relief from some Springs which were not far from the Camp; and Cortez commanding the Army to follow him, advanced to view the Fortrefs of which the Enemies had possessed themselves, and found it more inaccessible than the former: for the Road in going up made several Turns, and was throughout expos'd to the Darts of the Enemy. But observing another Eminence within Musket-shot, which the Enemy had neglected, he commanded Verdugo Barba and Alderete, to mount with the Musketeers, and seize it, in order to embarrass the Mexicans in their Defence of the other Hill. This was presently put in execution, by taking a Road covered from the Enemy, who frighted at the number of Men who were kill'd by the first discharge of the Fire-Arms, thought only of retiring to a considerable Town joining to their Fortrefs. The Spaniards below guess'd the truth of what had happened by the ceasing of the Enemies Cries; and as they were preparing for the Attack, discovered from the neighbouring Height, that the Mexicans had entirely abandoned their Fort, and were flying to the distant parts of the Country: so that Cortez thought it unnecessary to take a view of that Post, which he did not design to keep, and was of no Importance after it was quitted by the Enemy.

BUT before the Army renew'd their March, they discovered several Women on the top of the Hill, calling out for Peace, hanging out white Cloths, which they waved up and down, and accompanying these with other signs of Submission, that obliged Cortez to send for them. The Cazique immediately came down, and offer'd his Obedience, submitting not only the Fort where he resided, but the other also which they had left behind, and which belonged to his Jurisdiction. He made an Apology with the air of a Man that spoke Truth, and laid all the blame of the Resistance the Army had met with upon those Mountains on the Mexicans, who were too powerful for him. Hernan Cortez admitted his Excuses, either that he believ'd them true, or that he thought it not a proper time to examine them strictly. The Cazique seem'd very much concern'd that he should pass through his Territories without receiving the Submission of his Vassals; and Cortez, to satisfy him, was oblig'd to send two Companies of Spaniards to take possession in the Name of the Emperor, according to the custom observed at that time.

AFTER this Ceremony was over, which did not detain them long, the Army march'd on to Guatepeque, a populous Town, which Gonzalo de Sandoval had left in Peace, and which they found as full of Inhabitants, and as well stock'd with Provisions as if it had been a time of Peace, or they had suffer'd nothing by Oppression from the Mexicans.

THE Cazique with the principal Inhabitants came to wait upon Cortez, to assure him of his Obedience, and invite him to accept of a Lodging he had prepared for the Spaniards in his own Palace, and other Lodgings in the City for the Commanders of the Confederate Troops; promising to supply the rest with all necessary Provisions, which he accordingly performed with great Prudence and Liberality.

HIS Palace was so sumptuous a Building, that it might vye with those of Moteczuma, and so large, that all the Spaniards were lodged in it with ease. In the Morning he carried them into a Garden he kept for his Diversion (nothing inferior to that of Iztapalapa) whose Spaciousness and Fertility the Spaniards greatly admir'd, because it far exceeded their Expectation, and was afterwards spoke of as one of the Wonders of that new World: It was above half a League long, and near as much in Breadth; the Ground was level and uniform, and regularly divided into Plats, with with all the Fruit-Trees and Plants, which that Country produced, with several great Ponds which received the Water of the neighbouring Mountains, and several Squares after the manner of Parterres full of Flowers and medicinal Herbs, cultivated with great care and placed in exact order; the Work of a powerful Lord, who had a taste of Agriculture, and had studied to heighten the Beauties of Nature with the Ornaments of Art.

CORTÉZ endeavour'd to engage this Cazique in his Interest by some Presents; but receiving Advice, as he was entering into the Garden, that the Enemy were expecting him at Quatlavaca, (a Town lying in the way he was to pass) he took but little pleasure in the Beauties of the Place, and gave Orders for the Army immediately to march, not without some Concern that he had staid longer than he ought. For such is the Nature of Care, with great difficulty to admit of Interruption, and if for a while diverted, to return again with greater violence.

C H A P. XVIII.

The Army passes on to Quatlavaca, where the Mexicans receive a new Defeat; from thence to Suchimilco, where Cortez surmounts a great Difficulty, and is in danger of being lost.

QUATLAVACA was a populous Town, strong by Nature, situate between Barrancas, or breakings of the Earth above eight Fathoms deep, which serv'd as a Ditch to the Place and Passages for the Water that descended from the Mountains. The Army arrived at this Place after having subdued all the Towns which lay in their way without any difficulty. The Mexicans had cut down the Bridges, and cover'd the Banks with such a number of Soldiers, that the Passage seem'd impossible. But Cortez drew up his Army

Army at a convenient distance, and while the Spaniards and Confederates endeavour'd to divert the Enemy with their Fire-Arms and Arrows, he went to view the Barranca; and finding it at some distance lower much narrower, he immediately ordered two or three Bridges to be made of Trees cut at the Root, which reach'd from one side to the other, and which laid together as well as was possible, made a way, tho' somewhat dangerous, for the Infantry to pass. The Spaniards of the Vanguard leaving the Tlascalans to keep the Enemy in play, immediately pass'd over and form'd a Battalion on the other side of the Ditch, which was continually augmented by the other Allies. But the Mexicans who were quickly sensible of their Negligence, poured down upon those that had passed with so much Resolution, that they had much to do to keep their ground; and the Success had been very doubtful, if Cortez had not opportunely arrived, followed by Olid, Alvarado, and Tapia, who whilst the Foot were getting over, had found out a Passage for the Horse, which tho' a very difficult and dangerous one, was of great use in the extream danger to which the Spaniards were reduced.

THE Horse wheel'd about in order to charge the Mexicans in the Rear, which they did, assisted by some Foot brought to their Succour by Bernal Diaz del Castillo; who push'd on by his Courage, had passed the Ditch by the means of two or three Trees which were fallen down by their own weight, and lay a cross the Barranca. Several Spaniards quitted the Skirmish to follow the Example of Diaz, as did a considerable number of Indians, who all mixed with the Horse when they made their Charge.

BUT the Mexicans, who now saw the danger that threatened them in the midst of their Fortifications, gave themselves for lost, and dispersing, sought only to escape in the best manner they could to the Mountains. They lost great Numbers, both in the defence of the Ditch, and in their Flight; nevertheless the greatest part saved themselves among the Rocks and Precipices, where it was not possible to pursue them. The Town was found entirely abandoned, but with good store of Provisions, and some Spoils, which were given to the Soldiers. A little after, the Cazique and some of the chief Inhabitants who were willing to submit, called to the Spaniards from the further side of the Ditch, desiring leave to return to the Town; and prepare Quarters for the Troops;

Troops ; which was immediately granted, and they were of use afterwards, rather by the notice they gave of the Enemy's Motions, and by their Knowledge of the Country, than for any want the Spaniards had of their Offers, or any dependance they had on their Excuses, the neighbourhood of Mexico keeping them in a necessary Subjection:

EARLY the next Morning the Army took the Road of Suchimilco, a Place which deserved the name of a City, seated on the edge of a Fresh-Water Lake, which had a communication with the great Lake ; the Buildings were partly on the Land, and partly in the Water, where a great number of Canoes served them to pass from place to place : It was of great importance to take a view of this Post, which was within four Leagues of Mexico : but the March was very troublesome ; for after they had passed a Defilée three Leagues long, they came into a barren dry Country, where the Soldiers suffered very much for want of Water ; the Fatigue of the March and the Heat of the Sun increasing their Thirst to such a degree, that at their entrance into a Forest of Pines, they were insensible of any Relief from its Shade.

NEAR the Road they found some Houses within the Jurisdiction of Suchimilco, built for Farm-Houses, or for Pleasure, by the Inhabitants of that Place. Here the Army lodged, and enjoyed that Night the Rest and Refreshment they so much wanted. The Enemy had purposely quitted them, to wait the Spaniards in a stronger Post. Cortez drew up his Army in order of Battel at break of day, and began his march, expecting to meet with a good deal of difficulty in his present Enterprize ; it not being likely that the Mexicans would leave Suchimilco, a Post of so great importance, and so near to Mexico, without a strong Garrison, especially since all those who had escaped from the past Engagements, were retired to that Place.

HIS Conjectures proved right, for the Enemy (the relation of whose Numbers may be true, but shall be omitted as improbable) had drawn up their Battalions in a Plain at some distance from the City, having a great and rapid River in their Front, which discharged itself into the Lake. They had double-lined the Banks of this River, and disposed their main Body for the defence of a wooden Bridge, which they would not cut down, having barricaded it with Planks and Fascines, and supposing, that tho' this of their Men upon the Field: But it appeared, by the resistance they made, that they were led by valiant Commanders; and the Dispute was so warm, that the three Spanish Captains were wounded, besides a considerable number of Spanish and Tlascalan Soldiers.

THIS happy Success made Hernan Cortez Master of the Field, and of all the Streets and Buildings upon the firm Land, and having placed sufficient Guards on the Water-side, he lodged his Troops in great Porticoes, near the principal Temple; which having a sort of a Wall capable of resisting the Arms of the Mexicans, seemed commodious for the Repose of the Soldiers, and the Cure of their Wounds. At the same time he ordered some Companies to mount, and view the Top of the Temple, which being found forsaken, he posted an Officer, and twenty or thirty Spaniards in the upper Court, with orders to be alert, and to relieve the Centries often, that they might observe every thing that passed both by Land and by Water: A very necessary Precaution, and of which the Usefulness was soon experienced! for at the close of the Evening, they gave notice, that they had discovered on the Side of Mexico, above two thousand armed Canoes, that advanced with all the speed their Oars would permit; by which timely Advice, the Spaniards were enabled to prevent the Dangers of the Night, by doubling their Guards at the Landing-Places; and in the Morning they saw the Enemy disembark at a great distance from the City, in appearance about fourteen or fifteen thousand Men.

HERNAN CORTEZ went out to receive them, chusing an advantageous Piece of Ground for his Horse, and leaving a good Part of his Troops for the defence of his Quarters. The two Armies quickly drew near, and the Mexicans began the Charge, but upon receiving the first Fire, they gave ground; so that the rest of our Troops coming up Sword in Hand, and charging them briskly, they soon turned their backs, and fled; and the whole Action was rather a Chace than a Victory.

CORTEZ continued four Days in Suchimilco, for the Recovery of his Wounded, the Troops never quitting their Arms, because the Neighbourhood of Mexico made it easy for the Enemy to send Succours from thence; and even when they were free from those Alarms, the Apprehension of them was sufficient to fatigue the Soldiers.

THE Day appointed for the Retreat came, which was executed, as had been resolved; the Enemy still continuing their Persecution, and sometimes advancing to seize the difficult Passes, in order to disturb the March: but this Opposition was easily overcome, and with considerable Advantage; and Hernan Cortez returned to Tezcuco, with the satisfaction of having obtained the two Ends he proposed by this Sally, the Knowledge of Suchimilco (a Place of importance to his Designs) and breaking the Force of the Enemy, in order to their weaker defence of Mexico. However, he was inwardly dissatisfied and melancholy for having lost nine or ten Spaniards in this Expedition; for, besides those that were killed at the first Assault of the Mountains, the Mexicans took three or four alive at Suchimilco, as they were pillaging one of the Houses in the Water; and two of his Servants, who fell into an Ambuscade, by imprudently separating from the Army. What mightily increased his Concern, was the Circumstance of their being taken alive, in order to be sacrificed upon the Altars of the Indian Idols; and their Misfortune recalled to his Mind his own past Danger (when in the Enemy's power) of dying after the same abominable manner. But he always made reflections too late on the Importance of his Life; for when a time of Action came, he consulted only the Motions of his Valour, and postpon'd the hearing of what Prudence might remonstrate, to another time.

C H A P. XIX.

A Conspiracy of some Spaniards against the Life of Cortez, is punished by the Death of a Spanish Soldier ; and a Sedition of some Tlascalans, by the Death of Xicotencal.

THE Brigantines were now in a condition to be launched, and the Canal had Depth and Capacity sufficient to receive them: All other necessary Preparations went on with vigour; great Quantities of Arms were made for the Indians, an exact account taken of all the Stores in the Magazines, and all the Artillery was proved. The Day was appointed for the Confederate Caziques to appear at the Rendevouz with their Troops; and particular care was taken to bring Provisions continually to the Place of Arms, partly for the sake of the Ransoms or Trafficking, and partly as the Discharge of an Obligation the Confederates were under. The General looked into the most minute Matters that related to the carrying on of the War, wherein great Dangers are often occasioned by small Faults, and therefore a very extensive Prudence is required.

BUT whilst Hernan Cortez had his thoughts employed in these Affairs, a new Accident happened, which gave him much trouble, try'd his Valour, and was a convincing Proof of his Judgment: A Spaniard, who had been long in the Service, came to him full of concern, and desired to speak with him in private; when that was granted, he informed him, that during his Absence, a Conspiracy had been formed against his Life, and the Lives of all his Friends. The Author of it (as he said) was a private Soldier, dier, of very small note, as may be supposed, since the first time we hear of his Name is with his Crime. He was called Antonio de Villafana, and his first Intention was to get off from that Enterprize, the Difficulties whereof to him appeared insuperable. He shewed his Uneasiness at first by murmuring, and soon proceeded to dangerous Resolutions. He, and those of his Faction, blamed the General for his obstinate Pursuit of that Conquest, declaring they would not cast themselves away, to gratify his Rashness, and talking of returning to the Island of Cuba, as of a thing very easy to be performed. They met to consult about this Point with much Secrecy, and tho' they found no great difficulty in quitting the Camp, and passing as far as Tlascala, by virtue of a supposed Order from the General, the Inconvenience of going to Vera Cruz (which was unavoidable, in order to embark) immediately occurred: for there they could not pretend a Commission or Leave from Cortez, without a Pass under his Hand, nor avoid the Danger of being cast into a Goal, and severely punished. This put them to a non-plus, and yet they persisted in their Resolution of withdrawing themselves, without fixing on the Way how to compass it.

ANTONIO DE VILLAFANA, at whose Quarters they held all their Assemblies, at last proposed, that all might be brought to pass, by killing Cortez and his chief Counsellors, and electing another General in his room, who had not set his heart so much upon the Conquest of Mexico, and who would be more governable; under whose Command they might retreat, without the name of Fugitives, and give it the turn of a piece of service to Velasques, by whose Representation of it to the Court of Spain, it might be esteemed as a Service done to the King. They all approved of the Project, and embracing Villafana, the Tumult began, by applauding the Sedition: they immediately drew up a Writing, signed by all that were present, whereby they obliged themselves to follow Villafana in the execution of this horrible Attempt; and this Affair was managed with so much dexterity, that the Numbers of those who signed, increased considerably: and it was to be feared, that the secret Contagion might break out into such an Evil, as would admit of no Remedy.

THEY had agreed to feign a Pacquet from Vera Cruz, with Letters from Spain, and to give it to the General, when he was at table with his Companions, all of them going in together, under colour of hearing the News; and that whilst Cortez was employed in reading the first Letter, they should make use of that Opportunity to murder him and all his Friends with their Ponyards; after which, they were to go out, and proclaim Liberty in the Streets, which they thought was sufficient to make the Army declare for them, and put to death the rest that were suspected. The Persons they had marked out for Destruction, according to their blind Notions, were Christoval de Olid, Gonzalo de Sandoval, Pedro de Alvarado, and his Brothers, Andres de Tapia, the two ordinary Alcaldes, Luis Marin, Pedro de Ircio, Bernal Diaz del Castillo, and some other Soldiers, Favourites of the General. They had agreed to chuse Francisco Verdugo for their Captain General, because he had married a Sister of Diego Velasques, and therefore they thought he might be easily brought over, and was the properest Person to support and credit their Party. But as they knew he was a Man of Honour, and an Enemy to Injustice, they durst not acquaint him with their Design, till the Crime was once committed, when they concluded he would be obliged to take upon himself the Employment, to prevent greater Evils.

SUCH was the account given by the Soldier, who begged his Life as a Reward of his Fidelity, for he was one engaged in the Conspiracy. Hernan Cortez resolved to assist in Person at the seizing of Villafana, and at the first measures that were to be taken, to convict him of his Crime; because the clearing up, or obscuring of the Truth, usually depends on these first Steps. The Importance of the Affair required no less Precaution, and it was no time to observe the slow Proceedings of judiciary Forms. He went immediately to secure Villafana, attended by the two Alcaldes, and some of his Captains, and found him in his Quarters, with three or four of his Accomplices. The trouble he was in at the sight of his General, was his first Conviction; and Cortez, after he had ordered him to be put in Irons, caused all to retire, pretending to examine him in private; when, making his advantage of the account that had been given him, he took out of his Bosom the Paper signed by all the Conspirators. He read it, and found found the Names of some Persons, whose Infidelity very much increased his Concern; but concealing it from his Friends, he caused the Soldiers, who were found with Villafana to be put into another Prison, and then withdrew, leaving Instructions with the Officers of Justice, to proceed upon his Tryal with all possible speed, without taking any notice of his Accomplices. There was not much to do in it; for Villafana being convicted by the seizing of his Paper, and believing that his Friends had betrayed him, immediately confessed his Crime: whereupon they proceeded against him by the Rules of military Justice, and condemned him to die, which Sentence (after allowing him the necessary time for discharging his Duty as a Christian) was put in execution that very Night, and the next Morning he was seen hanging at the Window of his own Lodging; so that the Punishment was seen at the same time that the Cause of it was published, the Guilty being struck with Fear, and the rest with an Abhorrence of the Crime.

CORTEZ was equally afflicted and provoked to see the Number of those concerned in the Conspiracy; but it was no proper time to satisfy Justice by the loss of so many Spaniards at the beginning of his Enterprize; and therefore to avoid punishing the Guilty, and at the same time the Inconveniences of Impunity, he gave it out, That Villafana had swallowed a Paper, torn in pieces, which he believed contained the Names or Hands of the Conspirators. Soon after, he assembled his Captains and Soldiers, and gave them a summary Account of the horrid Design and Conspiracy of Villafana against his Life, and the Lives of many there present; adding, “ That he thought himself very happy in “ not knowing whether he had any Accomplices; tho’ the “ great care Villafana took to destroy that Paper he carried “ in his Bosom, made him suspect he had some; but that “ he did not desire to know them: and only intreated his “ Friends to enquire whether the Spaniards had any Com“ plaint to make of his Proceedings: because he was desi“ rous, above all things, to give entire Satisfaction to his “ Soldiers, and was ready to correct his own Faults, as “ he knew how to use the Rigour of Justice, when the “ Lenity of his Punishments made them lose their In“ fluence.”

AT the same time he ordered the Soldiers, that had been taken with Villafana, to be set at liberty; and this Declaration of his Mind, confirmed by the Care he took to shew no Change in his Countenance to those who had offended, fully persuaded them that he was ignorant of their Crime; and they afterwards served with extraordinary Care, to remove any Suspicions of their Fidelity.

IT was a very important Act of Prudence to conceal that Paper of Subscriptions, to avoid losing so many Spaniards, of whom he stood in need at that time; but it was a greater Action to conceal his Indignation, so as not to give them the least Occasion of Distrust. It shewed that his Reason was free, and that he had an absolute Command of his Passions. However, not thinking such an excessive Security, which lays Care asleep, and seems to invite Danger, to be consistent with Discretion, he then ordered twelve Men for the Guard of his Person, commanded by an Officer; and 'tis likely he made use of this Opportunity, that the People might, without Surprize, see this new Addition to the Support of his Authority.

SOON after, he was perplexed with another Affair, which tho' of a different sort, had yet some Circumstances of Sedition: for Xicotencal, who commanded the first Troops that came from Tlascalala, either upon some Disgust, which may easily be supposed, considering his haughty Temper, or that he still preserved in his Mind some Remains of his former Enmity, resolved to leave the Army: Assembling some Companies, which, upon his earnest Intreaty, offered to stand by him. He took the advantage of the Night for his Retreat: and Hernan Cortez, who was presently informed of it by the Tlascalans themselves, was much concerned at a Behaviour of such dangerous Consequence, of so considerable a Commander among those Nations, at a time when he was just ready to put his Designs in execution. He sent some noble Indians of Tezeuco after him, to persuade him to return, or at least to stay till he had heard what he had to offer; but the Answer of Xicotencal, (which was not only resolute, but discourteous, and with Contempt) so provoked Cortez, that he immediately sent three Companies of Spaniards, with an additional Force of Tezeucan Indians and Chalqueses, with Orders to take him Prisoner, or kill him in case of Resistance. The latter was put in execution, for he made an obstinate Defence to the last; and the Tlascalans, who followed him contrary to their own Inclination, shewed but little Resolution upon this Occasion, sion, and returned with the Spaniards to the Army, leaving their Commander hanging upon a Tree.

THUS Bernal Diaz del Castillo reports this Action; but Antonio de Herrera says, he was brought to Tezenco, and that Hernan Cortez, by virtue of a Power from the Republick of Tlascal, hanged him publickly in the City: which is not so likely, because he might have run a risque among so great a Number of Tlascalans, who could not but resent the Affront of so shameful a Punishment, inflicted on the Person of one of the first Men of their Nation.

SOME say that the Spaniards sent after him by Cortez had private Orders to kill him, which seems to me the safest Resolution could have been taken; but which way soever it was done, the extraordinary Foresight and Prudence of the General in managing this Affair cannot be denied, since neither the Tlascalans of the Army, nor the Republick, nor even his own Father, made the least Complaint for his Death; for having been informed some days before, that the young Man so far forgot himself as to speak ill of his Conduct, and endeavoured to discredit among those of his Nation the Enterprize upon Mexico, Cortez sent an Account of it to Tlascal, desiring they would recall him, upon pretence of employing him elsewhere, or make use of their Authority to correct his Disorders: And the Senate, in which his own Father was present, answered, That according to the Laws of the Republick, whosoever was guilty of Mutiny in the Army deserved Death, and that he might proceed against him with the utmost Rigour if he found it necessary, as they would do both against Xicotencal and all that followed him, if they returned to Tlascal. This Permission gave Cortez full Authority to punish Xicotencal, yet he suffered his Insolence for some days, in hopes to reduce him by gentle means. But we are more inclined to believe that he was put to death without the City of Tezenco, according to the Relation of Bernal Diaz; for Cortez very well knew the Difference between the Sight of an Action of so much Severity, and the Relation of it after it was done: it being an evident Maxim, That the strongest Impressions upon the Mind, are those which affect the Eye; whereas those received by the Ear, have neither the like Strength, nor Liveliness.

C H A P. XX.

The Brigantines are launched, and the Army divided into three Parts for attacking the City at the same time, by the Causeways of Tacuba, Iztapalapa, and Cuyoacan. Hernan Cortez advances upon the Lake, and defeats a great Fleet of Mexican Canoes.

LH O' these Accidents employed some part of the Cares of the General, he did not omit any thing that was necessary for the carrying on of his main Design. The Brigantines were launched by degrees, a Work happily brought to a Conclusion by the Industry of Martin Lopez. Before the launching, they celebrated a Mass of the Holy Ghost, at which Cortez received the Communion with all the Spaniards. The Priest blessed the Hulls, and gave each of them its Name, according to the Custom of the Sea; and whilst they were carrying on board the Sails, Rigging, and whatever else was wanting, Cortez reviewed his Spaniards under Arms: they consisted of nine hundred Men, of which a hundred four-score and fourteen were Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows, the rest were armed with Sword and Buckler, and Lance; eighty six Horse, and eighteen Pieces of Cannon, the three largest of Iron, and the other fifteen Falconets of Brass, with sufficient Stores of Powder and Ball.

CORTEZ put five and twenty Spaniards on board each Vessel, under the Command of a Captain, with twelve Rowers, six on each Side, and one Piece of Artillery. The Captains were Pedro de Barba, Native of Sevill; Garcia de Holquin of Cazeres, Juan Portillo of Portillo, Juan Rodriguez de Villefuerte of Medellin, Juan Jaramillo of Salvatierra in Estremadura, Miguel Diaz of Auz an Aragonian, gonian, Francisco Rodriguez Magarino of Merida, Christoval Flores of Valencia de Don Juan, Antonio de Caravaxal of Zamora, Geronimo Ruiz de la Mota of Burgos, Pedro Briones of Salamanca, Rodrigo Morejon de Lobera of Medina del Campo, and Antonio Sotelo of Zamora, who immediately embark'd, each one prepared to defend his own Vessel, and succour the rest.

THINGS being thus disposed for the Entry by the Lake, Cortez resolved, with the Approbation of his Captains, to possess himself at the same time of the three principal Causeways of Tacuba, Iztapalapa, and Cuyoacan, without regarding that of Suchimilco, that he might avoid separating his Troops too far, and post them where they might receive his Orders with least Difficulty. To this end, he divided his Army into three Bodies, and committed the Expedition of Tacuba to Pedro de Alvarado, with the Title of Governor and Commander in Chief of that Avenue: He had under his Command a hundred and fifty Spanish Foot, and thirty Horse, in three Bodies, led by the Captains Jorge de Alvarado, Gutiere de Badajoz, and Andres de Monjaraz, with thirty thousand Tlascalans, and two Pieces of Artillery. The Attack of Cuyoacan was committed to the Colonel Christoval de Olid, with a hundred and sixty Spanish Foot, in three Companies, under the Command of Francisco Verdugo, Andres de Tapia, and Francisco de Lugo, with thirty Horse, two Pieces of Artillery, and thirty thousand confederate Indians. Lastly, he gave the Charge of the Attack of Iztapalapa to Gonzalo de Sandoval, with an hundred and fifty Spaniards, commanded by the Captains Luis Marin, and Pedro de Ircio, with two Pieces of Cannon, twenty four Horse, with all the Troops of Chalco, Guaxocingo, and Cholula, amounting to above forty thousand Men. In this Number of Indians who served at the three Attacks, we follow the Opinion of Herrera, for Bernal Diaz del Castillo allows no more than 8000 Tlascalans to each of the three Captains, and repeats it sometimes, that they were rather an Hindrance, than any Advancement to the Service; without telling us what became of so many thousand Men as came from all Parts to the Siege of that City: which plainly shews the Vanity he had of attributing all the Glory of the Action to the Spaniards, in our Opinion without much Discretion, because it renders that incredible, which he would endeavour to extol, when the Truth it self need- ed no Addition.

OLID and Alvarado marched together as far as Tacuba, where they were to separate, and took up their Quarters in that City without any Opposition, the same being then abandoned, as were all the other Towns upon the Lake, the Inhabitants that were able to bear Arms, being all gone to Mexico, to defend their Capital, and the rest retired to the Mountains, with what Effects they could carry off. There they had Intelligence, that the Mexicans had formed a considerable Body within half a League of the Town, to cover the Aqueducts which came from the Mountains of Chapulteque. Guatimozin took this seasonable Precaution, as soon as he received News of the Motions of the Spaniards, to preserve those Conveyances which supplied all the Fountains in the City with fresh Water.

THERE appeared on that side two or three Rows of Pipes, made of Trees hollow'd, supported by an Aqueduct of Lime and Stone, and the Enemy had cast up some Trenches to cover the Avenue to it. But the two Captains marched out of Tacuba with most of their Troops; and tho' they met with a very obstinate Resistance, they drove the Enemy from their Post, and broke the Pipes and Aqueduct in two or three Places, and the Water took its natural Course into the Lake. Thus Olid and Alvarado began the Siege of this famous City, by cutting off their Water, obliging the Mexicans to seek it at a Distance, in the Brooks that ran from the Mountains, and to employ their People and Canoes in Carriage and Convoys.

WHEN this was over, Olid marched on with his Party, and took his Post at Cuyoacan; and Cortez allowing what time he thought sufficient for Sandoval to reach Iztapalapa, took upon himself the Command on the Lake, that he might oversee every thing, and carry Relief where it should be necessary: He had with him Don Fernando, Lord of Tezeuco, and his Brother, called Suchel, a young Man of Spirit, who was baptized soon after, and took the Name of Carlos, as a Subject of the Emperor. Cortez left a sufficient Number of Troops in that City, to cover his Place of Arms, and make some Excursions to secure the Communication of his Quarters. Having disposed all things after this manner, he embark'd, drawing up his thirteen Brigantines gantines in a Line, adorning them with Flags and Streamers, and whatever could add to the outward Show, and surprize the Enemy by the Novelty.

HIS Design was to draw near to Mexico, and shew himself Lord of the Lake, and afterwards to fall upon Iztapalapa, being under some Concern for Gonzalo de Sandoval, who had no Vessels to dislodge the Mexicans from that Part of the City which stood in the Water, and continually served as a Retreat for their Canoes. But in his return, he discover'd, at a small Distance from the City, a little Island or Heap of Rocks, a considerable Height above the Water, on the Top of which stood a pretty large Castle, which the Enemy had possess'd themselves of to no other end, than to provoke the Spaniards with ill Language and Threats from a Post where they thought themselves out of danger of the Brigantines. Cortez did not think it convenient to leave unpunish'd this Insolence in view of the City, whose Terraces and Balconies were filled with innumerable People, who came to see the first Action of the Fleet; and finding his Captains were all of the same Opinion, he drew near to the Shore of the Island, and landed with a hundred and fifty Spaniards, who took two or three different Paths that led to the top. They mounted with some Difficulty, by reason that the Enemy were numerous and made a brave Defence; till despairing of being able to make good the Eminence, they retired into the Castle, where they were so crowded, that they had not room to manage their Arms. Many perish'd, tho' the most were spared, the Spaniards being unwilling to stain their Swords in the Blood of those that surrender'd, or to be troubled with the Charge of Prisoners.

HAVING, by this short Enterprize, chastis'd the Mexicans, the Spaniards return'd to their Brigantines; but when they were disposing themselves to make for Iztapalapa, they were obliged to take other Measures: for they saw some Canoes come out of Mexico, which advanc'd upon the Lake, increasing continually in Numbers. The first that advanc'd, rowing gently, were about five hundred, waiting for the rest to come up; and in a short time, those which came out of the City, and others that joined them from neighbouring Places, made so great a Number, that by the room they took up, it was judg'd they were above four thousand; which Multitude, with the Motion of their Feathers thers and Arms, afforded a Sight both beautiful and terrible, and seem'd to cover the Lake.

CORTÉZ drew up his Fleet in the Form of a Half-Moon, that he might extend his Front, and engage at Liberty: He confided in the Valour of his Soldiers, and the Advantage of his Brigantines, every one of which was able to make Head against a great Part of the Enemy's Fleet. With this Assurance, he advanced towards the Mexicans, to let them see he did not decline the Battle, and then ordered his Men to lie upon their Oars and rest, that they being refresh'd, he might break in upon the Enemy with the greater Force; for the Calmness of the Day left the whole Motion to the Labour of the Rowers. The Mexicans did the same, and perhaps for the same Reason; but the Divine Providence, which had so often appeared in favour of the Spaniards, so order'd it, that there came up a Land-Breeze; which taking the Brigantines astern, gave them all the Force that was necessary to fall upon the Mexicans: They began the Attack with the Artillery, at a convenient Distance, and then the Brigantines made up with Sails and Oars, oversetting all that stood in their way. The Fire-Arms and Cross-Bows made their Discharges, without losing a Shot: The Wind too was favourable, driving the Smoke upon the Enemy, blinding them after such a manner, that they were obliged to give back, to avoid it; the Brigantines themselves playing their Parts, staving the smaller Vessels, whose Weakness made it easy to sink them, without any danger from the Shock. The Nobles of Mexico, who were in the first five hundred Canoes, made some Opposition; but the rest was all Disorder and Confusion, the Canoes running foul on and oversetting one another. The Enemy lost most of their Men, and their Fleet was entirely broke and defeated; the Brigantines pursuing the miserable Remains with their Cannon-shot, till they forced them into the Canals of the City of Mexico.

THIS Victory was of great Moment, on account of the Reputation the Brigantines gain'd of being invincible; and because it was a great Discouragement to the Mexicans, to see themselves depriv'd of that Part of their Power, which consisted in the dextrous Management and Swiftmess of their Canoes: not for the Number of them that they then lost, which was inconsiderable, in regard of what they had still in Reserve; but because they were convinc'd that they were

of no use, and incapable of sustaining the violent Shock of the Brigantines. The Spaniards remain'd Masters of the Lake, and Cortez sail'd about the City, firing some Shot into it, rather by way of Triumph, than for any Damage he did the Enemy: Nor was he displeas'd to behold the Multitude of People that cover'd the Towers and tops of the Houses, to see the Event of the Engagement; on the contrary, he was so glad to have them Spectators of their own Loss, that tho' in reality they were too many considered as Enemies, he thought them too few as Witnesses of his Exploit.

C H A P. XXI.

Cortez goes to view the three Bodies of his Troops, as they were posted on the different Causeways of Cuyoacan, Iztapalapa, and Tacuba, and finds that in each Place, they had occasion for the Assistance of the Brigantines; whereupon he leaves four with Gonzalo de Sandoval, four with Pedro de Alvarado, and retires himself to Cuyoacan with the other five.

CORTÉZ chose a Post near Tezenco, where he might pass the Night, and rest his Troops with some Security; but in the Morning, when the Brigantines were preparing to sail for Iztapalapa, he discovered a considerable number of Canoes, that were making the best of their way towards Cuyoacan; whereupon he resolv'd to carry Succour to that Place first, where it was immediately wanted. It was not possible to come up with the Enemy's Fleet, but he arriv'd soon after them, at the time when Christoval de Olid was engaged on the Causeway, and obliged to make a Front against the Enemy that defended it, and to the Canoes on each side, and was on the point of retiring and losing the Ground he had gain'd.

N E C E S S I T Y taught the Mexicans, as much as the Art of War could have done, for the Defence of their Causeways. They had drawn up, towards the City, the Bridges that were over the Passages, by which the Waters of the great Lake discharg'd themselves into the other; and fixing Timbers and Planks behind them, in such a manner that they might mount in Ranks to charge from the top, they left Trenches at proper distances with Water running before them, which obstructed and made the Access difficult. After this manner they had fortified the three Causeways attacked by the Spaniards, who in each were obliged to take almost the same Measures to overcome the Difficulty. The Fire-Arms, and Crossbows, play'd upon those who appeared above the Trench, whilst others handed Fascines to fill the Ditch; after which, they brought up a Piece of Artillery, and in few Discharges clear'd the Passage, filling up the next Ditch with the Ruins of its own Fortification.

O L I D had just made himself Master of the first Ditch, when the Mexican Canoes arrived; but on sight of the Brigantines, all those on that side, fled with the utmost diligence, and none suffer'd but those who could not avoid the reach of the Cannon: but because the Mexicans on the other side, who thought themselves secure, still continued the Engagement, Hernan Cortez order'd the Ditch in the Rear of Olid to be widened, to make a Passage for three or four Brigantines: at the first sight whereof, all the Canoes fled, and the Enemy, who defended the next Bridge, finding themselves exposed to the great Shot, from both the Land and the Water, retired in Disorder to the last Rampart next the City.

T H A T Night the Troops took some Rest, without abandoning the Ground they had gain'd upon the Causeway, and the next Morning continued their March with little or no Opposition, 'till coming to the last Bridge which was at the Entrance into Mexico, they found it fortified with stronger Works, Trenches cut in the Streets, and defended by such a multitude of People, that the Enterprize seem'd harzardous; but the Difficulty did not appear 'till till they were engaged, and it was not proper to retire, without doing some Execution to terrify the Enemy. The Artillery from the Brigantines made a miserable Slaughter of the People who were in Crowds at the openings of the Streets, whilst Christoval de Olid was employed in filling the Ditch, and ruining the Fortifications of the Causeway. Which when he had done, he charged the Mexicans who defended them, making room with his Van-guard for the Confederate Troops under his Command to come up. The Enemy at the same time was supported by Troops from the City, and made an obstinate Resistance on all sides: but they soon lost some Ground; and Hernan Cortez, who could not bear the Slowness with which they retreated, landed with thirty Spaniards, and gave so much Life to the Attack, that the Enemy quickly turned their Backs, and the chief Street of Mexico was gain'd.

ANOTHER Difficulty immediately occur'd; for the Mexicans that fled, had possessed themselves of a Temple near the Entrance into the City, covering the Towers, Stairs, and all the out-side with such numbers of Men, that the whole Building appeared like a Hill of Arms and Feathers. They defied the Spaniards with as much Boldness, as if they had been always Conquerors. Cortez, provok'd at their Pride, when they had just before shewn so much Cowardice, ordered three or four Pieces of Artillery to be landed, the first Discharge whereof made them sensible of their Danger, and the Spaniards were soon obliged to point their Cannon lower against those that fled to the inward part of the City. Thus all that Quarter was forsaken; for those who fought from Windows, and from the tops of the Houses, went off with the rest; so that the Army advanc'd, and the Temple was gain'd without any farther Opposition.

THAT Day the Mexicans sustain'd a very great Loss of Men. The Idols were cast into the Fire, and serv'd to make Illuminations for the Victory. Hernan Cortez was satisfied that he had gained Footing in the City; and finding the Temple capable of a more than ordinary Defence, he not only resolv'd to lodge his Troops there that Night, but had Thoughts of maintaining that Post, to streighten the Enemy, and of removing his Quarters from Cuyoacan thither. He communicated his Design to his Captains, with the Reasons that induc'd him to it; but they

they all unanimously represented to him, That as they were ignorant what Progress Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Pedro de Alvarado had made, at their Attacks, it would be a Rashness to run the Risque of losing the Passage of the Causeway, and at the same time all hopes of receiving the Ammunition and Provision which would be necessary for the Preservation of the Troops. That they were not to trust to their being brought by the Brigantines, because those Vessels could not enter the Water Trenches of that Part, and therefore would be forced to land the Provisions at such a Distance, that they could neither receive, nor transport them to their Garrison, without fighting a Battle every time. That they ought to make their Advances equally at each Attack, in order to divide the Enemy's Forces, and be assisting to each other, until such time as they should all have taken up their Quarters in the City. And lastly, That the Resolutions which had been taken with the Approbation of all the Captains for the carrying on of that Siege, ought not to be altered without very mature Deliberation; nor ought they to expose themselves voluntarily to a Danger, without a better Reason than the Reputation of that Day's Victory; the Consequences of good Success not being always to be depended on, for that, like Flattery, it very often deceiv'd the Understanding at the same time that it pleased the Imagination. Hernan Cortez was convinced that their Advice was good, for it was one of his best Qualities, that he easily forsook his own Opinion, to follow the Dictates of Reason; and accordingly the next Day he retired to Cuyoacan, protected on each side by his Brigantines, so that the Enemy durst not attempt to disturb his March.

THE same day he proceeded to Iztapalapa, where he found Gonzalo de Sandoval reduced to the last Extremity. He had possessed himself of the Buildings on the Land, and lodg'd his Army there, fortifying himself the best he could; but the Enemy who retir'd to that Part that was in the Water, endeavour'd from their Canoes to do him all the Damage they could. Sandoval had made great Havock among those that approached, ruin'd some Houses, and overthrown two or three Succours from Mexico, that came to attack him by Land; and that Day the Enemy having forsaken a large House, which was but little distant from the Land, he resolv'd to seize it, in order to enlarge his Quarter, and drive the Enemy farther off. He made a Passage thro' thro' the Water with Fascines; and got into the House with some of his People ; but he had scarce enter'd, when a great number of Canoes, which had lain in Ambush, advanced with Troops of Swimmers, who flung themselves into the Water; and taking away the Fascines; cut off Sandoval's Retreat ; by which means they besieged him on all Sides, shooting at the Spaniards from the Terraces and Windows of the neighbouring Houses.

HE was in this Distress, when Hernan Cortez arriv'd ; who discovering that vast Number of Canoes in the Water-Streets, which look'd towards Mexico, made his Brigantines advance with all possible Speed, and plaid his Artillery with such good Effect, that, terrified by the Destruction the Balls made, and the Approach of the Brigantines, they all fled at once thro' the most retired Streets in the Town, with a Design to get thro' into the Lake ; and such was their Disorder, that the People who were upon the Terraces, crowding into the Canoes, sunk many of them, and the rest, in their flight, fell in among the Brigantines, as they were endeavouring to avoid that Danger. The Mexicans sustained such a Loss that Day, as diminish'd their Forces considerably ; and the Spaniards afterwards taking a View of that part of the City they had possess'd themselves of, made some Prisoners, and found a sufficient Booty, not to enrich, but to please the Soldiers. Cortez perceiv'd by the Difficulties which Gonzalo de Sandoval had met with at Iztapalapa, that it was impossible to make use of the Causeway, without first ruining that half of the City, which was the Retreat of the Mexican Canoes; but because this would occasion a Delay which might be of dangerous Consequence to the other Attacks, he resolv'd to quit that Post, and dispatch Sandoval to possess himself of Tapeaquilla, where there was another narrower Causeway, less commodious for attacking, but more advantageous for cutting off the Enemy's Provisions, which they began to want, and which were brought to them that way. This Design was immediately put in execution, and Sandoval march'd by Land, escorted by the Brigantines 'till he had got Possession of the new Quarters. The Place was forsaken, and he lodged himself there without Resistance, after which Hernan Cortez sail'd to Tacuba.

A L V E R A D O found this City deserted, and had therefore no need of a Victory to begin his Advances. In his further Progress he met with various Success; he beat down the Works, and fill'd up the Ditches after the same manner that Olid had done; but tho' he did the Enemy considerable Damage, and had once advanced so far as to fire some Houses in Mexico, he had lost eight Spaniards, when Cortez arriv'd. A Loss which occasioned some mixture of Regret with the Applauses of his Valour.

HERNAN CORTEZ found the Measures he had taken did not answer his Designs; for this way of attacking and retreating, consumed his time, and expos'd his Men without any great Advantage, and was rather doing Acts of Hostility, than making a Progress. To proceed by the Causeways was very difficult, by reason of the Trenches and Ditches, which the Mexicans were fortifying every day, and the continual Persecution of their Canoes, which always charged in great Numbers wherever the Brigantines quitted; for which reason he was oblig'd to think of other Measures for the facilitating of his Enterprize.

HE then commanded all Attacks to cease 'till farther Orders, and applied himself to the providing such a Number of Canoes, as might secure him the Dominion of the Lake; to which end he sent such Persons as he could confide in, to bring all the Canoes that remain'd in the Towns of his Allies, with which, and those that came from Tezenco, and Chalco, he made up such a Number as gave fresh Terror to the Enemy. He divid'd them into three Squadrons, manned by Indians, who knew how to manage them, under the Command of Captains of their own Nation; and having distributed this Reinforcement among the Brigantines, he sent four of them to Sandoval, four to Pedro de Alverado, and he himself with the other five join'd the Colonel Christoval de Olid.

FROM that Day the Attacks were carried on with much more ease, and a stop entirely put to the Insults of the Enemy; and Hernan Cortez at the same time order'd the Brigantines, and Canoes, to make their Rounds on the Lake, and coast along the three Causeways, to hinder the supplying of the City, by which means many Vessels were taken that endeavour'd to pass with Provisions and Barrels of Water, and they were inform'd of the great Distress to which the Besieg'd were reduced. Olid sometimes advanced so far, as to demolish some Houses in the Suburbs of the City. Alverado and Sandoval did the same at their their Attacks; with which good Success, the Face of Affairs entirely changed, the Army conceiv'd fresh Hopes, and the meanest Soldiers facilitated the Undertaking, engaging with that chearful Confidence, which looks like Valour, and makes those bold, who are prepossessed with a Notion of Victory, because they have had the good Fortune to be in company with Conquerors.

CHAP. XXII.

The Mexicans make use of various Stratagems for their Defence: they lay an Ambuscade of Canoes for the Brigantines. Hernan Cortez receives a considerable Defeat, and is forc'd to retire to Cuyoacan.

THE Diligence and Industry of the Mexicans in defence of their City, was not only remarkable, but in some of its Circumstances worthy of Admiration. 'Tis true they were naturally Valiant, and bred up in Arms, which was the only way to arrive at the greatest Dignities: But on this occasion, they did not only show Valour, but added military Skill; for they stood in need of new Inventions, against an Invasion, by a People, whose Weapons and Conduct in War, were utterly unknown in their Country, and they gained some Advantages whereby they rais'd the Reputation of their good Sense. We have already related after what manner they fortified their Causeways; and what they did afterwards, was no less remarkable, when they sent by round-about Ways Canoes of Pioneers to clear the Ditches which the Spaniards had been filling up, that they might fall upon 'em with their whole Force, when they should be obliged to retire: A Stratagem which occasion'd the loss of some Soldiers in the first Attacks. By degrees they found out another still mote remarkable markable, for they acted contrary to their Custom, when Occasion requir'd, and made some Sallies by Night, only to alarm their Enemies, and fatigue them by want of Sleep, that they might afterwards attack them with the Advantage of fresh Troops.

BUT nothing show'd their Industry and Ingenuity more than what they contriv'd against the Brigantines, whose superior Force they endeavour'd to destroy by engaging them separate; for which end they built thirty great Vessels of that sort which they call'd Piraguas, but of a larger Size, and strengthen'd with great Planks, to receive the Shot, and engage under better Shelter. They sallied forth in the Night with this Fleet, to post themselves behind the Reeds in the Lake, which grew so high and thick, that they form'd, as it were, several Groves impenetrable to the Sight. Their Design was to draw thither the Brigantines, which used to cruize about, two at a time, to prevent any Relief getting into the City; and in order to entice them to that Wood of Reeds, they had provided three or four Canoes laden with Provisions as a Bait, having likewise fix'd a good Number of large Stakes in the Water, in hopes either to destroy the Brigantines, or to make it easier to board them. These Contrivances sufficiently shew that they knew how to defend themselves, and offend their Enemies, and that they wanted not those Subtilties, which make Men ingenious in each other's Destruction, and are in a manner the Rudiments of the military Art, or rather unrighteous Maxims on which the Rights of War are founded.

THE next day two of the four Brigantines that attended Sandoval, went out to cruize about that Part under the Command of the Captains Pedro de Barba, and Juan Portillo. As soon as the Mexicans spy'd them, they sent out their Canoes another way, that being seen at a distance, they might pretend to fly, and so retire among the Reeds; which was so well executed, that the two Brigantines pursued the Prize, with the utmost force of their Oars, and soon fell in among the hidden Stakes, where they were so embarrass'd, that they could neither go forward nor backward.

AT the same time the Enemies Piraguas came out, and attacked them on all sides with desperate Fury. The Spaniards were near being lost; but employing the utmost Efforts of their Courage, they maintained the Fight, and kept kept the Enemy in play until such time as certain expert Swimmers by main Strength of Arms, and with Hatchets and other Tools, removed those Stakes, among which the Brigantines were fastned; and our Men being thus at liberty to work their Vessels, and play their Artillery, sunk most of the Piraguas, and followed the rest as far as the Cannon-Ball would reach. The Mexicans suffer'd sufficiently for their Stratagem, but the Brigantines were very much damaged, several Spaniards wounded, and all very much fatigued. Captain Juan Portillo was killed valiantly fighting, to whose indefatigable Bravery the Success was chiefly owing; and Captain Pedro de Barba receiv'd several Wounds, of which he died three Days after. Both these Losses Hernan Cortez greatly lamented, and particularly that of Pedro de Barba, for in him he lost a Friend, ever steady in all Turns of Fortune, and a brave Soldier, without Arrogance, and discreet without being timorous.

IT was not long before this Disaster was revenged; for the Mexicans having repaired their Piraguas, and reinforced them with new Vessels of the same kind, conceal'd themselves a second time among the Reeds, fortifying the Avenue with a greater Number of Stakes, indiscreetly imagining that the Spaniards would again fall into the same Snare, without their giving a different Colour to the Deceit. Cortez very luckily got Intelligence of this Motion of the Enemy, and being extremely desirous of revenging the Loss he had sustained as soon as possibly he could, he ordered six Brigantines to file off in the Night, and to lie in ambush among another Parcel of Reeds not far from the Place where the Enemy had hid themselves; and that making use of their own Stratagem, one of them should sally forth early in the Morning, seeming by her different Courses to be in search of the Canoes laden with Provisions, and afterwards draw as near the conceal'd Piraguas, as was necessary to let them see they were discover'd; which done, she was to tack about, and by a hasty Flight, to entice them to the Place of the Counter-Ambuscade. Every thing succeeded as could have been wished: the Enemy sallied out with their Piraguas in pursuit of the Brigantine, making after this Prize, (which they look'd upon as their own) with great Shoutings, and greater Speed, till being come within a convenient Distance, the other Brigantines rush'd out upon them, and before they could possibly stop, or turn about, gave them such a terrible Salute with all their Artillery, that the very first Discharge overfet a great part of them, and put the Mexicans who were on board the rest into such a Consternation, that before they cou'd recover themselves to think of flying, almost all the Piraguas were sunk by the next Volleys, and most of the Men perished: So that not only the Death of Pedro de Barba, and Juan de Portillo was reveng'd; but the Enemy's Fleet entirely ruin'd; and tho' Hernan Cortez was sensible, that he owed to the Mexicans the Cunning or Invention of laying Ambushes in the Water, he had the singular Satisfaction of having so well imitated them, as to give them a Defeat by the Use of their own Stratagem.

THE Spaniards had frequent Intelligence of what passed in the City by the Prisoners they continually took; and Cortez finding that Hunger, Thirst, and want of all Necessaries, began to occasion Murmurings among the People, and a Difference in Opinion among the Soldiers, he applied himself with the greater Diligence to cut off all Relief from the City; and that he might still farther justify his own Proceedings, he sent two or three Noblemen, who were his Prisoners, to Guatimozin, with Overtures of Peace upon very advantageous Conditions, offering to leave him in full Possession of his Empire, and all his Grandeur, provided he would only acknowledge the Sovereign Dominion of the King of Spain, whose Right was already own'd among the Mexicans by the Tradition of their Ancestors, and the Consent of several Ages. This was the Substance of his Proposal, which he repeated several Times; for in reality, it grieved him to destroy so beautiful and so wealthy a City, which he already look'd upon as a rich Jewel in his Sovereign's Diadem.

GUATIMOZIN receiv'd the Proposal made him by the Spanish General with somewhat less Pride and Arrogance than he was wont, and, as several Prisoners afterwards reported, he assembled a Council of his chief Officers and Ministers, together with the Priests, whose Opinions were principally consider'd in all publick Affairs. “ He “ laid before them the miserable Condition to which the “ City was reduced; the Numbers they had lost; the “ Complaints of the People upon their beginning to “ want; the Destruction of their Habitations; and lastly,
“ he

“ he desir'd their Advice, expressing as much Inclination “ to Peace, as was sufficient to give room for their Flattery or “ Respect to second him.” This so far succeeded, that all his Officers and Ministers concluded immediately to receive the Overtures towards an Accommodation made him by Cortez, leaving it 'till afterwards to consider of such particular Conditions of a Peace, as would be most for the Interest of the State.

BUT the Priests positively oppos'd all manner of Treat-ty, either feigning to have received some Answers from their Idols, which gave them fresh Assurances of Success and Victory over their Enemies, or perhaps what they deliver'd were not Lyes of their own Invention, but what they really had receiv'd from them; for the Devil at that time was extremely busy, instilling into the Ears of those deluded People strange and fallacious Notions, tho' he could not inspire their Hearts with true Courage.

THE Opinion of the Priests, being back'd by Zeal for Religion, or, if that was wanting, by the outward show of Piety, so far prevail'd, that all who had Votes concurr'd with them, and Guatimozin, not without much Regret, because he already began to presage his own Ruin, resolv'd to carry on the War; telling his Ministers, “ That he as“ suredly would put to death the first Man who should “ presume again to mention Peace, whatever Distress the “ City should be reduced to, without excepting even the “ Priests themselves, who were most of all oblig'd to sup“ port the Oracles of their Gods.”

CORTEZ being inform'd of this Determination, resolv'd to push on his Hostilities, by the three Causeys at the same time, and to carry Fire and Sword into the very Heart of the City; and sending his Orders to the Commanders of the two Attacks of Tacuba, and Tapeaquilla;
 he at the time appointed march'd himself by the Causey of Cuyoacan, at the Head of the Troops commanded by Christoval de Olid. The Enemy had clear'd the Ditches, and cast up Works as they were wont to do; but the five Brigantines which were upon that Attack, easily overthrew their Fortifications at the same time that the Ditches were filling up, and the Army advanced without any considerable Opposition, 'till coming to the last Bridge which open'd upon the Key of the City, they met with another sort of Difficulty. The Indians had broke down some part of the Causey,

Causey, to enlarge that Ditch, which was sixty Foot long, and turn'd into it the Water of the Canals, that it might be the deeper.

ON the opposite Bank they had rais'd a Fortification made of Timbers strongly united, and cover'd with Planks, in which there were two or three Rows of Loop-holes, with some sort of Traverses, and they had provided a prodigious Multitude of Men to defend that Post; but the first Discharges of the Artillery destroyed all that Fortification, and the Enemy having suffer'd much by the Fall thereof, and finding themselves expos'd to the murdering Balls, retir'd into the City without turning their backs or ceasing their Menaces. Thus they left the Shore free, and Cortez, unwilling to lose a Moment, immediately order'd the Spaniards to possess themselves of it, making use of his Brigantines, and the Canoes of his Confederates to land his Men; and the Horse pass'd the same ways with three Pieces of Artillery, which he thought sufficient for that Day's Service.

BEFORE Cortez advanced against the Enemy, who were still posted behind the Trenches made across the Streets, he order'd the Treasurer Julian de Alderete to stay there and fill up and secure that Ditch; and the Brigantines to draw near by the great Canals, to the place where the Action was, and do what Damage they could to the Enemy. The first Engagement presently began, and Julian de Alderete hearing the Noise of the Battle, and seeing the Advances of the Spaniards, look'd upon the Employment of filling up a Ditch to be very little honourable, when his Companions were fighting, and inconsiderately advanced to join the rest, leaving that Charge to another of his Company, who either did not know how to perform it, or else would not take upon him a piece of Work which was thought dishonourable by him who committed the Care of it to him: so that all the Men under his Conduct follow'd him to the Engagement; and that Ditch, which, at the time of the Attack, had been thought impracticable, remained entirely abandoned.

THE Mexicans resolutely stood the first Charge. It cost the Spaniards no small Trouble, and some Blood, to make themselves Masters of their Trenches, and the Hazard was still greater, when they had pass'd the ruin'd Buildings, and were oblig'd to defend themselves from the Arrows and Darts of the Enemy, which came pouring on them from the Tops of the Houses and Windows; but in the very Heat of the Engagement, there appear'd a sudden Slackness in the Enemy, which seem'd to be the effect of some new Order; for they hastily quitted the Ground which they had defended.

THIS Change, as was then suppos'd, and afterwards appeared, proceeded from Guatimozin's being inform'd, that the great Ditch was abandoned; whereupon he order'd his Commanders to preserve their Troops, and to fall upon the Spaniards in their Retreat. Cortez suspected this Motion of the Enemy, and in regard that he had but barely time enough now to return to his Quarters before Night, he began his Retreat, ordering first some Houses to be set on fire and destroy'd, in order to prevent their receiving any Damage from them on the next Attack.

BUT they had scarce began to march, before their Ears were stunn'd with the terrible and melancholy Sound of the Sacred Trumpet, so call'd by them, because it was not permitted to any but the Priests to sound it, and that only when they denounced War, and animated the People on the part of their Gods. The Sound was vehemently loud and strong, and the Tune compos'd of dismal and unharmonious Notes, which inspir'd those Barbarians with a new kind of Savage Rage, such as made them despise Life thro' a Motive of Religion. Next follow'd the intolerable Din of their hideous Outcries; and when the Army march'd out of the City, there fell upon the Rear, which was brought up by the Spaniards, an incredible Multitude of their most resolute Warriours, pick'd out of the whole Army for this Action, which had been before contriv'd. The Fire-Arms and Cross-bows fac'd about, and made head, and Cortez, with the Cavalry, endeavour'd to put a stop to the Enemy; but being inform'd of the Difficulty of the Ditch, which hindred the Retreat, he would have form'd his Battalions, and could not; because the Confederates, who had receiv'd Orders to retire, being the first that came to the Ditch, precipitated themselves into it in the greatest Confusion imaginable; so that his Orders were either not heard, or not obey'd.

MANY got over to the Causey in the Brigantines and Canoes, but many more flung themselves into the Water, where they found whole Troops of Mexican Swimmers, who either wounded, or drowned them. Cortez was left with some of his own People to maintain the Fight, his Horse was killed under him with Arrows, and Captain Francisco de Guzman alighting to give him his, was taken Prisoner, without any Possibility of being rescued. Cortez at last got to the Brigantines, and return'd to his Quarters, wounded, and little less than defeated, without receiving any Comfort, or thinking himself any ways recompens'd by the great Slaughter of the Mexicans. Above forty Spaniards were taken alive, to serve as Sacrifices to their Idols; one Cannon was lost, above a thousand Tlascalans were kill'd, and there was scarce any one Spaniard that was not hurt. This was in Reality a very terrible Blow, the Consequences of which Cortez was very sensible of, but he would not suffer his Countenance to speak the Grief of his Heart, lest it should discover too much the greatness of the Misfortune: A hard and inevitable Task attending the Commanders of Armies, who are obliged in all Adversities to conceal their inward Concern, and to appear with an outward Air of Tranquillity.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Mexicans celebrate their Victory with the Sacrifice of the Spanish Prisoners. Guatimozin terrifies the Confederates, and occasions many of them to forsake Cortez; but they return in greater numbers, and it is resolv'd to make Lodgments within the City.

ANDOV AL and Alvarado enter'd the City at the same time, and met with the same Opposition, with very little difference in the Success of their Attacks; they gain'd Bridges, fill'd up Ditches, forc'd their way into the Streets, destroy'd Houses, and were set upon in their Retreat with the utmost fury of the Enemy. But they did not meet with the Misfortune of the great Ditch, and therefore their Loss was less; tho' in both Attacks they lost about twenty Spaniards, which makes up the Account of those who say, That Cortez lost above Sixty of his own People in the Action of Cuyoacan.

THE Treasurer Julian de Alderete, considering the Damage which his Breach of Orders had occasioned, was sensible of his Offence, and hasten'd to the General's Presence with much Sorrow, offering his Head to atone for his Crime, who gave him a very severe Reprimand, without any farther Punishment; not thinking it proper at that Juncture to discourage the Soldiers by inflicting upon that Officer the Chastisement which he merited. Cortez was obliged at this time to suspend the offensive War, and contented himself with blocking up the Place more closely, and streightning the Enemy in their Provisions, that he might take care of the Wounded, whose Numbers far exceeded those who were unhurt.

UPON this Occasion they were sensible of the singular Gift of a private Soldier, nam'd Juan Catalan, who without any other Medicine than a little Oil, and certain Words and Benedictions, cur'd their Wounds in so short a time, that it did not look like the Work of Nature. The Vulgar call this kind of Surgery, curing by Ensalmo, without any other Reason for it, than the having heard some Verses out of the Psalms among the Blessings: A Skill or Profession which Morality does not always allow, and which is sometimes permitted after a very strict Examination. However in this Case it would be no Presumption to look upon such a marvellous Effect as the Work of Heaven, the Grace of healing being one of those Gifts God is pleas'd sometimes of his meer Goodness to confer upon Man: Nor is it reasonable to suppose, that there should be any Concurrence of the evil Spirit in the means of curing so many Spaniards, when that Enemy was endeavouring at the same time to destroy them by the Suggestions of his Oracles. Herrera says, that this wonderful Cure was wrought by a Spanish Woman, call'd Isabel Rodriguez, but we rather chuse to follow Bernal Diaz del Castillo, who was then upon the Spot; and notwithstanding it is certainly a great Misfortune to an Historian to meet with these Contradictions in Authors, yet he is not always oblig'd to discuss and canvass them; for the Fact being undeniable, it is of small Importance to know who was the Instrument of doing it.

BUT

BUT let us return to the Mexicans, who celebrated their Victory with great Rejoycings. That Night the Spaniards saw from their Quarters, all the Temples of the City crown'd with innumerable Lights, and Vessels of Perfumes, and in the principal Temple, dedicated to the God of War, they heard the Sound of military Instruments in several Concerts, which were not altogether disagreeable. With these pompous Preparations, they celebrated the Sacrifice of those miserable Spaniards who were taken alive, the Blood of whose leaping Hearts still warm, was sprinkled upon their horrible Idol; while those wretched Victims with their latest Breath were calling upon the God of Truth. This was suppos'd to be the occasion of that extraordinary Solemnity, and the Fires gave so great a Light, that the Motion of the People was perceiv'd; but some Soldiers went so far as to affirm, that they could distinguish the Voices, and knew the particular Men. A dismal Spectacle, which affected the Imagination still more than it did the Eye, and the Consideration was so melancholy and moving, that Cortez himself could not refrain from shedding Tears; nor those who were with him, forbear following his Example.

THE Advantage they had gain'd, joined to the Satisfaction of having appeas'd their God of War, by the Sacrifice of so many Spaniards, so far rais'd the Pride of the Mexicans, that the very same Night, a little before break of Day, they advanced by the three Causeys to beat up the Quarters, with a design to set fire to the Brigantines, and to compleat the Destruction of those People, whom they, with good Reason, concluded to be either wounded, or quite spent with Fatigue: but they knew not how to conceal their Motion; for the infernal Trumpet, which inspir'd them with so much Fury, turning their Despair into religious Worship, gave notice of their Approach, and the Spaniards were so well prepar'd to receive them, that they were repuls'd by the Artillery of the Brigantines, and some Pieces which were mounted at their Lodgment, which playing along the Causeys upon those Throngs of People, sufficiently chastis'd them for their Presumption.

THE next Day Guatimozin employ'd several Artifices (suggested to him by his own Ingenuity) which the most Skillful in military Affairs are wont to value themselves upon. He gave out, that Cortez had been kill'd in his Retreat on the Cause; thereby giving the People hopes that they should shortly be deliver'd from their Oppressors: he sent the Heads of the sacrificed Spaniards to all the neighbouring Towns, that those Tokens of his Victory might bring those who had fallen off from him back to their Obedience; and lastly, he reported, that their supreme Deity, the God of War, being appeas'd by the Heart's Blood of those their Enemies, had inform'd him, in an intelligible Voice, that the War should be at an end in eight Days, and that all should infallibly perish who neglected this Advice. This he invented, concluding that he should quickly make an end of all the Spaniards; and he found means to send several Persons unknown into the Enemies Quarters, who spread these Threatnings of his God among the Indian Nations, which serv'd against him: A notable Contrivance entirely to deject the Spirit of those People, already disheartned by the Death of so many Spaniards, and the dreadful Slaughter of their own Troops, the Multitude of the wounded, and the great Concern of their Commanders.

THE Oracles of that Idol had such an establish'd Reputation among the most distant Nations, that the Indians were easily persuaded of the Infallibility of those Threats; the number of eight Days, so precisely limited for the fatal Period of their Lives, having such an Effect upon their Imagination, that they resolv'd immediately to quit the Army, and during the two or three first Nights, the greatest part of the Confederate Troops abandoned their Quarters; and that senseless Apprehension was so powerful among those Nations, that even the Tlascalans and Tezucans disbanded with the same Disorder, either because they really fear'd the Oracle as well as the rest, or that they were led away by the Example of those who did. None remain'd behind, except the Commanders and Men of Note, who perhaps were as much affraid; but if they were, they still valu'd their Lives less than their Honour.

THIS unlook'd for Accident was a fresh Affliction to Cortez, as almost causing him to despair of the Success of his Enterprize; but the moment that he was acquainted with the Occasion of that sudden Change, he sent their own Commanders after the Fugitives to stop them, temporizing with their Fear, till such time as the eight Days assign'd by the fallacious Oracle, being past, they might be sensible of the Imposture and Falsity of the Prediction, and better dispos'd to return to the Army. This notable Contrivance of Cortez had the desir'd Effect ; for when the eight Days were expir'd, the Indians became capable of Persuasion, and having fully recover'd from their Fright, return'd to their Quarters with fresh Vigour and Resolution.

DON Hernando, Prince of Tezeuco, sent his Brother to bring back those of his Nation ; who return'd with them, and some new Levies that were coming to join the Army.

THE Tlascalan Deserters, who were of the meanest sort of People, did not dare to proceed on their Journey, for fear of exposing themselves to a certain Punishment ; but waited to see the Event of the Prediction, with a design to join such of their Nation, as should have the good fortune to escape after the imaginary Defeat : but at the same time that they were undeceiv'd of their vain Credulity, they had the good luck to have an Opportunity of incorporating themselves with a Reinforcement that was coming from Tlascala, and were the better receiv'd in the Army upon their Return.

THIS Increase of Forces, and the great Noise the Distress of the Capital City made in the neighbouring Countries, prevail'd with several Nations who had till then been either Enemies, or Neuters, to declare in favour of the Spaniards. One of the most considerable was the Nation of the Otomies, a fierce untamed People, who, after the Example of Beasts, preserv'd their Liberty amongst Woods and Mountains, and had hitherto kept themselves free from the Subjection of the Mexican Empire, without any other Fortification than the Misery and Sterility of their Country, which afforded no Temptation to a Conqueror. Thus Cortez once more found himself at the Head of an Army of upwards of two hundred thousand Men, passing in a few Days from a terrible Storm to an agreeable Calm ; attributing, as he always did, this wonderful and sudden Change to the immediate Finger of God, whose ineffable Providence often permits Adversities, to awaken in the Minds of Men the Sense of his Bounties and Benefits.

THE Mexicans were not idle during this Suspension of Arms to which the Spaniards were reduced. They made frequent Sallies, beating up the Spanish Quarters both by Night and Day, and were always repuls'd with great Loss, without either damaging or terrifying their Enemies. By some of the last Prisoners, Cortez, was inform'd of the great Distress the City was in, that the Soldiers were dissatisfy'd, and the People reduced to Extremity for want of Bread and Water. That abundance of People died by drinking the brackish Water of their Pits, and that the inconsiderable quantity of Provisions they got by the means of those Canoes which had escap'd the Brigantines, were equally divided among the Nobles, and became an additional Subject of Impatience and Discontent to the Populace, whose Clamours began to give some Suspicion of their Fidelity: Upon which Intelligence, Cortez assembled his Captains to consult, what was most proper to be done in the present Situation of Affairs.

HE represented to them the small Hopes he had that Want would oblige the Besieged to surrender, because of the implacable Hatred they bore the Spaniards, and of those Answers of their Idols, with which the Devil fomented it. He gave his own Opinion, that it was best to proceed immediately to Action, for the Reason he had alledged; and for fear the Allies should again desert him; a People easily mov'd, and who, as they were serviceable in the Day of Battle, were endanger'd by the Idleness of Quarters, being always desirous to engage, and not capable of conceiving that the Siege they were then carrying on was a real War, or that in those Intervals between the Attacks any Detriment was done to the Enemy.

THEY were unanimously of Opinion, to continue to make Assaults, without quitting the Siege; and Cortez, who was sensible, by the Success of the last Engagement, how much he suffered in his Retreats, always expos'd to the utmost Fury of the Enemy, resolv'd to leave strong Garrisons in his Quarters, and in the Place of Arms, and make a general Attack by the three Causeys at once, in order to take Posts within the City, which were to be maintain'd at all hazards; each Body endeavouring to advance as far as the great Square call'd Tlateluco, where they were to join and act as occasion should require. The Enterprize upon Mexico would have been much forwarder, or perhaps quite over, if they had taken this Resolution at the Beginning: But human Prudence and Fore-sight is so limited and confin'd, that it is no small Token of Judgment, to be instructed by Miscarriages and ill Success: and Men are very often obliged to found their just Maxims of Conduct upon the Correction of Errors.

C H A P. XXIV.

Cortez carries on his three Attacks at once. The whole Army joins in the great Square of Mexico, call'd Tlateluco. Guatimozin retires to the farthest Part of the City. The Mexicans make several Efforts, and use divers Stratagems, to divert the Spaniards.

CORTÉZ having made provision of Water, Victuals, and whatever else was necessary for the Subsistence of his Troops in a City where all things were wanting, the three Captains, at the dawning of the appointed Day, marched out of their respective Quarters; Pedro de Alvarado from Tacuba, Gonzalo de Sandoval from Tapeaquilla, and the General himself, with the Body of Troops, commanded by Christoval de Olid, from Cuyoacan; each of them having his Brigantines and Canoes to support him. They found the three Causeys in a Posture of Defence, the Bridges drawn up, and the Ditches all cleared and guarded with such an enormous multitude of Men in Arms, as if the War had been but that Day begun. All these Difficulties they however surmounted with the same Industry as they had done all the rest; and after some, not very considerable Detention, the three Bodies, much about the same time, arrived in the City: They easily gained the ruined Streets, by reason they were but faintly defended by the Enemy, whose main Dependance was upon those where the Tops of the Houses were all mann'd. All that the Spaniards attempted the first Day, was only to lodge themselves, each Body fortifying their Quarters with the Ruins of the Houses in the best manner they could, but depending chiefly upon the Vigilance of their Centinels.

THIS new Method of Proceeding caus'd great Trouble and Confusion among the Mexicans, and intirely broke all the measures they had taken to charge the Spaniards in their Retreat. The Rumour of it was soon spread throughout Mexico, the Danger greatly magnify'd, and every one's Thoughts were employed about providing some speedy Remedy against the impending Evil; and the Ministers and Nobles instantly repaired to Guatimozin's Palace, and, by their pressing Intreaties, prevailed with him to retire that very Night to a more distant Part of the City. Councils were continually held, and the Opinions were various and different; being either bold and resolute, or timorous and dejected, according as the Understanding followed the Dictates of the Heart. Some voted, that the King, for the Security of his Royal Person, should immediately be conveyed to some Place less expos'd; others were for fortifying that Part of the City where the Court then was; and others proposed, that the first step they took, should be to use their utmost Efforts to dislodge the Enemy from the Posts they had possessed themselves of. Guatimozin inclined to the Advice of those who expressed the greatest Resolution; so that, rejecting all thoughts of abandoning Mexico, he declared, that he was fully determin'd to share his Fate with his People; and that moment gave orders, that preparation should be made to attack the Enemy in their Quarters at Day-break, with the whole Remainder of his Forces. To this purpose, the Chiefs, with all possible Expedition, assembled all their Troops, which were divided into three Bodies, with the design of exerting their last Strength, in this definitive Effort, to the total destruction of the Spaniards. Soon after the Dawning of the Morning, the Enemy presented themselves within sight of the three Lodgments, whither the News of their Motions was already arriv'd, but the Artillery, which play'd upon the Avenues, made such a terrible Slaughter in their Vanguard, that they durst not advance to put their Orders in execution, and were soon convinc'd, that their Attempt was wholly impracticable: So that, without venturing near enough to come to Handy-Blows, they began to give back, endeavouring to make what was a real Flight be look'd upon only as an orderly Retreat; but that Motion, as it was slow in the Front, gave the Spaniards an opportunity to advance, till they could use their Weapons upon the terrify'd Indians: infomuch, that without any other trouble than what they were at in the Pursuit, they entirely routed and dispersed the Enemy, and bettered their Quarters for the ensuing Night.

HOWEVER, the Difficulties which the Spaniards had to encounter afterwards, were still greater; being obliged, as they advanced, to destroy Houses, to level Works, and to fill up the Ditches which were cut cross every Street. All this was nevertheless so happily, and so expeditiously effected, that, in less than four Days, the three Leaders came in sight of the Tlateluco, which was the Center whither, by different Lines, they had all directed their course.

PEDRO DE ALVARADO was the first who arrived at that spacious Square, where he found the Enemy, which still had retreated before him, endeavouring to draw up in Battle-Array, and to make a stand; but he gave them not time to do as they intended, neither was it indeed an easy matter for those Indians, when they were once in disorder, to return to a Charge; so that, at the very first Onset, they abandoned the Ground, and, in great confusion and precipitation, retired to the Streets on the opposite Side. Alvarado, being now at leisure to look about him, observed that there was, at a small distance, a very large Temple, the Towers and Ascent whereof were possessed by the Enemy; and thereupon he immediately detached some Companies to drive them from thence, and to post themselves there, in order to secure his Rear; which Orders, with little or no difficulty, they soon perform'd, by reason that the Indians who were left to defend that Post, were already retiring, after the example of the rest. He then, in order to make his lodgment, drew up his Troops into one Body, making a smoke from the Top of the above-mentioned Temple, either as a Signal for the other Captains, his Friends, to know where he was, or, by that means, to gain their Applause for his successful Diligence.

SOON after came up, by a different Avenue, the Detachment properly belonging to Christoval de Olid, but then under the Command of General Cortez himself; and the confused Throng of Mexicans which fled before him into that Square, fell in upon the Battalion which Alvarado had, though with another design, just before drawn up in Order of Battel; where those Wretches, being attacked

attacked on every side, most of them perished: and the like Fate attended those who were driven in thither by Gonzalo de Sandoval, who likewise, presently after, arrived.

THOSE of the Enemy who had retir'd to the Streets which led to the other parts of the City, perceiving that the whole Force of the Spaniards was united, ran away with the utmost precipitation to defend the Person of their Prince, believing themselves now come to the last Conflict; whereby the Spanish General had an Opportunity to lodge himself to the best advantage without any Opposition or Interruption: which he did, and posted some Companies in the adjacent Streets to secure his Quarters from the Enemies Insults; ordering the Commanders of the Brigantines and Canoes to ply continually about the three Causeys, and to give him Notice of whatever should occur worth Observation.

IT was at the same time absolutely requisite to clear the Place from the dead Bodies; and several Companies of the Confederate Indians were employ'd to cast them into the Canals of those Streets where the Water was deepest; but those Indians had Spanish Overseers and Commanders, to prevent their running away with their wretched Burdens to make a Banquet of human Flesh, which was the detestable Solemnity with which those misguided People were ever wont to conclude the Celebration of their Victories: notwithstanding which Precaution, it was not possible wholly to prevent that Abomination, yet they obstructed its Excess, and disguis'd that Toleration under the Mask of Ignorance.

THIS Night several Parties of miserable Peasants, more than half dead with Famine, came to the Quarters to surrender themselves, giving up their Liberty for Subsistence; and notwithstanding it was generally suspected that they had been dismiss'd as useless Mouths, yet their deplorable Condition rais'd such Commiseration in all the Beholders, that the General order'd them some Refreshment, that they might be enabled to seek their Livelihood abroad in the Country.

THE next Morning all the Streets within the Enemy's District were filled with armed Indians, but they were posted there only to cover those who were working upon the Fortifications, which they were making for their ultimate Retreat;

treat ; and Cortez perceiving that they did not attempt any Hostilities, nor by any of their usual Insults offer to provoke him, suspended the Attack which he at first had determined, being inclined once more to offer them Peace, as supposing that they might be now dispos'd to come to an Accommodation, or at least, that they would be convinced that he did not thirst after their Destruction, since he proffer'd them favourable Conditions at a juncture when his whole Power was united in the very Heart of their City, the greatest part whereof was already in his possession. The Message was carried by three or four of the principal Prisoners, and Cortez was impatiently waiting for an Answer, as not doubing but that the Proposal would be gladly receiv'd, because it was observ'd that those Multitudes of the Populace who were wont to be always ready to advance to defend the Streets, were intirely withdrawn.

THE Quarter to which Guatimozin with his Ministers, Nobles, and Soldiery, was retir'd, was a very spacious Angle of the City, the greatest part whereof was defended by its bordering upon the Lake ; and the rest, which was at no great distance from the great Square of Tlateluco, was at every Avenue fortify'd by a sort of strong Wall, made of huge Planks and Fascines, which reach'd the Buildings on either side of those respective Streets, before each of which was a broad and deep Ditch full of Water, which they had dug across the Streets to give a Current to the Waters of the Canals. The ensuing Morning Cortez, followed by the greatest part of the Spaniards, march'd out to view the Ground, which the Enemy had forsaken, and advanced till he came within sight of those Fortifications, which he found cover'd with an incredible Multitude of Men in Arms, but who yet seem'd to be dispos'd to Peace, for they neither sounded their warlike Instruments, nor made the accustom'd Out-cries. The General drew back, and return'd several times with the Spaniards, without once offering to molest or provoke them ; and it appeared that the Mexicans had Orders to do the like, because they still pointed their Weapons downwards, signifying, by their Silence and Stillness, that the Treaty which occasion'd that sort of Truce was no way disagreeable to them.

IT was very remarkable upon this Occasion, with what Care they endeavour'd to disguise their Distress, and conceal ceal the Necessities under which they labour'd, and what Ostentation they used to make the Spaniards believe, that notwithstanding they had no Aversion to the Overtures of Peace, it was not thro' want of Means or Courage to prosecute the War, that they were willing to accept it. They sat in publick upon the Works to eat, and flung Cakes of Maiz among the common People, to shew that they had Plenty of Provisions; and from time to time several of their Chiefs sally'd out, and challeng'd the stoutest Champion of the Spaniards to a single Combat: But those Challengers did not long continue there, soon retiring in again, as well pleased with the Bravado, as they could have been with the Victory, had they obtained it. One of them indeed advanced near the Place where Cortez stood, and, by the Ornaments of his Nakedness, seem'd to be a Person of some Distinction; his Arms were a Sword and Buckler of one of the Spaniards, whom they had sacrificed. This Indian, with the greatest Arrogance, persisted in his Defiance, insomuch that Cortez, quite out of Patience with his Noise and presumptuous Behaviour, order'd his Interpreter to tell him, "That if he would bring ten others like himself, he would give leave to that Spaniard (pointing to his Page who bore his Shield) to engage them all at once." The Mexican was not insensible of the Contempt, but, without seeming to take any notice of it, continued his Defiance with still greater Insolence; and the Page, whose Name was Juan Nunez de Mercado, a Youth about sixteen, or at most seventeen Years of Age, supposing that this Affair regarded him, since his Master had directly pointed him out, without being observed got out of the Croud, and, making the best shift he could to get over the Ditch, attack'd the Challenger, who stood ready prepar'd; but the Page, receiving the first Blow upon his Shield, at the same Instant gave his Adversary so bold and vigorous a Thrust, that, without needing a second Wound, he brought him down dead upon the Spot. This Action was greatly applauded by the Spaniards, and admired by the Enemy. The Page, immediately after his Exploit, returned, and threw down the Sword and Buckler of the vanquished Mexican at the General's Feet, who was so highly pleas'd with such early Valour, that he embraced him with great Tenderness, and, with his own Hand, girt on upon him that Sword which with such Bravery he had won, and enhanced the Reputation which he had acquired by his Merit, by admitting him, tho' so young, into the Conversation of the gravest and most distinguish'd Persons in the Army.

DURING the three or four Days Suspension of Arms, Guatimozin held several Councils to deliberate on the Overtures of Peace which had been made him, and the Majority voted for the admitting the Treaty, being sensible of the miserable Condition to which they were already reduced; while others, conforming their Suffrages to the Inclination of their Sovereign, shewed themselves willing to continue the War; but the detestable idolatrous Priests, whose Opinions were looked upon by those deluded People as the immediate and absolute Commands of their false Deities, supported the lesser Number, assuring Victory with dark and mysterious Menaces, and, like Oracles, inspiring the whole Assembly with the same diabolical Fury which possessed their own Breasts. Upon this it was unanimously resolved to prosecute the War, and immediately to renew their Hostilities, while Guatimozin disguised his Obstinacy under the specious Pretext of Obedience to his Gods; but before he broke up the Council, he gave Orders that all the Piraguas and Canoes should retire to a certain sort of Bay, which the Lake made in that part of the City, in order to secure a Retreat in case they should be driven to Extremity.

THIS Order was instantly put in execution, and an incredible Number of those Vessels made to that Bay, with no more People in them than were just necessary to conduct them thither; of which Motion immediate Notice was sent from the Spaniards, who were upon the Lake, to Cortez, who, without hesitation, presently concluded, That the Mexicans were using those Precautions with no other View than to secure their Prince's Person, leaving the War still on foot, and the Possession of the City to be disputed. Hereupon he appointed Gonzalo de Sandoval for Commander in Chief of all the Brigantines, with Orders to surround the Bay at a distance, and to have a watchful Eye upon whatever Motion the Enemy should happen to make. Soon after he advanced with his Troops, with a Design of approaching their Fortifications, and to forward the Peace by the Appearance of War: But the Enemy had already received Orders to defend themselves, and before the advanced Guard of the Spaniards came up, the the Indians declared the Breach of the Treaty by their hostile Cries, and with a steady and resolute Countenance prepared for the Encounter; but it presently appear'd that their Haughtiness and Courage began to fail them: for they no sooner perceived the terrible Havock which the first Discharges of the Cannon made in their wooden Fortification, which they had foolishly imagin'd to be impenetrable, but they became sensible of their Danger, and, according to Appearances, they sent notice thereof to Guatimozin; for it was not long before they made Signs of demanding a Parley, by hanging out white Cloths, and very frequently repeating the word Peace.

THEY were given to understand by the Interpreters, that whoever had any Proposals to offer from their Prince, might approach; upon which Assurance three or four Mexicans, who by their Apparel seem'd to be Persons of some Note, appear'd on the further Side of the Ditch. These Deputies, having first made their accustom'd Humiliations, with an affected Gravity, told Cortez, "That the " Supreme Majesty of Guatimozin, their Lord and Sovereign, had named them his Servants to treat of an amicable Accommodation, and had sent them to hear what " Proposals the Captain of the Spaniards had to make, in order to inform his Mexican Majesty of the Articles of the Capitulation." Cortez reply'd, "That his real and
 " only View was Peace, and that notwithstanding he had it in his power to give Laws to those who so long had
 " refus'd to hearken to Reason, yet he once more offer'd them Peace, and was ready to renew the Treaty which they had broken: But that Affairs of this nature were " difficult to be adjusted by third Persons, wherefore it was requisite that their Prince should either appear in Person,
 " or at least that he should approach with his Counsellors and Ministers nearer at hand, in order to be the more
 " conveniently consulted, in case any Dispute or Difficulty should arise; assuring them, that he was fully disposed " to agree to every thing that was not repugnant or injurious to the superiour Authority of his own Sovereign;
 " with which View he promis'd upon his Word of Honour, (which he also confirmed by an Oath) That he would not " only, on his Part, cause all Hostilities to cease, but would likewise take particular Care that his Royal Person
 " should be in the greatest Security, and that he should be " treated

“ treated with all the Deference and Respect due to the “ Mexican Emperor.”

THE Deputies upon this immediately retir'd, seeming very well satisfied with this Answer, and the same Evening return'd to the same Place, with a Message to Cortez; telling him, “ That his Mexican Majesty would not fail of coming thither the next day, with his Ministers and Attendants, to be near at hand to take Cognizance of the Articles of the Treaty.” His real Intent was, with various Pretexts, to continue and prolong the Conferences, 'till all the Piraguas and Canoes could be got together in a Readiness, in order to secure his Retreat, which had been already positively resolv'd on: and accordingly the same Messengers return'd again at the Hour appointed, pretending, “ That a certain unforeseen Accident had prevented their Prince from keeping his Word, and that he could not possibly come 'till the Morrow.” After this, Guatimozin again put off his Assignation, on pretence, of first adjusting some Points and Conditions relating to the Ceremonies and Formalities of that Interview; and in a word, four Days pass'd in these Excuses and Delays: nor was the Artifice discover'd 'till somewhat later than it should have been; for Cortez firmly believ'd that they really desir'd Peace, founding that Belief upon the Exigence of their present Condition, and had actually made some Preparations for the Reception of Guatimozin, with State and Magnificence. But when Information was brought him of what pass'd in the Lake, he was inwardly asham'd of his having suffer'd himself to be so impos'd upon, and for having retain'd so good an Opinion of the Sincerity of those Barbarians, after so many Delays, and could not forbear breaking out into Threats against them; shewing that Anger and Resentment, to conceal his Confusion, and seeming sensible of the Difference there is between being openly insulted, and deceitfully surpriz'd.

C H A P. XXV.

The Mexicans attempt to make their Retreat by the Lake. They engage the Brigantines with their Canoes, in order to facilitate Guatimozin's Escape. He is made Prisoner, and the City surrenders.

THE Day being come, which Cortez had appointed the Mexican Deputies, as the utmost Period of Time he would allow them to resolve in, Gonzalo de Sandoval discover'd, at the Dawn of the Morning, great Multitudes of Mexicans with all imaginable diligence imbarking on board the Canoes, which were in the Bay. Of this Motion he sent immediate Notice to Cortez, and getting together the Brigantines which were distributed in divers Creeks, he slowly made towards them till he was near enough to play his Artillery. At the same time the Canoes of the Enemy, on board of which were all the Nobility, and almost all the principal Persons of the City, began to move, they having unanimously resolv'd to make their last Efforts against the Brigantines, and at all Hazards to maintain the Fight, till their Prince had made his Retreat; after which, they were to disperse and follow him by several Ways. Accordingly they put this Design in execution, attacking the Brigantines with such Vigour, that without being any wise dismay'd at the Havock the Cannon made among them at a distance, they undauntedly advanced to receive the Strokes of Swords and Lances. But at the same time that the Mexicans were engaging with such extraordinary Fury, Gonzalo de Sandoval observed that from the farthest part of the Bay, six or seven Piraguas, with the utmost force of Oars, were making the best of their their way; upon which he immediately order'd Captain Garcia de Holguin to chace them with his Brigantine, and, with as little Damage as possible, to endeavour to take them.

HE pitched upon Holguin for this Action, as well for the Confidence he had in his Courage and Diligence, as for the great Swiftnes of his Vessel, which Difference of that Brigantine from the rest, might perhaps depend upon the Strength and Dexterity of his Rowers; or probably was rather owing to the Goodness of her Make, by which she was more obedient to the Oars; a Circumstance of no small Advantage and Importance in those Vessels. That Captain, without losing a moment's time, more than was just necessary for tacking about, and for the Rowers to take Breath, used such extraordinary Diligence, that he soon overtook them; when turning the Head of his Brigantine, he fell in upon the foremost Piragua, which seem'd to command the rest. They all at once ceas'd from rowing, and lay upon their Oars when they found themselves attacked, and some of those who were in the first Piragua call'd out amain to the Brigantine not to fire; saying, the Royal Person of his Mexican Majesty was on board that Vessel, which Words were interpreted by some Spanish Soldiers, who began to have a small smattering of the Mexican Language: and the better to make themselves understood, they flung down their Arms, accompanying their Request with all the Demonstrations of People who surrendred. Upon this, the Brigantines boarded the Piragua, into which Garcia de Holguin, with some of the Spaniards, immediately leap'd, in order to secure the Prize. Guatimozin instantly advanc'd, and, distinguishing the Captain by the Respect paid him by the rest, said, I am your Prisoner, and ready to go whithersoever you think fit to conduct me: All I have to desire of you, is, that some regard may be had to the Honour of the Empress my Consort, and to that of the Women who accompany her. He then pass'd into the Brigantine, and gave his Hand to that Princess to help her up; and was so much master of himself, and so far from being in any Consternation, that perceiving Holguin to be in some Concern about the other Piraguas, he with great Sedateness of Countenance, added, You have no occasion, Sir, to give your self any Trouble concerning those my Followers, for they will all come to die at the Feet of their Prince: and upon the first Signal he made them, they let their Weapons drop out of their Hands, and followed the

the Brigantine as Prisoners, in obedience to their Sovereign's Command.

GONZALO DE SANDOVAL was all that time hotly engaged with the Canoes, and, by the Resistance he met with, he became sensible of the Quality of those who defended them, and of the great Courage and Fidelity of the Mexican Nobility; who, at the hazard of their own Lives, had undertaken to secure their Prince's Liberty. But the Conflict was of no long continuance, because they soon had notice of his being taken; which they no sooner understood, but their loud military Cries were converted into dolorous, yet less noisy Lamentations. They did not only surrender with little or no resistance, but several of the Nobility requested that they might be taken on board the Brigantines, to follow the Fortune of their Prince.

GARCIA DE HOLGUIN came up at the same time, having first dispatch'd away a Canoe with the News to Cortez; and without bearing down too near upon Sandoval's Brigantine, he gave him, as he passed by, a brief Account of what had happen'd: but perceiving that he was desirous of taking charge of that important Prisoner, he made the best of his way, lest Sandoval should send him an Order to that purpose, and his refusing to obey, should be look'd upon as a Crime.

THE Spaniards in the City were, in the mean while, carrying on their Attack against the Wooden Fortification, and the Mexicans who had undertaken to defend it, in order to make a Diversion on that side, maintain'd their ground with notable Courage and Resolution, till being inform'd by their Sentinels of the Misfortune of the Piraguas which attended Guatimozin, they, more like Men astonished than terrify'd, retired in confusion and disorder.

THE Occasion of that sudden Change was soon known: for at that very instant arrived the Canoe sent by Holguin; and Cortez, lifting up his Eyes towards Heaven, as acknowledging the Supreme Author of all his Fortune and Success, ordered his Captains to keep their ground within view of the Fortifications, without attempting any thing till farther Instructions; sending at the same time two Companies of Spaniards to the Landing-Place to guard the Royal Prisoner, and then went himself to receive him not far from the Quarters, which he did with very great Courtesy and Respect, Signs and Gestures serving instead of

of Words : to which, Guatimozin made a return in the same Language, endeavouring to conceal the Agitations of his Breast, by a forced Complaisance.

BEING come to the Entrance into the General's Quarters, they all made a stop, and Guatimozin, with the Empress, went in first, affecting to shew that he had no reluctance to his Confinement. They both immediately took their seats ; but that Prince, seeming to recollect himself, presently rose up again, and desired Cortez, to sit down. He was, in these Beginnings of his Adversity, so much Master of himself, that, knowing the Interpreters by the Place where they were posted, he began the Conversation, saying to the General, Why do you delay, valiant and renowned Captain, with that Sword you wear by your Side, to take away my Life? Prisoners of my Rank are but a Burden to the Conqueror. Dispatch me then at once, and let me have at least the satisfaction of dying by your Hand, since I could not obtain the Happiness of losing my Life in my Country's Defence.

HE would gladly have proceeded ; but here all his Constancy fail'd him, and only his Tears uttered the rest, putting a stop to his Words, and forcing their way thro' his unwilling Eyes. His Royal Consort bore him company with less reserve, and Cortez found himself obliged to do violence to his Pity and Compassion, to avoid following their Example : but after allowing those Illustrious Prisoners some time to vent their Sorrow, he answered Guatimozin, " That he was not his Prisoner, nor was his Greatness fallen into so inglorious a Condition as that ; but that he was Prisoner to a Monarch so great and powerful, that the whole Universe had no one Potentate who was his Superior in any respect, and so good and bountiful withal, that, from his Royal Clemency, he might not only hope to regain his lost Liberty, but even the Empire of his Ancestors, with the glorious Addition of his Friendship : And that, in the mean while, till he could receive his Sovereign's Instructions, he should be respected by the Spaniards, and treated among them in such a manner, that he should not miss his own Mexican Subjects." Cortez would have proceeded to comfort him with some Examples of other unfortunate Princes, but Guatimozin was then too heavily oppressed with Grief to admit of any Con-

Consolation, for which reason the General fearing that he should rather mortify, than appease him, desisted for the present; consolatory Words and Persuasions being of little Force or Efficacy to make any Impressions upon the Minds of dethroned Potentates; neither is it an easy matter to find Resignation in those Hearts which are ignorant of the True God.

GUATIMOZIN was a Prince about twenty three, or twenty four Years of Age, so brave, that, at those Years, he had by his Exploits, and Victories in the Field, risen to those Honours which qualified the Nobles to ascend the Throne. He was, as to his Person, extremely well proportion'd, tall, yet robust and strong built, and of so fair a Complexion, that among those of his own Nation, he look'd like one of a different Climate. His Face, which suited well with the rest, discover'd a haughty Mind, and was so habituated to command Respect, that even amidst the inward Agitations of his Soul, he lost nothing of the Majesty of his Air. The Empress, who was about the same Age, by the Gracefulness of her Carriage, and the Vivacity of her Mien, attracted the Eyes of all; but her Beauty was rather manly and majestick, than delicate, looking well at the first Sight; which Agreeableness soon diminish'd, tho' the Majesty of her Presence still continu'd. She was Niece to the Great Motezuma, or, as some say, his Daughter; which when Cortez understood, he renew'd the Offers of his best Service, professing himself oblig'd to pay to the Person of that Prince, the Veneration he ow'd to the Memory of that Monarch.

IN the mean while he thought it necessary to return to his Troops, in order to reduce that part of the City, which was still in the Enemy's possession; so that breaking off the Conversation for the present, he very courteously took leave of his Royal Prisoners, giving them in charge to Gonzalo de Sandoval, with a sufficient Guard; but before his Departure, word was brought him, that Guatimozin desir'd to speak with him: his Design, as it presently appear'd, being to intercede for the Mexicans, his late Vassals. When the General came, that Prince, in the most pressing Terms, conjur'd him, not to injure or misuse them; since they only wanted the knowledge of his being a Prisoner, to induce duce them to surrender. He had so much Presence of Mind, that he readily guess'd at the Occasion of the General's Departure, and in the midst of his Afflictions had the Welfare and Preservation of his Subjects at heart: a Care truly worthy of a princely Mind! And notwithstanding Cortez gave him Assurances that he would treat them with Lenity, yet he earnestly desir'd Permission for one of his own Ministers to go along with him, to dispose the Mexican Troops, and the rest of his Subjects to submit, and to tell them from him, "That they should obey the General of the Spaniards, since it was not reasonable or prudent in them to incense a Person who had their Prince in his power, or refuse to conform themselves to the Decrees of their Deities."

III. CORTEZ found the Army in the same Posture in which he had left it, nor had the least Alteration happen'd during his Absence; for the Enemy, who had retir'd upon the first Consternation they had been put into, by the news of their Emperor's being taken, had neither Courage enough left to defend themselves, nor Judgment to capitulate. Guatimozin's Minister enter'd their Quarters, and immediately upon his acquainting them with the Orders he brought, they threw down their Arms, and submitted.

IV. BY the Mediation of that Minister, it was agreed, that they should march out without Arms or Baggage, which they immediately put in execution after so precipitate a Manner, that in a few Moments the Place was evacuated. It rais'd Admiration in the Beholders, to see the Multitudes of military Men that still remain'd, after so many Defeats and such considerable Losses. Great Care was taken to prevent their being any way molested or ill-used in their Retreat; and such Deference and Regard was paid to the General's Orders, that there was not so much as an opprobrious or injurious Word heard among the Confederate Indians, who so mortally hated the Mexicans.

V. THE Troops then march'd into that remaining part of the City, where they found nothing but miserable Objects, horrible to the Sight, and dreadful even to the Thought; some sick and disabled Wretches, who could not follow the rest, and others grievously wounded, all calling upon Death to relieve them from their Misery, and exclaiming against the unseasonable Clemency of the Conquerors; but nothing thing made so great an Impression upon the Spaniards, and fill'd their Souls with Horror so much, as the sight of certain Courts and deserted Houses, where the Indians had heap'd up the Bodies of all the Men of Note who had been slain in Battle, in order at leisure to celebrate their Funeral Obsequies; from whence proceeded such an intolerable Stench, that they were even afraid to breathe; and, in effect, the Air was little less than infected therewith, which obliged them to hasten their Retreat. Cortez, having assign'd Quarters to Gonzalo de Sandoval, and Pedro de Alvarado, at some distance from that contagious Place, and given what other Orders he thought requisite, retired with his Prisoners to Cuyoacan (taking with him the Body of Troops commanded by Christoval de Olid) till the City could be cleans'd and freed from those Horrors; whither in a few days after he return'd, to consider of the properest Means to establish and maintain his Conquest, and to take necessary Precautions and Measures with regard to the Consequences which might attend this prosperous Expedition.

THE Imprisonment of Guatimozin, and the entire Reduction of Mexico, happened on the Thirteenth of August, in the Year 1521, being the Day of St. Hypolito; in Memory whereof, the City, to this day, celebrates the Festival of that great Martyr, under the Title of Patron of Mexico. The Siege continued ninety-three Days; and in the various Events of prosperous and adverse Fortune, the Judgment, Intrepidity, and Constancy of Cortez, is equally to be admir'd with the indefatigable Perseverance and Valour of the Spaniards, and the Unanimity and Obedience of the Confederate Nations; allowing to the Mexicans the Honour of having defended their Prince and Country with the utmost Efforts of Bravery and Patience.

AFTER the taking of Guatimozin, and the Conquest of the Capital City of that vast Empire, the Tributary Princes first came in to acknowledge, and to do Homage to the Conqueror; and their Example was soon follow'd by the Caziques of the circumjacent Districts, some being induced to it by the great Reputation of the Spaniards, and others compell'd by force of Arms; and in a short time was erected that noble Monarchy, which merits the Name of New Spain, the Great Emperor Charles

the Fifth owing to Hernan Cortez no less than a new Crown, well worthy of his Imperial Temples. A Wonderful Conquest, and a most Illustrious Conqueror, among those which many Ages rarely produce, and of which there are but few Examples in History!
